The food is served on plastic plates with plastic utensils, but there is a reason. Mr. and Mrs. Parker, the owners, explained that they tried in this way to keep their food costs down in order to provide dinners at low prices. The service was good and the waitress friendly. Overall our impression of The Drake Restaurant was favorable as a convenient and inexpensive place to eat. Students make up the majority of the clientele which contributes to the comfortable feeling of the place. A short walk from the U.Mass. campus, The Drake is worth trying for an inexpensive lunch or dinner.

P & B — Editing As Butchery

by David Miller and Andrew MacKenzie

Proc.: So out we went on the road, and then when we came back; slowly but surely the Firesign realized we weren't a threat to them, but actually were the legmen who were setting up the important relationship with the outside world. And when we say 'the Firesign', we as the Firesign, as fifty per cent, began to realize also, and when we'd get back together we'd say "How are you?", and we discovered that we were fine ... And we did the record and had more fun and did it in a shorter time than ever ... And out of the stimulation and excitement of doing this, plus the continued success of Proctor and Bergman as an evolving theater and stand-up comedy team, or comedy concert team, is leading the Firesign into more theatrical presentation. Our primary intent as a group now seems to be to really do a knock-out tour with this Anytown, U.S.A. theater-piece. Really make it a special evening for ourselves and for the people who come to see us, and it's going to be that, too, because it's a compilation, a guided-tour through Firesign World. It starts with the 'Anytown, U.S.A.' scene with Porgy and Mudhead goes, through these characters, into the adventure on the Spoilsport Speedway via the Church of the Presumptuous Consumption, and of course a visit to Principal Poop's Pep Rally. And then into a Nice Motel and a meeting with Joe and Eddie, our favorite Americans, and trip into the American Pageant and finally joining the Army and seeing the world on television with the end of the first section of the show. Then there's an intermission and then we go into the world of the Future, at which point we realize why the first part of the show has taken some strange turns: Because Clem, Uh .. Clem, who is now an unemployed computer programmer, working there at the park, at Firesign World, has been re-programming some of the rides. Particularly The Ralph Spoilsport ride; He actually programmed Ralph Spoilsport to smoke and sell marijuana instead of cars. And then the adventures that occur in the second part of the show, the meeting with the President, 'the breaking of the President', the escape into 'Nick Danger's Haunted House'...

Berg.: In this piece Nick and Catherwood are automatants, moving actors from a famous piece you go and watch, like 'Famous moments with Mr. Lincoln' at Disneyland. Kind of a loose diorama. It goes from there into 'Buy or Die'. What happens is that Clem, who's in trouble because he broke the President, runs out on the funway, and he's a little scared, and Mudhead is with him, and he says, "Let's go to 'Nick Danger's Haunted House'. We can smoke dope, sit and watch it — I've seen it a lot, it's sp-p-p-pooky." So we go inside, and I'm smoking, he's smoking, and he knows all about it, but I get so caught up in it, you know, just like Beaners do, and I say "Hey, Nick, watch out!", and I jump over the yellow line to help the automaton. Clem goes, "No!", and he goes to save me, and says "Watch out! These guys are only ..." and he gets hit by Catherwood. And he goes down, and when he comes up he finds himself with a wig on, and dark glasses and a shawl, and he's Mrs. Preskey. He's at 'Hawaiian Sell-out', and he's also at 'Beat the Reaper' at the same time.

Proc.: In essence, the people who are subjecting him to these things turn out to be just a pack of computer cards. Anyway, the confrontation with Doctor ... uh ... uh ... Memory which occurs in the theater-piece, I think will explain to anyone who might have been confused by Bozos, more clearly and precisely what we are talking about.

Let me explain something: Many of the pieces that the Firesign Theater did were done out of stage experience. Bozos was not written out of stage experience. It's very important to understand that, because there's nothing that creates clarity or dramatic understanding better than playing before a live audience, because they're going to tell you instantly whether or not they follow what you're doing, whether they're with you ... Now with records we have another freedom. You don't necessarily have to be beholden to that kind of clarity. You can create something that's more complex, and the understandings come out in different ways, which is fine. But for the theatrical presentation, the clarity that is evolving from our point of view, as we construct the piece, and as we stage it, is such that I think it will add new insights to the records when the people listen to them. And that's very exciting to all of us, because it means that someone who may not be acquainted with the Firesign Theater will be able to listen to our records from a point of view of understanding rather than coming around to us the other way, coming through the records, which take time and energy and a certain amount of dedication, into our live presentations.

Bothered by Thought

No Parking This Side

there is no sun where my mind wanders today tripping over logs of dead memories i watch the monster chewing up words and poems and spitting them
no good to anyone like editors titling lives after a death a tree of flame catches the corner of my eye dragging my mind outside to fall and cold winds pushing me inward to warmth the tree is not warm only its colors are brightening the grey, concrete boredom buildings people sit discussing horror and death blank faces and yawns prison of the soul let me out to run in grass and flowers colored leaves chasing each other in the wind let me feel the sun

The queen of silences:
strung up in life by the bindings of complacency.
All has left her for a holiday from a confining mind.
Gliding in her soundlessness, gloating on the raucous laughter of young girls who will have their time to sit by the window, combing their hair against the world-as-mirror.
(Do the dead groom themselves — admiring their hair in its always unliving glory?)

Her occasional rasping thoughts do not quite match the expression of a face stretched so taut against life.
She faintly remembers Genevieve and the others,
but not in any way which counts as comfort.
Religion is now a sin for such a mind — always occupied in combing her hair against that distorting world-as-mirror.

"WHY DO YOU FLY FROM ME?"

A poem with the total weight of time to Debby a testament of hope

Why do you fly from me?
if in our nights
we feel avid of ourselves
if in our eternal thirst we persist in searching our absent eyes.
Why do you fly from me?
if in your profound desires my kisses are falling like hot coals thrown down over in the rain.
Why are you still flickering?
because if you close your heart, and I cover my eyes, and even in spite of the ghost of the doubts within the shadows set up against our vegetal hunger, though that strange testimony of the sterile defense of ashes, wants to divide us up into the inviting rooms of the deep buildings, we will feel our riding anxiety range suddenly under the loneliness of our skin.

Why do you love your own flight?
if seduced by the joy that I brought from far away to build the life, we will continue searching each other among the devouring flames of our own blood, ... among the divisory limit of our arid planet. ....

"PORQUE HUYE DE MI"

Porque huye de mi?
si en nuestras noches nos sentimos avidos de nosotros, si en nuestra sed infinita persistiremos en buscar nuestros ojos ausentes.
Porque huye de mi?
si en tu profundo anhelo mis besos caen como brasas derramadas en la Illuvia.
Porque vacila aun?
si aunque cierre tu corazon
y yo cubra mis ojos, aunque hayan fantasmas ausentes y dudas entre las sombras establecidas contra nuestra hambre vegetal, aunque ese extrano testimonio de la esteril defensa de la ceniza persista en dividirnos en los incitantes cuartos de los anchos edificios, nosotros sentiremos nuestra fornicante ansiedad hundida lentamente bajo la soledad de nuestra piel.
Porque ama tu propia huida?
si seducidos por el misterio que traje desde lejos para construir la vida, continuaremos buscandonos
entre las llamas devoradoras du nuestra sangre,
entre los limites divisorios
de nuestro arido planeta. ......

Jaws: Best-Seller Fiasco

Reviewed by Ed Smith

Jaws
by Peter Benchley
$6.95 311pp. Doubleday

I have always had a deep suspicion of best-seller's lists. It has been my experience that the books which appear on them are either so fine that even the semi-literate populace of the United States buys them en masse or, and this I think is more frequent, the books appeal to the lowest common denomination; Jaws, which has had the number three post on Time magazine's list for the past three weeks, tends toward the latter. Not that Jaws is bad. I would just like to point out that the literary value of a book is not necessarily determined by the number of copies it sells.

This novel is the story of a Long Island resort town which is set upon by a white killer shark. The shark appears as the town is reaching its summer peak and predictably upsets the delicate economic balance of the town. There is a conflict between the main character, Chief of Police Martin Brody, and the town council, headed by the mayor. Brody wants to close the beaches after a girl is killed by the shark, but the mayor stops him. More people are killed by the shark and the conflict continues. The major thrust of the novel is how the shark upsets the entire community.

Peter Benchley

Benchley's writing shows an excellent eye for description. One gets a feeling for most of the characters through his observations of peculiar habits and manners of dress. (It is fortunate for the reader that Benchley does describe them in this way because otherwise the characters would be difficult to seperate.) The dialogue shows almost no differentiation between characters and consequently the characters never really come alive. Add to this a flat narrative tone and the book approaches utter sterility.

The one character who does have some dimensions is the shark. His life force seems to flow out of the page in a way that is truly believable. Benchly has been able to establish more verisimilitude with the shark than with any of his other characters.

There are actually two major conflicts operating in the novel. One is the moral and economic dilemma mentioned above. The other is one more intimately connected with Brody. After the shark has killed a few people, a shark expert from Woods Hole, Matt Hooper, comes to help the town. As it turns out, he knew Ellen Brody, the chief's wife, when they were both "summer people" living in the same area. Ellen, who has been having a bout of nostalgia, has a short lived affair with Hooper. The affair is a cliche, but if it had been a direct result of the shark it would have worked well in the novel. However, Benchley never convinces the reader of this direct link and this vital element of the story falls flat. The affair is much more a product of coincidence than it is of the peculiar situation the shark has created. As a result of this, Brody's obsession with the shark is also somewhat strained.

Though many reviewers avoid this, I am going to tell you what happens in the end because it is crucial to explaining the failing of this book. After the shark has killed several people, Brody hires a boat and a captain, Quint, to hunt down the shark. In the course of the hunt the shark kills Hooper and Quint goes after it with blood in his eye. He finally manages to harpoon the shark who has attacked the boat with Quint and Brody aboard. As Quint is throwing his fifth harpoon into the shark, his foot catches in the harpoon rope and he is pulled overboard. The boat sinks and the final scene is Brody swimming toward shore on, not a coffin, but a flotation cushion. To say the least, the finale of the book has shades of Moby Dick. If Benchley had achieved what he was trying for, this probably would have worked. However, the central idea that the shark has taken hold of all the relationships in the town is never really established. Consequently, no matter how much embellishment is done on the theme, the point of the book never comes off due to the failure of the author to firmly establish the major conflict. My final comment, with apologies to William Butler Yeats, is: "Things fall apart; the center cannot hold;"

A Life In Photography

A Life in Photography
Edward Steichen
249 photographs
Doubleday and Company
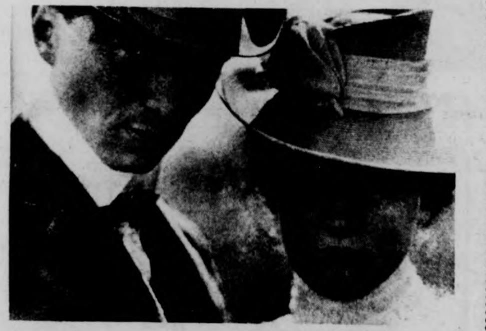
reviewed by Kevin Mack

When Edward Steichen was on his way to Paris, in 1900 at the age of twenty-one, he met Alfred Steiglitz in New York. Steiglitz, who was the best known photographer in America at the time, was very impressed with the young Steichen's photographs, but assumed that he would abandon photography for art once he arrived in Paris. Photography was not considered a "serious" art at the time. Edward Steichen felt otherwise "I will always stick to photography," he told Steiglitz.



Edward Steichen: Self-Portrait with Sister (1900).

And Steichen stuck to photography for well over half of this century, establishing himself as the foremost name in the field and as a serious artist who was respected by artists in other medias. A Life in Photography is a collection of 249 photographs from Steichen's long and diverse career. Accompanying the photographs are explanatory notes by Steichen himself, telling of his early interest in art, his fascination with photography, and his own personal philosophy of art.

From the very earliest of Steichen's work one sees the man as a meticulous and painstaking craftsmen, devoted to the perfection of each individual print. He never allowed himself to be limited by any aesthetic theory, letting his art grow with the times. Photo-documentaries, nature, architecture, and abstract photography, were all areas in which Steichen involved himself and which he mastered. But portraiture was his forte: He did portraits of actors, politicians, businessmen and artists, many of which are reprinted in this book. There is the stern faced J.P. Morgan; the shot of Greta Garbo pulling her hair back; Isadora Duncan at the Acropolis; images of Churchill, Rodin, Charlie Chaplin, W.B. Yeats and Carl Sandburg. During the twenties and thirties, Steichen photographed many of the giants of the entertainment world and of the political scene. The distinguishing characteristics of these portraits is that no two of them look alike.

Steichen lived a very long life. (He died in his nineties.) And he kept this ability to be amazed by things and people until the very end. His later photographs exude the same air of freshness and originality as his very early work. A Life in Photography contains 249 of the highpoints of sixty years in involvement with the medium.

This book is available at the University Bookstore on Sale at $9.95.

Vegas: Dark Season

Vegas: A Memoir of a Dark Season
by John Gregory Dunne

Las Vegas is a city of single-minded purposiveness—dedicated to the entertainment of America's middle-class. (No matter how many bucks you've got, if you vacation in Las Vegas, you're middle-class.) Las Vegas, that raffish city in the desert, called simply "Vegas" by the habitues. "What a great place — Vegas," as one of the interminable line of Tonight Show, stand-up comics might say. There are 300,000 inhabitants of Las Vegas; 143 Churches; 159 Boy Scout Troops; 25, 596 hotel rooms; 1000 gaming tables; 16,000 slot machines; and 93 public and parochial schools, none of which teach sex education. (The citizens know where sex belongs — on the street, encased in nightclubs, surrounded by neon, on stage, and on the strip, to be packaged and consumed as quickly and as hygenically as possible.)

John Gregory Dunne had his reasons for spending the Summer of 1971 in Las Vegas. Dunne, a novelist and journalist, was having a nervous breakdown. Obsessed by death and feeling the end was approaching, a highway billboard, which said, "Go to Las Vegas before your number up", was all the convincing Dunne needed to spend some time there. Hi Vegas is a comic remembrance of his six months in the city, of his own psychic disintegration, and of the characters, whose lives he felt he "vandalized". "I thought I could tell something about myself from the people whose lives I intruded upon," he says.

These people include Artha, the obtuse-minded whore who keeps statistics: Five years in Las Vegas; 1,203 tricks with 1,076 different johns. She had taken an accounting course in high school and puts the knowledge to practical use by taking the daily statistics. She does not know what "cunnilingus" and "fellatio" means, but thinks the words sound "cute".

Jackie Kasey is the $10,000 a week night club comedian, with a wife who talks to saints, four psychiatrists, a nineteen year old girl friend, and an ever present doubt that he will never rise above the level of second rate.

Dunne's purpose behind his involvement with these people is purely selfish; they occupy his time while he is incapable of facing the responsibilities of his own life. When he is not collecting characters, Dunne wanders about the casinos, makes telephone calls to companies chosen at random from the Yellow Pages, watches T.V., and writes suicide notes. He finds the latter to be good therapy.

Near the end of his Summer, one of his characters has a heart attack and the reality of death forces Dunne to "put it all back together again." His "dark season" in Vegas passes; he packs his bags and goes home.

In Vegas: A Memoir of a Dark Season, Dunne relives his Summer in the desert city, that "Genet version of Hell", Las Vegas. And if it is a hell, at least Dunne makes it an amusing Hell—a place which we can laugh at and thereby come to tolerate.

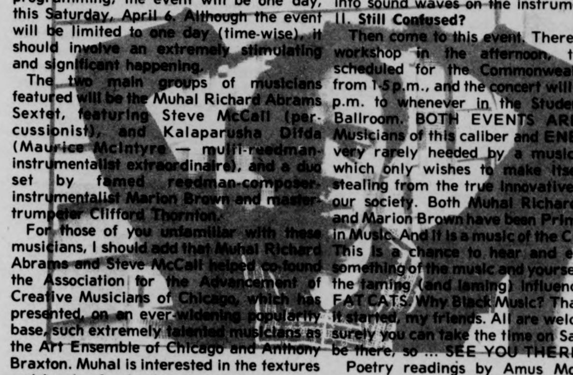
2ND NITE OF THE PURPLE MOON

BLACK MUSICIANS' CONFERENCE

2ND ANNUAL BLACK MUSICIANS' CONFERENCE

The Second Night of the Purple Moon



I. Interesting title, that ... What's it about?

"The Second Night of the Purple Moon" is the title of this year's Black Musicians' Conference and Concert. Does anybody out there remember last year's Conference? Yes, we had Sun Ra, the Revolutionary Ensemble, Archie Shepp, Joe Lee Wilson and the 360 Degree Ensemble, as well as vocalist Betty Carter and an entire evening of Professor Max Roach's "We Insist! Freedom Now!" suite. This time Around, due to lack of funds and difficulties in programming, the event will be one day, this Saturday, April 6. Although the event will be limited to one day (time-wise), it should involve an extremely stimulating and significant happening.

The two main groups of musicians featured will be the Muhal Richard Abrams Sextet, featuring Steve McCall (percussionist), and Kalaparusha Difda (Maurice McIntyre — multi-reedman-instrumentalist extraordinaire), and a duo set by famed reedman-composer-instrumentalist Marion Brown and master-trumpeter Clifford Thornton.

For those of you unfamiliar with these musicians, I should add that Muhal Richard Abrams and Steve McCall helped co-found the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians of Chicago, which has presented, on an ever-widening popularity base, such extremely talented musicians as the Art Ensemble of Chicago and Anthony Braxton. Muhal is interested in the textures and levels of color he can achieve on the piano (and the several other instruments he plays), and Steve McCall is one of the creative forces on the current percussion scene. These gentlemen play such sounds, and in Maurice McIntyre they have a truly cosmic-universal strength.

Marion Brown has been a force in the New Black Music for quite a few years now. Encouraged to play by Ornette Coleman and Archie Shepp (as well as spending time with the master teacher, Sun Ra), Marion has developed a unique blend of personal-universal-folk music through the years, constructing many of his instruments as he went along, although his many instruments are alto. Clifford Thornton is a true trumpet virtuoso and inventor (tapper of the all — as are all the musicians mentioned here), in that he goes beyond fast-clipped arpeggios into sound waves on the instrument.

II. Still Confused?

Then come to this event. There will be a workshop in the afternoon, tentatively scheduled for the Commonwealth Room from 1-5 p.m., and the concert will go from 8 p.m. to whenever in the Student Union. Ballroom. BOTH EVENTS ARE FREE. Musicians of this caliber and ENERGY are very rarely heeded by a music industry which only wishes to make itself fat by stealing from the true innovative forces in our society. Both Muhal Richard Abrams and Marion Brown have been Prime Movers in Music. And it is a music of the C(c)reator. This is a chance to hear and experience something of the music and yourself without the taming (and laming) influences of the FAT CATS. Why Black Music? That's where it started, my friends. All are welcome, and surely you can take the time on Saturday to be there, so ... SEE YOU THERE.

Poetry readings by Amus Moor, Tony McNeill, and Robert Ruff will also be featured on the Second Night of the Purple Moon. See you, sun.

U.F.W. vs. US

the most voiceless, exploited labor force in the country.

by Bob Callahan

The efforts of the farm-workers of Southern California to organize a union they themselves control and that is responsive to their needs has generated a nation-wide issue, one that touches the life of every American consumer. The publicity created by the national grape, lettuce and wine boycotts has however, also been met with equally extensive confusion and lack of understanding concerning the history of the farmworkers struggle and some of the problems and hazards the Union confronts today.

Migrant farm labor has historically managed to escape the benefits of unionization, which has been acquired by most other large industries, so that they have been the most voiceless, exploited labor force in the country. Mechanical problems have plagued attempts to organize farm labor, such as the transcience of labor force, and the short-term seasonal nature of the work, but agricultural labor's explicit exclusion from federal labor legislation and the historically racist nature of the trade union movement in this country have contributed also. The grape pickers strike of 1965 was the event that eventually led to the founding of the United Farm Workers, and which gave birth to the first real effective, coordinated assertion of farm worker power in recent history.

In 1965 a Fillipino labor group, the Agricultural Workers Organizing Committee (AWOC) decided to strike, when they learned that they were being paid $1.10 an hour, 20 cents less than other workers in the field. After five days a vast scab recruitment campaign by the growers threatened to crush the strike. The AWOC then approached the predominantly Chicano NFWA for support and the NFWA voted unanimously to join the Fillipino's on the picket line. Thus began the farmworker strike that was to eventually turn the San Joaquin Valley upside down.

Historically, racism has had a prominent and profitable position in the economics of California agriculture. By skillfully manipulating one racial group against the other, growers have always managed to insure a consistently inexpensive labor force. Thus, the unity of the Chicano and Fillipino workers in this initial strike was an important element in its ultimate victory. However, the historical accumulation of racial animosity that has been fermented by the white grower still place limitations of the extent of the cooperation that can exist between the Fillipino and Chicano communities in Southern California. Growers try to undercut the wages of one group by hiring another group at lower wages. By making the group compete intensely with one another, the grower can generate strong racial tension, and then directs the hostility and aggression of the workers towards each other rather than against the grower, and he insulates himself from labor unrest.

The strike began with $100.00 in the strike fund to support the families of the picketing workers. Strike camps were set up and the families relied essentially on donations of food, clothing and money for their livelihood. For the next several years, picketing fields was to be the way of life for the striking workers. It is much easier to make your case known and to prevent strikebreaking if it only involves picketing a few entrances to a shop, but in a vineyard much of the time is spent driving around trying to find the fields that the workers are picking. Also because of the desperate poverty of the farmworkers, and the ease of recruiting illegal immigrants from Mexico, scab labor is pretty abundant.

A main factor in making the strike ultimately successful was the national boycott which catapulted the local farmworkers uprising into a significant national issue. This generated much support thoughout the country and despite actions like Richard Nixon and Ronald Reagan's cheerfully chowing down grapes on national television, and the Pentagon discovering enough new grape recipes to triple its grape consumption, the boycott eventually put enough pressure on Delano's biggest grower, Schenley, so that in June of 1966, the Union got its first contract.

The prospect of the migrant workers evolving into a potent union, asserting meaningful control over their own lives has been quite an unsettling notion for the local citizenry. The role of the non-white population in the Valley was to them clearly established and has been deeply engrained into the psyche of the community. Spreading grape strikes and the rise of the UFW represented a very fundamental threat to that order. Indeed the opposition that the UFW has generated in government and business nationally has been equally ~~stagering.~~ How fundamental, acceptable, and even necessary, is brutal oppression of working people and of non-white people to the American way of life?

It is imperative that a strong, effective boycott be built if the Union is to win back old, and attain new contracts. Under no circumstances should one buy any table grapes, non-UFW lettuce, Gallo, Guild of Franzia wines, or any wines produced or bottled in Modesto or Ripon, California (this includes such big selling favorites as Ripple, ~~Boones~~ Farm, Spanada, Tryola, Thunderbird Andre and many more). It is important not to shop at stores that stock these products at all and to never, ever shop at a store that is being picketed. Right now, for supermarkets Food Mart, Big Y, Stop and Shop and Finast have given commitments to sell no grapes and only UFW lettuce. For liquor stores the Country Package Store in Leverett and both Russell's and C&C's in Amherst have agreed not to re-stock any of the boycotted wines. Presently A&P supermarkets is being picketed. There are several picket lines operating every weekend and if you're interested in joining one call 665-3567, 549-6702, or 546-6614. Everyone is welcome.

MILES BEHIND?

Miles Davis, (1935-1962)

by Joyce Kosofsky

Bill Cole is into Miles Davis. Bill Cole has been into Miles Davis since Bill was twelve years old. Miles Davis grew up to become a musician and a star. Bill Cole grew up to become a professor of music and an author of a forthcoming book about Miles Davis.

But you can't read the book because it's not published yet. Entitled Miles Davis — A Musical Biography, Cole's book is nothing but praise for one of the prime musical forces of the last 30 years. It is Cole's view of Davis's music in his own time.

"I am very positive in my writing," said Cole. "I put Davis in the context of artistry. We traced the development of Miles' music from his early playing with Charles Parker and his musical association with Coltrane up until he stopped playing music."

Cole explained that Davis "stopped playing music around 1962 when the last member of his original quintet, Paul Chambers, left him" According to Cole, Davis' music is no longer in the context of Afro-American music. It's now very electric, very structured. It's no longer revolutionary, it no longer questions. It's not moving anywhere.

"You can be a star only for a moment," said Cole. "You can stay up there only for a short while. That is unless you're very dangerous. When Chambers left him, Davis became a businessman."

But the book is about those dangerous years of Davis. When Davis was playing the people's music. Cole has a definite philosophy about music — That there is a form of music (Afro-American music), and yet it exists in many forms Musician, author Bill Cole.

It's revolutionary, and it was once termed as "jazz." Cole's book is the analysis of the time period from the early 40's to the present, from the music of Parker to Coltrane, and the most obvious connection between the two being Miles Davis and his music.

"I could have written about Miles' fourth marriage," mentioned Cole, "But if he couldn't have made it after a second try, then he's never going to make it at all. Instead I wrote the book about his music."

The manuscript originally started out as Cole's Masters Thesis at the University of Pittsburgh. And before it became his book, Davis's music was the subject of an article Cole once wrote for Downbeat Magazine. Cole's manuscript is the second book ever to be published with Miles Davis as a subject.

Miles Davis — A Musical Biography is due out this summer. It is not the history of Davis' life; it is the development of his career as a revolutionary musician as written by another musician. Catch it when it does come out — It's going to be an important piece of literature.

Editor's Note: Bill Cole is a professor on leave at Amherst College. Last year he taught courses in non-western music entitled "The John Coltrane Memorial Lecture Series." A musician himself, Cole plays two wind instruments, the Chinese Muzette and the East Indian Shenai.

Cole's book Miles Davis — A Musical Biography, is due on the stands sometime this summer.

STOMP YOUR HANDS, CLAP YOUR FEET — SLADE (Warner Bros. BS 2770)
Total Playing Time: 31:33

Stomp Your Hands expands the musical bounds of England's outrageous skinheads. Though lacking the immaculate consistency of the excellent all-hit no-miss Sladest, there is a diversity of material which has previously lay dormant. Though staying within their established four minute limit, the songs never fail to get their point across.

CREEM'S PROFILES

Singer Noddy Holder wails his bloody head off on "Just Want a Little Bit", the album's only non-original, and "Don't Blame Me", previously released as the flip of "Merry Xmas Everybody". But he also relaxes a bit on the surprisingly laid back and harmonious "Everyday" and "How Can It Be". As expected, there are a number of potential English singles led by "Do We Still Do It", "Good Time Gals", and "When the Lights Are Out", the latter sounding suspiciously like the early Beatles, with Noddy giving way to Jimmy Lea who performs the vocal dramatics. The boys even throw us a change-up with their own Al Jolson parody, funkily entitled "Find Yourself a Rainbow".

It's a pity the record doesn't include the seasonal "Merry Xmas Everybody" which created such a holiday stir, but that's show biz. Slade takes us back to the sixties and forward to the eighties (energy permitting), making this disk a must for any self-respecting rocker. Although not as good an introduction to the wacky world of Slade as Sladest, Stomp is certainly a musical step onward. Cum On Feel The Noize.

TAILFACE LEE MICHAELS (Columbia) time 29:15

Lee Michaels and Columbia Records have a lot of nerve to release an album with only twenty-nine minutes of music on it. However, this only turns out to be a blessing in disguise, because all of the material on this album rots. Some things never change, do they?

LET IT RIDE
CHI COLTRANE
Total Playing Time: 35:44

Chi Coltrane is a strong woman, and her strength comes through in every cut on Let It Ride: in her singing, her song-writing, her arranging and production, and not least in her piano playing. She handles all of her songs—quiet love songs and rock and roll together—with integrity, style and nary a trace of self-indulgence.

Much of what Chi writes reminds me of nothing as much as some of Joni Mitchell's lyrics, although a close comparison between the two probably wouldn't yield very much. The similarity appears in the uncertainty with which both writers deal in subjects such as falling in and out of love—compare "Will you take me as I am?" (Joni's "California") with "You don't know the way I feel inside—I would tell you but I can't describe—Myself to you— I don't know why" (Chi's "Myself to You"). Yet with both writers, this uncertainty leads not to worry or defeat, but to acceptance of these contradictions as being only human, after all. Several of the songs on Let It Ride seem to be directed toward some male figure, encouraging him toward this sense of acceptance as well: "Loving you the way I do, you know I'll always care for you—Baby, don't ever close that door on me—'Cause people change from day to day—Our paths just went in different ways—But that don't mean our love should cease to be" ("Different Ways"); "What a lovely way to round the bend — It's too bad it always has to end— Goodnight, my friend" ("Myself to You").

Other songs on Let It Ride include "Who Ever Told You", a song which I take to be a political allegory, but judge for yourself—"Who ever told you that you know how to dance?... You move too fast and you come on way too strong—You don't wanna know if your steps are right or wrong—And we've all been watching your dancin' far too long."; "Shortnin' Bread", another song about contradictions, this one involving (ugh) food—"Got up this morning, made my bed— Sure feel hunry for shortnin' bread... Now my stomach feel like lead..."; "Feather My Bed", a song about being spoiled and loving it, and the album's masterpiece, "Forget Love". This is a positively tragic song about mutual misunderstandings, which present what would have been a vibrant love affair from ever materializing. At 5:49, it goes quickly.

The main instrument throughout the album is Chi's piano, undiluted by lead guitars, sloppy strings or other pianos— although guitars, strings, and other keyboards are all present. And this is all to the good, because Chi is a fine pianist, with a range of different styles at her command. The strength of her playing and production, mentioned above, unifies the album and gives even songs like "Shortnin' Bread" a sense of importance. The backing musicians are drawn largely from the Jim Horn—Jim Keltner— Larry Knechtel— Klaus Voorman— Paul Buckmaster constellation, and the backing vocals are definitely of the "Concert for Bangladesh" school—heavy on the tremolo. But this is Chi Coltrane's album, and Let It Ride is a fine reminder that a solo album really isn't such a bad idea, after all.

LOOKIN' FOR A LOVE—BOBBY WOMACK (United Artists LA 199-G) Time 31:25

Bobby's been giving the soft-soul-sell for so long now that he has already peaked in the eyes of some so-called soul enthusiasts. Which is funny, because most folks don't know if Bobby's last name is spelled with both the c and the k. He really has been cutting too strange a figure for most straight-thinking people to get some sense of 'identity' from: hanging around with Gabor Szabo, getting semi-Top 40 hits, appearing on Soul Train, touring with Santana and now being part of the L.A., Star crowd. John Lennon and Ringo Starr come over to Bobby's house to celebrate his number on his birthday. Big talent, though, needs no niche.

So what is he? UA's soul (he, War and Dobie Grey) seems a little...different. Removed, somehow, from what's Usual, and maybe this is why War can sell tons and still be in a situation where few of your can name anyone in the group except Lee Oskar (such a funny name). Anyhow, Womack's soul is on the lighter, easier side of things (though not Pop), and there's a mighty nice feeling likely to overtake you listening to "Lookin' For A Love", "I Don't Wanna Be Hurt By Ya Love Again", and especially the bewitching "Doing It My Way". B—

Who could blame the Clean Livers for sleepwalking through a goodly portion of their two sets? The crowd of fifty on hand for the first set seemed strictly charter residents of snoozeland. Gladly though, both the band and the audience (now swelled to 200) swung a good deal harder the second set, and we did get to hear some of the beguiling, timeless Country Rock that is Clean Living at their top.

Bottoming up this bizarre; unpolished, unadvertised and definately rushed bill were the Beaner's choice, NRBQ. And the news was the 'big band' NRBQ that doled out some giant sounds that were most impressive in their many-varied gel.

Steve Ferguson, an original band member, is back from the Wild Dogs, and doing just fine on guitar and Eddie Cochran vocals, and Keith Spring, late of Martin "Normal" Mull fame (doing Marty's sax and arrangements), combined with downbeat trombonist Donn Adams in some beautiful rockin'-soulful-wailin'-jazzy-country-Whole wheat horns.

After a few months of riding on the semi-hit single circuit, the BQ's are back, bigger and badder than ever. No, I don't know who swiped the **$$.

TIME FORGOTTEN

Bridge Of Fruit and Exotic Flies

by David Sokol

Bridge Of Sighs
Robin Trower
(Chrysalis CHR 1057)
Total Playing Time :37:27

If Blue Oyster Cult hold the title to Heavy Metal champs with their sound of crude iron and steel, then the three man aggregation collectively known as Robin Trower can have their music defined in radioactive terms. Raw Transuranic.

As a result of Matthew Fisher's nimble production, Bridge of Sighs is as downright frigidly arctic as Twice Removed From Yesterday was sub-aquatic. Here we find guitarist Robin ("Whiskey Train") Trower taking his faithful Stratocaster to new reaches while his hollowed soul meets with the spirit of Jimi Hendrix. The result is a logical step forward for Mr. Trower.

Back when Procol Harum contained both Matthew Fisher and Robin Trower, life was much easier. We didn't concern ourselves with catagorizing and classifying musical forms. We were so much older then. Hendrix played "You Got Me Floating" and "Crosstown Traffic", and Procol did "Crucifixion Lane" and "Wreck of the Hesperus".

So, though it is sad that there is no longer anyone carrying on in the tradition of the old Procol, there is some consolation in knowing that Hendrix is still being remembered. By Robin Trower. And now, Trower's songs are both more Hendrix influenced and also more distinctively Troweresque than ever before. Trower flirts with Hendrix riffs, yet keeps them sufficiently unique so that we're not really tempted to be distracted. Trower is obviously an admitted disciple of him (remember "Song For a Dreamer", Trower's tribute to Hendrix on Broken Barricades) and as a guitarist, Hendrix was in a class by himself.

To coin a phrase, Bridge of Sighs fulfills all the expectations of Twice Removed From Yesterday. The material on Bridge is at once more discernible than that on its predecessor, which as you recall, took about 20 listenings or 4 months to get fully realized. On Bridge, "Day of the Eagle", "Bridge of Sighs", and "Little Bit of Sympathy" are immediately striking and the rest of the songs are pregnant with potential.

The 67 per cent of the powertrio who comprise the rhythm section (James Dewar on bass and vocals, Reg Isidore on drums) contribute generously to the heavy, funky, bluesy cold weather sound. So play this one loud and ask questions later.

The half-life has just begun.

Exotic Birds and Fruit
Procol Harum
(Chrysalis CHT 1058
Total Playing Time: 37:15

Emotional generalizations about the greatness that once was Procol Harum seem to fall on the deaf ears of the unfortunate who never knew or experienced. And with three utter disappointments in Broken Barricades, Live, and Grand Hotel, even the diehards have searched their souls in an effort not to moralize too greatly upon the apparent passing of an era.

Yet with the natural scheme of things, the annual Procol Harum record gets released and the loyal Procolphile can't overcome the temptation, the curiosity. And for the first time since the brilliant Home, there is some reward behind the lush and luscious cover.

Side one contains the important music with four of the album's five highlights. As on Grand Hotel, Gary Brooker and Keith Reid have written the whole record, but here it seems that Keith has regained some of his sensibility and sensitivity with the first side containing some of his best lyrics in a long time. "As Strong as Sampson" and "The Idol" recall Keith Reid, the poet. Unfortunately, aside from B.J. Wilson's ever-precise drumming, Brooker's piano, and an occasional surprise from organist Chris Copping, the playing is again undynamic. Brooker's vocals are strong, especially on "Nothing But the Truth", a catchy Procol song if ever there was one, and on "Beyond the Pale" which is something of a conjuration.

So, Exotic Birds and Fruit is one excellent side plus "New Lamps for Old" shining on brightly, which though not being as much as might be hoped for, is certainly more than was expected. An encouraging development and one of the year's best.

A Squawk Supreme, A Squawk Supreme

A NEW LIFE-THE MARSHALL TUCKER BAND (Capricorn)

Look back for a moment and reflect on the number of rock groups (or individual performers, for that matter) who have peaked early in their careers. Instead of expanding and maturing, their music degenerated. The demise could usually be attributed to one or more of three problems: exhaustion of a limited reservoir of good material; a loss of inspiration; or an ill-advised venture into alien musical territory.

Many tenderfoot musicians copy the styles of more popular musicians in hopes of attaining the same spiritual and financial heights of fame (MONEY). This is true of far too many up and coming, top-40, fuscha-pink, tit bands . . . This is not true of The Marshall Tucker Band.

A New Life is the Marshall Tucker Band's attempt to follow up a stunning first album which launched them from obscurity to headliner status in less than a year. The first listening reveals that the three pitfalls have been avoided. Lead guitarist Toy Caldwell has turned out eight new songs that are, in composite, the equal of those offered on the debut LP. The inspiration is still there, reflected in the more ambitious musicianship. And wisely, the band has not pushed off to explore any new pathways. The music is the same: hard-edged yet mellow, driving Southern-rock reminiscent of recent Allman Brothers material.

"Unique" is an adjective — An adjective is a part of speech — a part of speech can be expressed — The Marshall Tucker Band and their songs cannot be expressed adequately by the limited vocubulary of this or any other language . . . They are "superb"? . . . yes . . . . Extraordinary? . . . Perhaps . . . Damn Good? . . . No doubt . . . The of our times? . . . Aaaaaaaah . . .

As on the first album, one side stands out — in the case of A New Life, the second. Side 1 is solid and representative, but none of the songs has the impact of "Take the Highway" or "Can't You See" — the definitive Marshall Tucker Band performances which opened the first album.

"Another Cruel Love" kicks off Side 2 of A New Life, with the up-tempo drive that is Marshall Tucker at its best, and for the next 15 minutes — through "You Ain't Foolin' Me" and "24 Hours at a Time" — The band just keeps building momentum. Unfortunately, the closing cut, "Fly Eagle Fly", falls far short of the songs that precede it and the momentum is lost. Nevertheless, the side emerges strongly enough to challenge Side 1 of album one as the band's finest moments.

If Marshall Tucker manages to remain at the level reached thus far, it will be a significant achievement. Should subsequent albums reflect further growth and maturity, so much the better.

The songs vary in style from blissful blues to good old country fiddling . . . Two of the band's tunes have been floating out of the radio a lot lately: "A New Life" (the title song) and "Southern Woman" . . . These two cuts are representative of the whole album . . . alive!

At the moment, they're known as the South's number two band. Given time, they could give the Allman Brothers a real run for the number one spot.

FUSION — MICHAL URBANIAK (Columbia KC 32852) Total Playing Time: 45:12

MICHAL URBANIAK
FUSION

So, this guy who writes the liner notes tells me that Urbaniak follows the lines of the great Polish composers and influential musicians of the past ten years (i.e., Miroslav Vitous, Krzysztof Penderecki), and he's integrating "folk" musics in his work, but don't worry, it sounds familiar, like Miles Davis and Mahavishnu Orchestra. When somebody assures me that an album is going to be — ahem — comfortable, I get upset.

To be sure, Urbaniak is a fine violinist and saxophonist, but his sidepeople (except for his lovely wife and vocalist Urszula Dudziak), despite the unique setup (two keyboards, drums, violin and vocals), are incredibly uninspired. Drummer Bartkowski has a Billy Cobham fixation he can't really match, although he is fast, while the two keyboard players seem content to stick to used-Jan Hammer. Please, please, Michal...I've heard the Mahavishnu Orchestra style whipped into the ground so much, I'm getting tired of it. They are gone, and you picked up on Davis' low creative posture.

There are some nice sections, however. The "Fusion" cut has some nice tape work, and some lovely vocals from Urzsala, and side two have very few weak spots (the Polygrip side). Indeed, "Bengal", the longest track on the album (13 minutes plus), is beautiful in its sonorities, and the tension created between voice and violin is quite electric.

One final thing: "Bahamian Harvest" on side one purportedly features "rhythms which are found in the rural villages of Northern Yugoslavia and Bulgaria." Well, fine, but why does Michal insist on throwing a slicked-up blues line, over and over, as his closing theme. There used to be a man named Albert Ayler, who employed universal musics from all over the world as part of his "all" music, and he did it with a blues base. In other words, you shouldn't throw in licks like that, totally separated, to show an integration — it just points out the glaring differences which can occur by playing in two "formularized" styles. If it works in communion with itself, fine, but if the two are hackneyed riffs, it won't work at all.

Evaluation (do I have to? Yes, says the Editor.):

Side Two: AB; One: C. Not half bad.

MIGHTY LOVE — THE SPINNERS (Atlantic SD 7296) time 37:12

Please allow for some discrepencies between this newest Spinners and their gold-laden last, The Spinners. Long on the brink of the commercial hit end of the business, the Spins' have been thrust with a mighty heave into as hot a success as you can be along the Soul highway.

Mighty Love is a fine follow-up, but the word 'follow-up' has to be invoked, as this can't match the previous one, in either sales or goodness.

It does have a mighty fine feel to it throughout, though, and never drags. B

—Mike "nobody tells me I'm great" Kostek

Starting out as a group of humble street corner singers in Ferndale, Michigan, the Spinners have always put music first. Nineteen years later, they've finally come by the stardom which has always been their destiny. Mighty Love, like the million selling Spinners before it establishes the group as one with many of the same strengths which marked the 4 Tops and the Temptations at their peaks. "Mighty Love" is one of the most ultimately playable singles in recent memory, in the coveted company of "That Lady", "Lookin' For a Love", and "The Love I Lost". The Otis influence is unmistakable.

But "Mighty Love" is only the first of what will probably be a string of successful hits (Spinners had 4). A little tip of the hat to Mr. Thom Bell for his stylistic production, arrangement, and conducting of this fine record. He also wrote "I'm Coming Home", which along with "Since I Been Gone" and "Love Has Gone Away" really shine. Spin On Brightly.

SOMETHIN'S HAPPENING — PETER FRAMPTON (A&M) time 43:38

Peter Frampton hasn't fared too well since he left Humble Pie back in 1971. Despite two well received discs by his first post-Pie group, Frampton's Camel, success has yet to touch Pete.

"Somethin's Happening" is what you might call a trasitional album, neither good nor bad. Of the eight songs offered here, only two are memorable. "Sail Away" is best; great for a rainy day while sitting around dreaming that you were in the Bahamas or something. "Sail" definately captures the mood, you might say. "Golden Goose" is good when compared to the rest of cuts. There is a nice blend of acoustic and electric guitars in it. An example of the bad stuff is "Doobie Wah", a rip off the the Doobie Brothers' hit single "Listen To The Music". As a matter of fact, it could be a rip off of any Doobie Brothers song, as they all sound the same anyways.

If your a real devout Frampton fan, you'll probably like this disc. Agreed it's nice, but not particularly exciting. it sounds like something anybody could make.

Snuff: A Sense of Elegance

by Patrick Coffey

Smoking was a fad pure and simple. Its murky delights have succumbed in the face of snuff's greater delights before, and it is happening again. Snuff, which has been called "the final cause of the human nose" is now returning to it's rightful place.

Snuff is a finely ground, fermented and scented tobacco product. It is available in flavors such as ecucalyptus, Jasmine and Anisette. Inhaled with short sharp sniffs through the nose, snuff features a heady rush and an association with certain other substances, which are also sniffed and which also provide a heady rush. This has long been known to certain snobs and a handful of heads, but the word is in the air and snuff is starting to get around. It is now the fastest growing alternative to smoking.

There are 50 million smokers in the United States, and most of them have attempted, at one time or another, to give up the habit. They have tried hypnotism, cold turkey, group therapy and yoga. Since 1964, 10 million smokers have quit, making a total of 29 million ex-smokers in all. Of those who did quit, an indeterminate (but estimated to be quite large) proportion did it by switching to the rewards of snuff.

Regarding the administration of nicotine in other ways than smoking, the Surgeon General's Report stated, " . . . smokers . . . claimed the subjective effects to be identical to those obtained by inhaling cigarette smoke, and found that the urge to smoke was greatly reduced during nicotine administration." Snuff has a proportionatly equal or higher nicotine content compared to cigarette tobacco. And the most efficient way to input nicotine into the system is by sniffing snuff (with the exception of intravenous injection by certain nicotine addicts). The membranes of the nose are the quickest mode of absorption.

For those of you concerned for your health, rather than efficiency, it should be noted from the Surgeon General, "The Chronic toxicity of nicotine in quantities absorbed from...tobacco use is very low and probably does not represent a significant health problem." Another point in favor of the virtues of snuff, from a healthy standpoint, according to Mr. Surgeon, "Most of the carcinogenic compounds identified in cigarette smoke are not present in the native tobacco leaf but are formed by pyrolysis at the high burning temperature of cigarettes." So snuff probably isn't hazardous to your health, and as we all read every day "Cigarette Smoking Is Dangerous to Your Health".

It is likely that the greatest asset of snuff is it's air of flair; which is especially obvious in contradistinction the grossness of some other base habits we have all witnessed. There is a scent of elegance about snuff shown in the ritual sniff:

1. Bring out the snuff box and pass it to your left hand.

2. Tap the snuff box with the right forefinger three times to mull the snuff.

3. Open the snuff box reverently.
4. Present the snuff box to the company.
5. Receive it after going the round.
6. Re-mull the snuff by striking (three times) with the forefinger.

7. Arrange the pinch:
   a. On the thumb nail walled by the forefinger.
   b. In the anatomical snuffbox. (this is the indentation made at the base of the thumb when both of the thumb's large tendons are raised.)
   c. Between the thumb and forefinger.
8. Elevate the snuff to your nose.
9. Gently sniff the snuff into the lower nasal passages, one side at a time, with short, sharp sniffs.
10. Close the snuffbox with a flourish.

11. Use a fashionable snuffkerchief if you take too large a sniff and have to sneeze or when necessary for expelling the clean tawny snuff flour from the nostrils.

(Each person may develop his own individual manner for accomodating snuff. These notes are offered as an illustration.)

Snuff marks one as neither conforming or non-conforming, but as discriminating. A flourished, open snuff box will, however, attract to you a relaxed and excited crowd. Snuff can be accomodated at any time—while attending church, a wedding, a birth, a death, a seance,...while making love. You will never see a "No Snuffing" sign. Nor will you ever be relegated to the back of the plane, in the snuffing section. Snuff is the only tobacco product space travelers are permitted to carry with them, which suggests something of the atmospheric benefits of snuff. And snuff is the fastest growing alternative to cigarette smoking.

Snuff sniffing is not a fad. Now as in the XVIIth, XVIIIth and XIXth centuries snuff sniffers can be found at the very vortex of our society.

The epoch of the cigarette was an incredible experience. It only got it's start with the invention of the strike anywhere match, The Lucifer, which cried out for frequent and conspicous use (imagine the excitement of "instant fire" to someone used to making fire with a tinder box, striking flint and steel). Conveniently, the invention of mass-producing, cigarette-making machinery took advantage of this phenomenon to enable a dynamism of lower prices, higher profits, increased consumption, repeating itself over and over... now it is history.

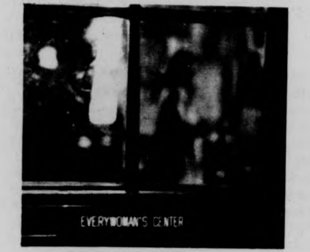
The "Mystique" of the Everywoman's

by Timothy P. Wallbridge

It has come to my attention that a great many males and females have little or no conception as to the functioning of the Everywoman's Center, 506 Goodell, Univ. of Mass.

It has especially surprised me to hear remarks from some males concerning the awe, if not mild dread, with which they hold a University organization which they are helping to fund. Remarks such as, "you go near that place and you get dirty looks," or, "I'm nervous everytime I walk in the door of Goodell," do not seem to be an especially healthy view of any organization at the University.



I wish I could testify that when I walked into the Center there were a hundred women with meat cleavers at the ready, or that I was made to stand for one hour on my head so as to be as uncomfortable as possible, but alas I was not afforded such juicy material for this article. Anger or intimidation are so much easier to deal with than diplomacy. I must admit that I was treated with both courtesyand promptness. But here are some facts:

The Everywoman's Center has been in existance at the University for approximately a year and a half and in September of last year it moved from Munson Hall to Goodell. It obviously focuses its attention on the "problem" of women in the attempt to meet what I was told are the "unmet needs of women."

Funding for the center comes from the Provost Office, Continuing Education, Administrative Services, Student Senate and various other constituents of the University(that is to say from all of us). They also receive a Federal Grant through HEW. However, the majority of the funding is through the University. Their Project Self Workshop and Everywoman's Weekend are self-supporting.

The center acts as a referral, counselling, drop-in and advocacy service. That is, it goes to bat for women being "discriminated" against in housing, financial aid, or any other aspect of discrimination. It also offers counselling in Educational Alternatives in the form of workshops, one being an all woman VW repair workshop. Some of the other services it offers or supports are a Feminists Art Program, Chomo-Uri Feminists Art Journal, coming out this month, and Poor Women's Task Force.

The center functions financially autonomous "as a group," and determines its own expenditures. The majority of the women are paid. Ideally they are paid the same, but women with a greater financial need are given more hours so they can make more money. Those women who are not paid receive, for the most part, either academic credit or are on work study. There are some volunteers.

I am told that the Everywoman's Center functions solely for women, although it will accept calls from men pertaining to wives or girlfriends. The said justification for this, it was stated, is because women to women interaction is stressed. That to have men participate in any of the activities directly would deter its ideal of "focusing on women."

My main reasons for compiling information about the Everywoman's Center is two fold. One, is to strip away the cloak of mystery it seemed to be shrouded in to many people, male and female, that I have talked with.

The second is its justification for existing and for receiving University space and money for carrying out its services. It seems to be a positive institution for woman but not necessarily for "all persons" as I was informed was the intent of the various aspects of the Women's Movement in responses to anti-feminist literature I submitted to Letters to the Editor last semester. I was informed that the ultimate goal of feminists is to unite everyone, man and woman, in a bond of mutual love and equality. What that means meantime I'm not so sure.

I cannot really "knock" directly the activities of this organization as I believe, on the basis of what I was told and literature received at an interview at the center, it performs beneficial services to a great many women. My only two questions would be, one, seeing that the center is UNIVERSITY funded, it seems that some of its activities could be offered to men as well as woman. As an example, the VW repair workshop. I was told the reason for this is that women would feel uneasy with a bunch of men standing around going "boy are you dumb about cars." A situation which I doubt would arise, and even if it did I don't feel would predominate for long. This, it seems, would be much more in the spirit of mutual contribution and cooperation.

Secondly, a point I made last semester, is what ever happened to a truly People's Movement? I don't know how long an all male bar or club at the University would last, but I could probably hold my breath that long. If we're all involved in this social revolution simply be being around, it seems that we should all reap what benefits there are.

I have neither all the answers or solutions, if any, but would be interested in hearing from people at the University, male and female, about what they think. Personal attacks will be recycled in the interest of ecology.

FILM

The $500,000 Jack Nicholson

The Last Detail — directed by Hal Ashby, starring Jack Nicholson

by Stuart Sojcher

It has been some time since Jack Nicholson has been in a movie. His emergence as a respected actor came with his portrayal of a small-town Southern lawyer in Easy Rider. Following that came the much critically acclaimed Five Easy Pieces for which he won the New York Film Critics Award for best actor. He then acted in Carnal Knowledge, directed Drive, He Said and starred in The King of Marvin Gardens. The latter two did not make it commercially but have a kind of cult-following. With The Last Detail, Nicholson is once again on top as he delivers a marvelous performance as "Bad-Ass" Puddusky which earned him an Academy Award nomination and should give him the Oscar. But that's another story.

The Last Detail is just that — the last journey for Randy Quaid, a gawky, inept and gloomy sailor. This unfortunate soul is being taken to the Portsmouth, New Hampshire brig for trying to steal a box containing forty dollars for some charity. Not only did he fail, but he also was caught in the act and sentenced to an eight year prison term. He is escorted by Nicholson and Otis Young, two Navy "lifers", who decide to travel as quickly as possible to Portsmouth, dump off Quaid and enjoy the remaining days of their detail boozing and carousing. But their ideas change when they realize Quaid's hopeless position, and they decide to give Quaid one last rousing time. They engage in a beer spree in Washington, get in a brawl with some Marines in a train station and buy Quaid's manhood in a Boston bordello.

Quaid finally comes to life after awhile. In one scene, upon receiving an order of eggs, he complains about the way they were made. The waiter promptly takes them back and Quaid's face flashes a triumphant smile. But though he manages to enjoy himself, and tells Nicholson and Young that they are his best friends, he tries to run away at the end. Nicholson goes beserk and practically beats Quaid to a pulp. Has Quaid seen the hopelessness of his position through his journey and realizes that the decision to run will be his last act of free will? And why does Nicholson become so angry? He himself constantly tells Quaid to assert himself, not to get pushed around. Can't he understand the feelings of a man sentenced to eight years in prison?

Nicholson and Young finally make it to the prison, leaving Quaid in tears. They go off griping about a lieutenant's harassing them about Quaid's wounds, not giving any thought to the last days spent with Quaid, nor do they even bother to assess their own situations. Still, the ending does not leave one unhappy. Instead one chuckles over Nicholson, who is still griping, still trying to project his "bad-ass" image. It is here that the intention of the director arises. What is he trying to present?

Director Hal Ashby could have made the film more sentimental, but that would not have been as successful. Because he is dealing with male relationships, he keeps sentiment at a low key. One can't imagine Nicholson and Young to suddenly break down in despair over Quaid's hopelessness.

Scenes are changed quickly to deny the viewer much sympathy for Quaid. One might think that the film is rather hard-edged, but there is a certain economy and straightforwardness to the film that still manages to convey a sense of pathos. For example, during their journey, the threesome stop off at Quaid's hometown so that he may say good-bye to his mother. They knock on the door a few times but there is no answer. Finally, after a few moments, Nicholson pushes the door open and the camera focuses for several seconds on the living room. It is a mess. Papers, empty liquor bottles and furniture asunder. The camera cuts back to the blank faces of Nicholson and Young as Quaid turns away. Their faces display a trace of understanding. There is another quick cut to the living room, then Nicholson closes the door.

Young and Nicholson — Lifers in Detail.

This scene is contrasted with many humorous moments which leave the audience roaring with laughter: Nicholson threatening to pulverize a bartender for refusing to serve Quaid a beer, the three of them in a hotel room drinking endlessly, and Nicholson howling as Quaid is taken upstairs to a bedroom by a young woman.

The contrast between the serious and the comic provides a balance between the two. One sees both the comic and tragic sides of the characters.

The screenplay, written by Robert Towne was also up for an Academy Award, and is quite profane but witty. I heard more four letter words in two hours than I normally hear in one week at U. Mass.

But it is Jack Nicholson's performance as "Bad-Ass" Paddusky that creates the film's life. "Bad-Ass" must always keep up his image as the brash, machismo tough guy, but deep down he has a sense of compassion. Perhaps his endless bantering and aggression is an escape from the dull Navy routine. Whatever, Nicholson is "Bad-Ass." (Interestingly, Nicholson was paid five hundred thousand dollars plus ten per cent of the net profits of the film.) Quaid and Young also perform well in their roles, and the former was up for an Oscar in a best supporting role.

It's difficult to decide whether Ashby was intent on telling an interesting story, commenting on the human condition, or both. As we laugh at Nicholson's brash manner, we also laugh at ourselves and think about the image we wish to project. And in watching Quaid, we empathize with the struggle of the 'loser,' who by the end of the movie has gained some sense of dignity. Perhaps I'm delving into things too much, but regardless, The Last Detail is a fine movie.

Theatre: Good Times Are Here To Stay

compiled by Mark Cuddy

The Umass Music Theatre Guild is producing the musical DAMES AT SEA, Wednesday thru Saturday, April 3-6, in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. The production is under the direction of Anne Drecktrah, with musical direction of Jim Cruthers and choreography by Beverly Scarpace and assistant Gail Brassard.

DAMES AT SEA, written by George Haimsohn and Robin Miller, with music by Jim Wise, is a delightful parody of the great Hollywood musicals of the 1930's. A take-off on the Ruby Keeler-Dick Powell "All Singing' "All Dancing" Extravaganzas, the simple plot concerns a star-struck girl Ruby (alternately played by Mary Scledge and Judy Leamon) who comes to the big city and falls in love with sailor-songwriter Dick (played by Norman A. Brown). Plot complications are provided by the on-again, off-again romance of Dick's pal, Lucky (Steve Moscoe) with Joan (Carolyn Schade), the gum-chewing chorus girl with the heart of gold.

The action takes place in a theatre on the opening day of Director Hennesey's (Steve Rourke) last chance for a smash hit. With his tempermental star Mona Kent (Luann Barry), Hennesey succeeds in getting his show ready for opening night when the theatre is sold from under his feet. With a first-act closing song "Good Times Are Here To Stay", they decide to open the show on schedule but on Dick and Lucky's battleship where the second act action takes place. When Mona Kent becomes seasick, Ruby steps in to be the star of the show in the rollicking number "Star Tar". As all appropriate stories do, this one ends with a happily threesome of Dick and Ruby, Lucky and Joan, Mona and the Captain.

The Theatre Guild production has Scenic Design by Mike O'Neil, Lighting Design by Dave Brenzel and Costume Design by Gail Brassard. These three talented people have combined to make it a very visually exciting evening of musical comedy by capturing the style of the 30's. Between lively performances and enthusiastic musical execution, DAMES AT SEA will carry your heart away.

Tickets are now available at the Fine Arts Council Box Office and are priced at $1.50 for students and $2.50 for others. For information call 545-0202.

Goodies For Your Eyes

by Arthur Levine

American Graffiti +++
This film is more than just another nostalgic look into the 50's. It grapples with the very real difficulties of growing up and finding a niche for oneself in the adult world. The film recounts the exploits of four friends on the night before they are to go their separate ways; some to college, others to continue to haunt the local street corners. There's a lot of fun and good music, but also some interesting studies of American youth. Mountain Farm Mall.

The African Queen (1951) ++
This was Bogarts only Oscar winning performance, which appears odd considering the quality of his other work. Katherine Hepburn stars with Bogey in this childish tale of a voyage of a missionary's sister and a rummy sea captain down a treacherous river into deepest, darkest Africa. Both stars give delightful performances, but the preponderance of coincidence, and lack of real drama detract from the overall effect. Thursday at Mahar at 8 and 10.

Cinderella Liberty +++
"Tender, mature, and lovely fable about a sailor on leave and a whore with whom he falls in love. Plot contrivances, but the lovers are believable and the performances are outstanding in this tough, memorable movie. Starring James Caan, Eli Wallach and Marsha Mason." At the Calvin and Campus Cinemas.

Diary of a Shinjuku Burglar ++++
A Japanese film with English sub-titles. "A complex film about the search for sexual freedom ... by a young couple against the background of a section of Tokyo, called Shinjuku. It also mixes in student political riots and the still complicated tensions between old ritual and beliefs and new emancipated outlooks." Thompson 106, 7:30 and 9:30.

Day for Night ++++
"Delightfully affectionate, frothy, funny satire on the madness known as moviemaking. Director sets out to make film amid endless, typical complications. Wonderful cast, impeccable look. A cinematic tribute to filmdom. Starring Jacqueline Bisset, Jean Pierre Leaud and Francois Truffaut playing himself." Amherst Cinema.

The Exorcist +++
A hair-raising horror show, based on the work by William Blatty. It deals with the possession of a young girl by demonic spirits and subsequent exorcism. Recommended for those who like to dabble in the occult and-or are strong of stomach. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Fantasia ++++
Walt Disney's captivating, animated accompaniment to classical music. A delightful film for views of all ages and dispositions. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Fantastic Planet ++
"In French with English titles. Animated fantasy which is classy, appealing, and charming; although also somewhat wearisome in parts because of the feature length strain. People called Draags, 39 feet tall, live on a planet with man-like Oms as pets. The Oms revolt. Lots of action and implicit moral." Academy of Music.

From Here to Eternity (1953) +++
Plot is concerned with pre-World War II professional army life in Hawaii. Montgomery Clift plays a stubborn individualist caught up in the politics of army life. Also starring Frank Sinatra, Ernest Borgnine, Burt Lancaster, and Donna Reed. Friday, 8:00 at Franklin Patterson Hall, Hampshire College.

Grand Illusion (1937) ++++
Directed by Jean Renoir this film concerns three French prisoners of war held in German hands during WWI. They are transferred to a prisoner of war camp where they unite in plans of escape. In their travels they are befriended by friend and foe alike. Renoir on the film: "I made this film because I am a pacifist. To me, a true pacifist is a Frenchman, a German, an American. The day will come when men of good faith will find a common meeting ground." In this film at least they find this meeting ground. Thurs., 7 and 9:30 at the SUB.

High Plains Drifter +
Clint Eastwood cleans up a town plagued by bad guys. Tense and bloody, which should come as no surprise. Tues., 7, 9, 11 at the SUB.

Marat-DeSade (The persecution and assassination of Jean-Paul Marat as performed by the inmates of the Asylum of Charenton under the direction of the Marquis DeSade). ++++
"The film version of Peter Brooks Royal Shakespeare Company production of the Peter Weiss play, exploring problems of freedom, depression, and violence. Inmates in post-French revolution asylum enact the assassination of Jean-Paul Marat. In some ways better on film, some ways not. Philosophical duel between Marat and DeSade in sharper focus, but the total effect is more fragmented. Acting is tremendous and the presentation strikingly original. Starring Ian Richardson, Patrick Magee, and Glenda Jackson." At the Globe, Northampton.

Diary of a Shinjuku Burglar.

The King of Hearts ++++
Directed by Philippe deBroca, with Allan Bates and Genevieve Bujold. This warm tale of the absurdities of war cannot help but leave one smiling inwardly. The story concerns the occupation of a small French town by Nazi forces who intend to blow it up. In the confusion of the evacuation the local mental institution is left open, and the patients free to roam the streets to create their own world, one which seems more sane than that of those who are trying to destroy one another. Saturday at 8, Franklin Patterson Hall, Hampshire College.

A Touch of Class ++
A married American living in London strikes up an affair with a divorcee only to find things not so carefree. George Segal and Glenda Jackson give decent performances, but the film itself is too full of the typical sexual and romantic cliches one might find in and old Dick Van Dyke show. Campus Cinemas.

Lolita (1962) +++
Stanley Kubrick brings Vladmir Nabokovs black comedy to the screen with skill and taste. The story concerns the longings of one Humbert Humbert for the budding limbs of one spoiled nymphet, Lolita. Starring James Mason, Sue Lyon, Shelley Winters and Peter Sellers. Wed., 4:00, Main Lecture Hall, Franklin Patterson Hall, Hampshire College.

Louisiana Story (1948) ++++
Robert Flaherty's film about a young boy living in the Louisiana bayous when an oil crew arrives, erects a derrick to search for oil and makes a strike. The film was shot silent but seven separate sound tracks were added. Eight months were spent in editing, reducing the 300,000 feet of film shot to 7,000 feet which were used. Lecture Rm. 3 Merrill Science Center, Tues. at 9:30 playing with John Grierson's Night Mail.

M-A-S-H +++
An uproarious, ferociously biting comedy lampooning the institution of war and other sacred cows. Starring Donald Sutherland, and Elliot Gould. Directed by Robert Altman. Fri. at 7 and 9 at Sage Hall, Smith College.

Mean Streets +++
A glimpse into the savage world of Little Italy and the young punks who inhabit it. Sometimes lighthearted, more often bloody and violent with an abundance of explicit language. Fine acting including Robert DeNiro, Harvey Keitel, David Proval, and Amy Robinson. Mt. Farm Mall.

Paper Moon +++
A delightful story about a hustler of bibles and the little girls who join him. It's a truly convincing piece of the thirties, shot in black and white to add to the effect. Tatum O'Neal delivers a memorable performance along with her dad, Ryan. Campus Cinemas.

Persona (1967) ++++
"Director Ingmar Bergman studies search for identity and self-fulfillment through intense, strange, intimately photographic story of two women. An actress retreats into silence, her nurse pours out her own life story, physical attachment grows, and eventually there is an emotional exchange of identity. Beautifully acted, engrossing, but may be obscure for those who don't take to Bergman probing." Sunday at 8:00, Franklin Patterson Hall, Hampshire College.

Play It Again Sam ++++
Woody Allen plays an inept, clumsy movie critic who has little luck with the opposite sex; and so resorts to the Bogart machismo in order to win the girl he loves, played by Diane Keaton. Just about every scene is hysterical with the climax leaving the viewer thoroughly convinced of Allen's comic genius. Fri., 7:30 and 9:30 at Merrill Science Center, Amherst College.

Saboteur (1942) +++
One of Hitchcock's lesser known works. It is a swift high-tension film which throws itself forward so rapidly that it permits slight opportunity for looking back. Hitchcock has filmed one long relentless chase in which an aircraft worker from a California plant races all the way across the country in vague pursuit of a hatchet-faced rat who attempted to set fire to the factory. Starring Robert Cummings and Priscilla Lane. University Film Series, Tues. at 7 and 9, Thompson 102.

Serpico +++
Al Pacino plays an honest cop, who blows the whistle on police corruption in New York. A dramatically explosive film that documents Serpico's fight for his integrity and his life. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Sleeper ++++
Allen is the writer, director and star of this new film which finds him awakening in 2173 after being frozen for 200 years after an operation for an ulcer went amiss. This futuristic satire is full of the usual Allen one liners and sight gags, but with some Chaplinesque slapstick added. Campus Cinemas.

The Sting ++++
Newman and Redford excel as a pair of con men operating in Chicago about the time of the Depression. But the film is more than just these two charming heroes. The elaborately planned con of an underworld kingpin, keeps the audience guessing from the start to finish with the finale leaving one thoroughly astounded. It's an authentic look into the thirties with a number of Joplin rags thrown in. For sheer entertainment it can't be beat. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Take the Money and Run ++++
Woody Allen's most ridiculous and possibly funniest film. Allen plays a nebbish-bank robber whose life is traced from his early family experiences to his present career in crime. It closely parallels the early gangster film, Public Enemy but Allen is not quite as intent upon making a social comment as he is upon mocking every institution which exists. The gags and one-liners are hilarious. He also does a riotous take-off from I Was a Prisoner From a Chain Gang. Sat., 7:30 and 9:30 at Merrill Science Center, Amherst College.

Sunday Bloody Sunday ++++
"Dignified, thoughtful, tender triangle involving successful British doctor, his young male nurse, and women in love with the same boy. Mature look at homosexual love and human hunger. Top acting and good script. Starring Peter Finch, Glenda Jackson and Murray Head. Directed by John Schlessinger." At the Globe, Northampton.

The Thin Man (1934) +++
"In Dashiell Hammet's crime novel of the 20's, the thin man is the murderers first victim. Oddly enough the tag stuck to William Powell (not all that thin) who played Nick Charles the detective, and then starred in four sequels. Myrna Loy played Nora Charles in all the features, and it was said that her domestic scenes with Powell in the original film marked the first time a sophisticated, affectionate marriage had been realistically portrayed on the screen." Sponsored by the Amherst Film Coop, Sunday, 7:30 and 9:30 at Merrill Science Center, Amherst College.

Police get horses

By FRITS GEURTSEN
MDC Staff

The UMass Department of Public Safety has received the go-ahead on their horse patrol proposal, thus becoming the third University in the nation to have a mounted patrol force, according to Alan Lawson, Assistant Director in charge of Administrative Affairs.

"Rutgers and UConn both have horse patrols already," said Lawson, "and they're working out very well."

"We will be receiving three horses in the next couple of weeks, and will also have chosen the officers to be on that patrol by then. The horses and men will be in training for a few months, and should be ready for duty by late June or early July."

The patrol, according to Lawson, will be used during the daytime to begin with, but will be seeing some night duty as the men become more proficient with the horses and it is determined exactly when and where they'll do the most good.

"The patrol is an effort to improve security on this campus," he said. "The horses will give us better vision in the parking lots and will also allow the officers to cover areas that were inaccessible by cars in the past. They'll also be very handy in special events and emergencies, like traffic problems where a patrol car might be blocked from getting to the problem area."

According to Linda Jaiskel-Hamilton, Director of Riding in the Animal Science Department, the horses are currently undergoing blood tests at assure that they are in good health and should be delivered to UMass either this week or the next if the tests are positive.

"The three horses are Standardbreds," she said, "and all three are geldings. They're all between five and six years old which is just the right age to train horses. They're not too young to learn or too old to be useless for the kind of work they'll be doing."

"The horses have nice temperaments. They're the kind that are used as trotters at race tracks. All three are the same color," she said.

The horses were donated to the University by Mr. and Mrs. Philip Ayers of Whately, who had heard that the police were looking for horses for the patrol. The police are still trying to round up the necessary tack and other equipment, according to Lawson.

Lawson estimated that it would cost one dollar per day to care for each of the horses, which comes to an annual total of about $1100 for the three. This money, which will come from the Department's budget, will cover food and veterinary maintainence.

The horses will be lodged at the UMass horse barns, he said, and will be taken care of by the personnel there, in addition to assistants from work-study programs.

"We've ironed out all the major problems," he concluded. "Now it's just a question of getting the patrol ready for duty."

Women gymnasts 3rd in AIWA nationals

By DAVE EIBEL

The UMass Women's Gymnastics Team, victim of subpar judging, a poorly organized meet, and a ridiculous draw, finished third in the 5th annual Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women National Gymnastics Championships held Friday and Saturday at California State University in Sacramento, with a score of 104.8.

Herb Vogel's contingent from Southern Illinois University captured the team competition with a score of 108.6 for their second national crown. In last year's meet in Des Moines, Iowa, SIU finished in second place, .7 points behind UMass.

Meet "dark horse" Southwest Mississippi Junior College coached by Vannie Edwards, competing in the 4th of 5 team groupings captured second place with a score of 107.2.

Judging, organization and position are obviously related to performance of routines but are not supposed to take precedence over the latter. Yet, poor handling of all three things combined to make UMass chances for a second-straight National championship almost impossible.

By being in the first group, UMass was forced to wait a seeming eternity before the competition even started. And once the meet began, an excessive number of judges' discussions prevented UMass from getting any rhythm in the competition. Being in the frist grouping, is a definite disadvantage because the judges take a while to establish a scoring basis for the competitors and usually mark the first teams harder than those following.

But while Coach Virginia Evans said that "Scores usually go up as the meet goes on", the judges seemed to be on a charity kick, becoming much too lenient as the meet progressed. This made it that much easier for SIU and SMJC to vault ahead of UMass and for Springfield College to tie UMass after they protested one of their floor exercise scores after the event had concluded and had it raised by .6 of a point-which is supposed to be illegal.

The Collegian today begins asking graduate students, faculty, administrators and staff to pay 5 cents per copy at the two drop-off points in the Campus Center and the Student Union.

Collection boxes have been attached to the two bins for deposit of nickels. Undergraduates may take the paper free of charge because they have paid for the papers in bulk through a Student Senate appropriation.

Others are asked to watch the Collegian for details of an on-campus early morning distribution system to begin next Fall and subscription blanks for same-day mail delivery in Amherst and nearby towns.

Free Russell Daniels

Demonstration set for tonight

A demonstration will be held at 8 p.m. tonight at the Campus Center to free Russell Daniels, a 28-year-old mentally retarded man serving a life sentence at Norfolk State prison for the 1972 murder of an elderly Springfield woman.

Daniels, who has a second grade reading level, is said to have the comprehension of a 9-year old. He was a resident at Belchertown State School for 13 years before working as a janitor in the apartment block where the woman was murdered.

The new interest at UMass in the Daniels case originated with a group of students in a health care class taught by Ben Ricci, president of the Belchertown State School Friends Assn.

Ricci and his supporters regard the case as a "tragic injustice" and have urged Governor Sargent to investigate the events surrounding the case.

Alto Daniels, Russell's brother, said he has done more police work than the Springfield police have. "I have spent many hours and nights away from my wife and son talking to people on the streets," he said.

Daniels claims he has found the real killer and has given the information to the Springfield police department. He quotes Deputy Police Chief Dennis Shea as saying: "You are on one side an I am on the other. I don't care what kind of information you've got. The case is closed."

Richard Hanlon, a former resident of Belchertown State School and a friend of Daniels' says: "So help me God he is not guilty. Somebody had a chance to blame Russell to cover up somebody else's dirt."

An award-winning documentary produced by WTIC-TV in Hartford titled "A Nine-Year-Old in Norfolk," will be shown throughout today by the Campus Center.

The groups supporting Daniels will meet with legislators in Boston Tuesday and have requested an appointment with the governor. The group is looking for volunteers to make the trip. They will meet in front of Whitemore Administration Bldg. at 9 a.m. Tuesday.

Two die Friday

Deaths ruled natural

By BILL DENSMORE
and FRITS GEURTSEN
MDC Staff

Friday was a bad day on campus.

Two undergraduates died of natural causes in apparently separate incidents, but students of both dormitories in which they lived returned from weekends expressing shock at their deaths.

The body of William E. Burke, 20, a freshman history major, was discovered by his roommate at 5:30 p.m. Friday in his room in Brown, UMass spokesmen said. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. John G. Burke of Abington, Mass.

Cause of death after a Saturday autopsy was ruled as natural. Hampshire County medical examiner Sheldon R. Clapp said Burke had died of Marfam syndrome resulting from a rupture of the aorta, a major artery to the heart. The disease is hereditary, causing weakening of muscles and connective tissue and curvature of the spine.

Police said John R. Hutchins, 27, a sophomore electrical engineering major died early Friday in his single in Dickinson. His body was discovered by a student living next door at 8:23 p.m. Friday evening.

Hutchins, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Earle Hutchins of Swampscott, was in his second semester at UMass after transferring from Merrimack College. Medical examiner Clapp said Hutchins died of Gran Mal Epilepsy and secondary bilateral pulmonary hemorrhages and cerebral edema (inflamation of the brain from fluid or blood.)

Residence area staffs study reorganization

Whitmore and various residence area staffs are still discussing a proposal to reorganize the residence hall system.

The main thrust of the proposal is to combine the Student Affairs and Business staffs of the residence system. It was written up by Vice-Chancellor Gage, Assistant Dean of Students Mide West, Food Services Director Ken Dean and others.

Another proposal was submitted by the Student Senate for residence hall reorganization. However, according to Rick Savini; "That was washed out. Whitmore didn't like it at all." He said the reason was that it named too many names, and that was bound to offend various interest groups.

While Whitmore has been going over their own proposal with the area staffs, no input has been solicited from the students. Mike West claims that the Rents and Fees Committee of the Student Senate has been in "constant touch" with the administration on this matter. However, Rick Savini, Head of Rents and Fees says he gave him "no input" to that at all.

The writers of the proposal say reorganization won't necessarily take place. The proposal says "...there must be a basic change in the residence hall system in the very near future ... The alternative appears to be steady deterioration, and ultimate disaster."

Feedback on this proposal will not be completed until the end of April.

AP bureau chief here

Jim Ragsdale, Boston bureau chief of The Associated Press, will be on campus Wednesday at 3:30 p.m. to meet with interested students.

He will show two 20-minute films — one on freedom of the press and a brand new documentary on the "laserphoto". AP this summer will begin transmitting photos by laser beam. This film shows how the process works.

Mr. Ragsdale has promised to remain as long as students wish to ask questions — about AP, about the films, about journalism.

The event, being arranged by Alvin F. Oickle, Collegian adviser and UMass lecturer in journalism, will be at the Campus Center; room to be announced. Watch the Collegian for announcements.

Emmett Kelly to give benefit for Belchertown State School

The Emmett Kelly Circus will give two performances at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst Tuesday, April 16 for the benefit of Belchertown State School residents.

Starring America's favorite clown, Emmett Kelly, Jr., and with an outstanding roster of animal and clown acts, the circus will be presented in 3 p.m. and 7 p.m. performances in Curry Hicks Cage. The performances are sponsored by student volunteers in the Five College Boltwood-Belchertown Project. All proceeds will benefit the residents of the Belchertown State School.

The Kelly show presents a totally new concept in U.S. circuses, and is designed especially for the youngsters. Its performers work in the European-style single center ring with the entire show running only an hour and a half.

The show boasts a cast of superstar performers, particularly animal and clown acts. TV and motion picture star, Gentle Ben the Bear, the Daktari chimps, the Les Thinis trampoline act and Tony the Wonder Horse are just a few of the many attractions.

Tickets, at $1 for those under 14 and $2 for others, are available at the Student Activities Office at the concourse level 2 in the UMass Campus Center. They are also available at the following locations:

John and Rudy's AG Market at the traffic light in Sunderland; Lizotte's on Main St., Northampton; the Cheese Shop on Main St. in Amherst; Cannon's Pharmacy on Route 116 in South Hadley center; Bartlek's News on Main St., Greenfield; and at Leopold's on Main St. in Belchertown.

N.E. Utilities V.P. wants nuclear power

By BILL DENSMORE
MDC Staff

A Vice-president for the power company that wants to build two nuclear reactor electric generating plants in Montague, twelve miles north of here, said Friday such plants are "easily sabotagable."

Robert Evans, Vice-president for general engineering and construction of Hartford-based Northeast Utilities Service Company, spoke in a Nuclear Energy class here Friday.

"A determined gang can come in and sabotage a nuclear plant, that is a risk that society has to realize," said Evans, adding, "the public has to realize this."

In a brief address and question-answer session with students in Prof. Allan Hoffman's morning class, Evans was otherwise defensive of nuclear power safe and financially feasible.

He described nuclear-produced power as a "near term solution" that "buys us some time" in the impending long-term energy shortage. He said solar power and ocean thermal differences engineering "no question" should be the solution to providing man with the energy he needs fifty to 100 years from now.

Northeast Utilities seeks to build twin 1150 megawatt boiling water nuclear reactors on the Montague Plains. An application for a construction permit to build in the 8,500 population town is expected to be filed by the firm this month.

Much of Evans' presentation demonstrated the apparent low-risk of killing radiation being released from a nuclear power station. He said the changes of such a — reactor melt-down and attendant release of highly radioactive and toxic gases into the air were more than a billion to one.

He said "no plants are being licensed within more than 50,000-60,000 people," so that were there such a radiation release, a city the size of New York wouldn't be wiped out.

He claimed that increased development of nuclear power would save 10-12 million barrels of fuel oil for electricity generation each year. "We're talking a thirty year period from 1981 on when our supply of fossil fuels is not being replaced," he said.

He said tremendous capital funds are needed to build nuclear power plants requiring "a ration of savings to bond coverage of about two to one." But he said, "the environmental benefits we believe are there."

Replying to the allegation that utilities have not placed enough emphasis on the development of solar power, Evans said, "it should be pushed, I vote for that", but added that only 1 per cent of NU's net revenues are spent on research because "we can only research what the Connecticut Public Utilities Service Commission says we can."

Services offered For handicapped

UMass is developing and identifying services for physically disabled students that were previously unavailable or of low visibility.

Through the Coordinator of Handicapped Student Affairs, Ms. Peggy Stevens, student service agencies are cooperating to facilitate the disabled students adjustment to campus life. The University believes that opportunity for study at the state university level should not be denied to the diabled through lack of facilities or special services.

In line with this goal, accomplishments during the past year include:

—establishment of a Braille section in the University Library that includes a 36-volume dictionary and a 200-plus volume encyclopedia (the latter a donation from the Chicopee School System in which it was no longer needed);

—a list of readers, both paid and volunteer, for visually-disabled students; —counseling services ranging from pre-admission to career counseling for the disabled;

—liaison with the Massachusetts Rehabilitation Commission, the Veteran's Administration, the Massachusetts Commission for the Blind and other off-campus agencies;

—a second edition of the "Guide to Campus for Mobility Disadvantaged" has been published. The guide lists the facilities and recent modifications that permit access to those with mobility disabilities — such things as ramps for wheelchairs, adapted lavatories, handicapped parking areas, elevator access, etc.

"Our primary aim is to provide services to disabled students and we welcome inquiries," Ms. Stevens said. The Handicapped Student Affairs Office is located in the Whitmore Administration Building, Room 229D, UMass, Amherst, 01002.

UMass Prof to study P.O. alternatives

Post office alternative forms of service will be studied next academic year by a UMass Amherst business professor.

Assoc. Prof. Kent B. Monroe of the UMass School of Business marketing department, will spend his sabbatical year doing market research for the Postal Rate Commission in Washington, D.C. He and other members of a special team will work toward reducing post office costs and satisfying customer needs. The study will include development and analysis of alternative forms of major mail classifications.

For his participation in the planning, Prof. Monroe received a Sears-Roebuck Foundation grant administered by the American Assembly for Collegiate Schools of Business.

Prof. Monroe and his wife, Norma, live on Pondview Drive, Amherst, with their children, Scott, six and Karen, three.

Town Elections

Amherst voters will go to the polls tomorrow to cast their ballots for Town Officers and Town Meeting Members. The polls in all seven precincts, listed below, will be open from 12:00 Noon until 8:00 p.m.

—Precinct I - North Amherst Parish Hall

—Precinct II - Amherst Fire Station - rear

—Precinct III - Odd Fellow's Hall - Kellogg Ave.

—Precinct IV - Masonic Hall - Main St.

—Precinct V - Fort River School - So. East St.

—Precinct VI - Munson Memorial Library - So. Amherst

Voters who are unsure of their polling place should contact the Town Clerk — 253-3885.

Voters who learn late that they will be out of town on election day have until noon today to come in to the Town Clerk's office and apply for an absentee ballot to be voted in the office.

High hopes for upcoming Russian summit

By KENNETH J. FREED
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon returned from Paris Sunday with high hopes for his upcoming Russian summit and a pledge to revisit France "as soon as I have a good excuse."

The presidential jetliner touched down at nearby Andrews Air Force Base, Md., at 3:24 p.m. EDT.

Nixon departed the French capital after wide-ranging talks with Soviet President Nikolai Podgorny and other world leaders who attended memorial services for the late French President George Pompidou on Saturday.

Alexander M. Haig Jr., the White House chief of staff, said it was clear in those talks that "Soviet leaders were pleased with the progress of discussions" held late last month in Moscow with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger.

Haig said Nixon and Podgorny "anticipate positive results from the upcoming summit." No date has been set for Nixon's trip to Moscow, but Haig indicated that it will be in late June.

The talks with Podgorny, which were held at the U.S. ambassador's residence in Paris, lasted two hours. When Nixon left for the airport, about 200 persons outside the residence shouted, "Vive Nixon" and "Vive le President." Nixon got out of his car, mingled in the crowd and shook hands.

"It's only an au revoir," he told those who pressed in on him. "I'll be coming back. I've had a very nice stay with our friends in France. Of course we weren't able to discuss many questions because of the circumstances, but I want to come back some day."

Nixon and Podgorny discussed U.S.-Soviet trade relations, the agenda for nuclear arms limitation talks during the upcoming summit meeting in Moscow, and a review of Middle East developments.

Podgorny went to the U.S. ambassador's residence for breakfast. The two presidents talked for an hour, with key aides present, over the breakfast table. Then Podgorny and Nixon went into the garden of the residence with only an interpreter for another hour of discussions.

After the meeting with Podgorny, which started 30 minutes earlier than originally scheduled and ran beyond the planned finish time, Nixon met with Japanese Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka. Tanaka had been kept waiting 10 minutes for the end of the talks with Podgorny. Details of Nixon's discussion with Tanaka were not disclosed.

Tornado victims look to future

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

In temporary shelters, living on borrowed goods, the victims of last week's tornadoes behind them Sunday and prepared to resume their daily activities.

The reminders of the storm that swept through 11 states and Canada, claiming some 300 lives and causing uncounted millions of dollars in damage, were everywhere: mass funerals for the victims, disaster relief centers to aid the homeless, shattered buildings.

For some, it was impossible to rebuild. "It just isn't Brandenburg anymore," said Ellis Blake, 67, as he surveyed the wreckage of the tiny Kentucky community where 30 persons dies. Residents of the Ohio River town about 30 miles from Louisville planned a public, nondenominational funeral yesterday.

Federal officials estimated damage to insured private property in tornado-stricken areas at over half a billion dollars. And that figure doesn't count uninsured damage or damage to government property.

More than 6,000 are homeless, according to authorities. Thomas Dunne, head of the Federal Diaster Assistance administration, said the government will do its best to provide shelters, using the nearly 7,000 mobile homes which are stored in warehouses for such purposes. He said, however, that it would take time.

"It's not going to happen in a day or a week," Dunne said Saturday in Atlanta, Ga., after a two-day tour of six states declared federal disaster areas. Officials said the delay stemmed from problems in hooking up the mobile homes to water, sewage and power lines.

Bobby Blalock, a spokesman for the federal disaster center in Dalton, Ga., said Sunday morning that 15 families had been processed at the center "and we expect more this afternoon after church." He said the people sought "temporary housing, loans and some of them wanted a combination of services."

Col Khodofy still leader in Libya

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — Diplomatic and government sources said yesterday that Col. Moammar Khadafy remains the undisputed leader of Libya despite reports elsewhere in the Middle East that he has been stripped of power.

The state news media told Libyans yesterday that Khadafy had turned over some of his duties to Premier Abdel Salam Jalloud, confirming reports which first were published Saturday. But a spokesman for the state agency said Khadafy remained in control of the oil-rich nation.

And the sources said the largely ceremonial duties which Jalloud would assume should not affect Khadafy's position of power.

"It doesn't look like Khadafy's lost any power except handing over some functions such as meeting and greeting dignitaries to Jalloud," said a Western diplomat in Tripoli. But he cautioned that it may take some weeks to fully assess the developments.

Usually well-informed newspapers elsewhere in the Middle East said Saturday that Khadafy, who has threatened to resign a number of times when he was displeased, had been pushed aside.

The authoritative newspaper An Nahar, published in Beirut, said there was "a coup against Khadafy, with his consent." It said the majority of the ruling Revolutionary Command Council was disturbed "by Khadafy's whimsical policies that created negative results on the Arab and international scene." It cited as an example Khadafy's abortive attempt to merge Libya with Tunisia.

Questions about Khadafy's status came following issuance of a decree by the Revolutionary Command Council. It was first made public Saturday in a dispatch by Egypt's official Middle East News Agency.

Libya's official news agency said portions of the decree were first published Sunday in Tripoli newspapers. The decree said:

"The Revolutionary Command Council has issued a decree under which Col. Moammar Khadafy is to devote himself to idealogical and intellectual work and to the popular authorization without prejudice to his functions of the commander-in-chief of the armed forces.

"According to the decree, the prime minister, Maj. Jalloud, shall be in charge of the political, administrative and routine affairs and all protocol activities, including receiving heads of states at airports and seaports and receiving ambassadors as well. Meanwhile the decree shall not affect the authorities and duties of the Revolutionary Command Council..."

Khadafy, who has ruled Libya since taking power in a coup four years ago, is known to be disdainful of protocol normally reserved for heads of state.

Congress to work before vacation

WASHINGTON (AP) Congress faces another possible crisis in the impeachment inquiry and more debate on the issue of campaign spending controls before it can leave at the end of the week on a 10-day Easter recess.

The House Judiciary Committee has set a Tuesday deadline for delivery by the White House of the tapes of 42 presidential conversations.

If the President's aides do not agree to make the material available for the committee's inquiry on the possible impeachment of President Nixon, the panel will meet, probably Wednesday, to determine whether to issue subpoenas for them.

The Senate enters its third week of debate on campaign reform. Up Monday is a vote on an amendment offered by Sen. Herman Talmadge, D-Ga., to make it a crime to cause publication of known falsehoods about a candidate for federal office.

A crucial vote on limiting the debate on the campaign reform bill will come Tuesday. If the necessary two-thirds majority for cloture is not forthcoming, the bill probably will go over until Congress returns April 22. The last cloture attempt failed by two votes.

The House, after disposing of secondary legislation early in the week, is scheduled to take up a sweeping reform bill creating a new federal commission to regulate commodity markets.

With broadened powers and coverage, establishment of the Commodities Futures Trading Commission would represent the most sweeping overhaul in more than a half-century of laws regulating the $500 billion a year business.

A tug of war over funds to speed construction of the new Triton long-range missile submarines is due to be renewed when the House takes up the Defense Department appropriation.

The Appropriations Committee cut out $24.8 million that had been included in the bill to speed production of the Triton from one to two vessels a year. Efforts will be made on the floor to restore the funds.

Reporters learn from "Deep Throat"

NEW YORK (AP) — Two Washington Post reporters who pieced together major Watergate stories say that Hugh W. Sloan Jr., onetime treasurer of President Nixon's re-election committee, was a major source of information for them.

Sloan's role and that of a highly placed administration source, whom the reporters call "Deep Throat," are described by Carol Bernstein and Bob Woodward in their forthcoming book, "All the President's Men." Excerpts appear in the May and June issues of Playboy magazine.

The Washington Post won a Pulitzer prize in 1973 for its investigation of Watergate, almost all of which was done by Bernstein and Woodward.

Many of the Post's stories were developed by persevering on leads bypasses by government investigators and other newsmen, the articles say, but crucial confirmation often came from a handful of sources including Sloan.

In a parenthetical aside, the authors note that Sloan was never identified as a source in Post stories, but that he has now agreed to allow the disclosure of his name. Sloan declined on Sunday to comment on the Playboy excerpts, although he had read the article.

The book will be published by Simon & Schuster on June 18. A spokeswoman for Playboy said the magazine paid $30,000 for the right to excerpt 25,000 words, or about a quarter of the total.

It was from Sloan, former treasurer of the Finance Committee to Re-elect the President, that Woodward and Bernstein said they first learned the names of several key controllers of a secret GOP fund for financing campaign activities against the Democrats.

The article also describes a number of clandestine meetings between Woodward and a members of the executive branch, not identified by name but dubbed "Deep Throat."

"Deep Throat" had access to information at the White House, Justice, the FBI and "reelection committee, the article says. "The man's position in the executive branch was extremely sensitive."

If Woodward wished to set up a meeting with "Deep Throat," according to the article, he would move a flowerpot containing a red flag to the rear of his balcony.

If his contact wanted a meeting, he would circle a number on page 20 of Woodward's home-delivered copy of the New York Times and draw clock hands to designate the time. Woodward did not know how "Deep Throat" got to his paper, the article said.

Woodward had known "Deep Throat" since long before Watergate. The reporter said of his source: "Deep Throat never tried to inflate his knowledge...He was, incongruously, an incurable gossip, careful to label rumor for what it was, but fascinated by it."

At one of their sessions, "Deep Throat" described to Woodward President Nixon's outraged reaction to news leaks about Watergate.

"Nixon was wild, shouting and hollering that, 'We can't have it and we're going to stop it. I don't care how much it costs.'"

Woodward also asked "Deep Throat" about President Nixon's decision to submit L. Patrick Gray's name to the Senate for confirmation as J. Edgar Hoover's successor as FBI director.

"Deep Throat" replied:

"In early February, Gray said, in effect, 'I'm taking the rap on Watergate.' He got very angry and said he had done his job and contained the investigation judiciously, that it wasn't fair that he was being singled out to take the heat. He implied that all hell could break loose if he wasn't able to stay on the job permanently and keep the lid on.

"Nixon could have thought this was a threat, though Gray is not that sort of guy. Whatever the reason, the President agreed in a hurry and sent Gray's name up to the Senate right away..."

Concerning the government's probe, Bernstein and Woodward wrote: "In the biggest, most wide-ranging investigation since the assassination of President Kennedy, the FBI didn't even call the numbers" found in the Watergate defendants' address books.

One night "Deep Throat" told Woodward about the intelligence gathering activities of the Committee to Re-elect the President:

"....A lot of the intelligence gathering was routine. They are not brilliant guys, but it got out of hand. That is the key phrase, the feeling that it all got out of hand...Much of the intelligence gathering was on their own campaign contributors..."

Summing up the Watergate affair, "Deep Throat" was quoted by Bernstein and Woodward as saying it began in 1969 with "the first targets of aggressive wiretapping...the reporters and those in the administration who were suspected of disloyalty.

"Then the emphasis was shifted to the radical political opposition during the antiwar protests. When it got near election time, it was only natural to tap the democrats," they quoted him as saying.

Warplanes added to fighting on Syrian-Israeli front

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Artillery boomed on the Golan Heights for the 27th straight day yesterday. Syria said Israeli warplanes strafed a Syrian army position on Mt. Hermon twice, but Israel denied any new air activity.

On Saturday, Israeli warplanes were used on the Golan front for the first time since the October Middle East war. Israel said they were called in after a Syrian force crossed the truce line and attacked an Israel position on Mt. Hermon at the northern tip of the front.

The Syrian communique said the new attacks began with a strafing run by one jet, followed 22 minutes later by an attack on the same position by two jets. No losses were reported.

The Israeli command said Israeli soldiers were still searching the mountain for the 40-man Syrian force it said infiltrated across the lines the day before.

Meanwhile, thousands followed in the footsteps of Jesus into ancient Jerusalem in a Palm Sunday procession that cut a colorful swath down the Mount of Olives to the walls of the city.

Waving palm leaves and singing hosannahs, the devout performed the annual procession in warm sunny weather.

Boy Scouts, aged nuns, school children and American and European pilgrims made up the crowd that moved down the mountain and along a stretch of four-lane highway before turning into the Via Dolorosa to disperse.

In Tripoli, the state news media told Libyans that Col. Moammar Khadafy had turned over some of his duties to Premier Abdel Salam Jalloud. But diplomatic and government sources said Khadafy is still undisputed leader of the oil-rich nation.

"It doesn't look like Khadafy's lost any power except handing over some functions such as meeting and greeting dignitaries to Jalloud," a Western diplomat in Tripoli said. But he cautioned that it may take some weeks to fully assess the developments.

In Cairo, the weekly magazine Rose el-Youssef said summit talks between President Anwar Sadat and Soviet leaders are expected to take place in the Egyptian capital within a few weeks.

Sadat has been openly critical of Soviet policy toward Egypt before, during and after the October war.

The magazine said the summit was set up following Sadat's talks with Yogoslav President Tito late last month. It said the Soviet leadership sent Sadat an "important message on his return to Egypt which led to the decision to hold the summit." No details were given.

Boyle trial enters third week

By PAUL CARPENTER
Associated Press Writer

MEDIA, Pa. (AP) — The murder trial of W. A. "Tony" Boyle has produced exhibits of gore, evidence of ineptness and documentation of fiscal fraud by many, but there has been little testimony to back the charge of murder.

The trial of the former United Mine Workers president enters its third week Monday with the prosecution pledging it will produce testimony to back its charge that Boyle was responsible for the murders of union rebel Joseph A. Yablonski, his wife and daughter.

One of the scheduled witnesses for the government is William Turnblazer, a 52-year-old Middlesboro, Ky., lawyer who was once president of UMW District 19. He has previously implicated Boyle as the man behind the plot to kill Yablonski.

Yablonski, his wife Margaret and their 25-year-old daughter Charlotte were shot to death by a trio of hired gunmen as they slept in their Clarksville, Pa., home on Dec. 31, 1969.

The murders occurred three weeks after Boyle defeated Yablonski for the union's presidency in an election that was later scuttled by a federal court because of illegalities. Boyle was defeated in a rescheduled election by Arnold Miller, a Yablonski loyalist, and now is in prison on a conviction of misuse of union funds.

The government says District 19 was the union agency that planned and financed the assassination scheme, and Turnblazer is expected to provide a direct allegation linking Boyle and the murder plot.

Members of Special Prosecutor Richard Sprague's staff indicate most of the rest of their case will be based on circumstantial evidence.

The past week's testimony established, in sometimes gruesome detail, how the government alleges the murders were planned, financed, carried out and discovered — and how the subsequent investigation led from three gunmen upward through UMW ranks.

But only two witnesses provided any links to Boyle, and they can be strongly attacked by the defense. One of the gunmen, Paul Gilly, said he was told by others in the assassination plot that orders were coming from Boyle. William Prater, a former District 19 official, said Boyle visited him in jail and told him to "stick to your story" about having nothing to do with the murders.

The 46 witnesses called thus far have covered mostly familiar ground already testified to in past trials and in the confessions of some of the eight others charged in the case.

Dems. unsatisfied with Nixon's VA review promise

WASHINGTON (AP) — Unsatisfied with President Nixon's promise of a full review of Veterans Administration problems, the Democratic congressional leadership has called instead for replacement of Administrator Donald E. Johnson and other top management officials.

Rep. Olin E. Teague, D-Tex., declared in a nationwide radio address Sunday that Johnson had turned the VA into a "dumping ground" for former Nixon campaigners and that the President appeared to have been "completely misinformed" about the agency's shortcomings.

Teague's remarks came as the Democratic leadership response to Nixon's broadcast a week earlier in which the President announced he had directed Johnson to establish "a crack management team" to study complaints over paperwork snarls and hospital conditions. Nixon also said he would name a veterans committee within the White House.

But Teague, former chairman of the House Veterans Affairs Committee, said he sided with "the view of major veterans organizations that a change in top administration of VA is necessary."

"The proposals of the President for self-investigation are to me ridiculous and will not solve the problems of VA," the congressman declared.

Teague said Johnson had drawn upon former employes of the Committee to Re-elect the President to fill important, high-salary positions at VA. They have proved, he said, to be "incompetent, unqualified, inexperienced."

"The President seems to be completely misinformed about the problems," he said. "The agency does not need more committees and self-investigation. It needs a change in top level management."

Hearsts to Mexico on night flight

HILLSBOROUGH, Calif. (AP) — The parents of kidnaped newspaper heiress Patricia Hearst left San Francisco last night on a predawn flight to Mexico.

The Hearst family would not say where Randolph A. Hearst and his wife, Catherine, were staying. However, there were indications their private jet went to La Paz, a fishing resort on the tip of Baja, California.

"Randy said to me he's gone to regroup and kind of get it together and try to find out where he can go from here," said nephew William Randolph Hearst III.

"He doesn't really want to be in this house and he doesn't know what to do so he is going somewhere where he can think about it a little more," said Hearst.

Hearst said his uncle was accompanied by Mrs. Hearst and two of his daughters, Virginia Bosworth, 24, and Anne Hearst, 18

He said they would return immediately if there was any new word about Patricia.

Gaullist support

PARIS (AP) — The Gaullist party threw its backing behind former Premier Jacques Chaban-Delmas yesterday in the bitter election battle to succeed the late Georges Pompidou as president of France.

The decision was taken by the party's central committee. Secretary General Alexander Sanguinetti said the party was not naming a candidate, but only supporting Chaban-Delmas in the race.

Chaban-Delmas, mayor of Bordeaux since 1947 and a wartime resistance leader, appeared at the meeting for about 10 minutes to ask for support. He said he was temporarily withdrawing from the party so he could campaign as a national candidate without party restraints.

The decision seemed to indicate there is no longer any hope for stifling personal political ambitions and forcing an agreement on a single Gaullist candidate.

Ethiopian takeover

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) — Rebel troops took over a government radio station in eastern Ethiopia yesterday and demanded the resignation of the country's deputy chief of staff.

The official Ethiopian news agency quoted Defense Ministry sources as saying the officer, Lt. Gen. Haile Baikedagne, complied.

The radio in Harar, 230 miles east of Addis Ababa, said the Eastern Command had imposed a curfew until further notice "because of corrupt and criminal officials still in power in Ethiopia."

The broadcast said that the troops' action had nothing to do with the government nor was it directed against the people.

Kalmbach on money

Herbert W. Kalmbach declined yesterday to confirm or deny published reports that C.G. "Bebe" Rebozo told him he had given money intended as political contributions to President Nixon's brothers and personal secretary.

The reports, published by the Washington Post and New York Times, quoted sources as saying Kalmbach testified under oath to Senate Watergate committee about a conversation with Rebozo.

Those stories quoted the sources as saying that Kalmbach said Rebozo told him that he, Rebozo, had given part of a secret cash contribution to F. Donald Nixon and Rose Mary Woods, Nixon's secretary.

The Times' story also included Edward Nixon as an alleged recipient of the money.

"The only response I can make is no comment," Kalmbach, Nixon's former personal attorney, said in a telephone interview from his home in Newport Beach, Calif. "I'm sorry I can't be more helpful."

Fraud is held possible in Nixon tax returns

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service apparently has yet to close its files on whether fraud was committed in the preparation of President Nixon's tax returns in recent years.

IRS Commissioner Donald C. Alexander yesterday confirmed a White House statement that no cause had been found for leveling such a charge against Nixon personally.

But when asked if the same were true of those who helped draft the returns, he replied: "I can't comment on what action the IRS may be or may not be taking with respect to others."

Alexander said also that "you're talking about an IRS investigation" when newsmen brought up reports that parts of a $100,000 campaign contribution from Howard Hughes had been passed to President Nixon's personal secretary and his two brothers. He would not elaborate.

His comments came on the CBS radio-television program "Face the Nation."

Another question left open by the commissioner was speculation that the IRS included a five per cent penalty for negligence in its finding of $432,787.13 in underpaid taxes for the years 1969-72 for Nixon. The White House announced last week that Nixon would pay the entire amount, plus interest, even though part of the total, that for 1969, could legally be withheld because the statute of limitations has expired for that year.

The White House statement noted the IRS report "rebuts any suggestion of fraud on the part of the President," but made no such claim for those who prepared his returns. Nor did the statement address the question of negligence or negligence penalty.

The IRS chief also refused elaboration on the matter of the Hughes money. In that case, the President's friend Charles "Bebe" Rebozo has said he kept the entire amount locked up for three years before returning it to the Hughes organization.

However, published reports late last week indicated that onetime Nixon attorney Herbert G. Kalmbach had testified privately that Rebozo told him in confidence that he had passed portions of the money to the Nixon brothers and Miss Rose Mary Woods. Kalmbach's account has been denied by the other principals or their attorneys.

Wallace, caucus try OEO save

WASHINGTON (AP) — A diverse band of supporters has formed to try to save the controversial government child, the Office of Economic Opportunity, from death at age 10.

President Nixon left OEO out of his new federal budget, which means an end to the office as such by June 30, unless Congress does something about it.

The administration wants to dismantle the agency and transfer its work to other existing agencies and departments.

The lineup for keeping OEO includes the Congressional Black Caucus, Alabama Gov. George Wallace, Republican Mayor Richard Lugar of Indianapolis, Democratic Mayor Richard Daley of Chicago, and some 35 governors.

Basically, House supporters of OEO are working to extend the agency and its programs for another three years at their 1972 spending total of $1.4 billion.

Funded would be the OEO's community Action Program (CAP) which includes Head Start for preschoolers, Follow Through for elementary school children, and a range of other programs from day care to services for the aged in rural as well as urban areas.

There are some 900 CAP programs across the country which employ 185,000 persons, a good number of them ex-welfare recipients.

Another, subtle plus, according to one of the chief OEO supporters, Rep. Augustus Hawkins, D-Calif., has been that local politicians have found in CAP a buffer, with problems of the poor tending to end up in OEO's lap rather than theirs.

Nixon said his aim in leaving OEO out of his budget was to let local politicians decide what programs they want to keep and pay the costs themselves.

Hawkins says the poor have the lowest local priority and that the Nixon move would result in killing two-thirds of the OEO program.

Justice Dept. thought phones tapped, AIM defense says

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Defense attorneys in the Wounded Knee trial have obtained a letter indicating that top Justice Department officials thought the telephone in the South Dakota village may have been monitored illegally.

Asst. U.S. Atty. R.D. Hurd, chief prosecutor in the trial, gave the letter to defense attorney Mark Lane on Saturday.

Prosecutors and the FBI have been denying for the last three weeks that the only telephone line into Wounded Knee during the 71-day occupation last year by Indian militants had been illegally monitored.

American Indian Movement leaders Dennis Banks and Russell Means are accused in a 10-count indictment of burglary, theft and other crimes in connection with the occupation.

Their trial has been in recess for three weeks while U.S. District Court Judge Fred Nichol holds an evidentiary hearing on defense claims that federal officials used an illegal wiretap when they added another phone to the line at a federal roadblock outside the village. Several FBI agents testified that they had monitored conversations on the line.

The letter from W. Mark Felt, a high-ranking FBI official based in Washington, to Asst. Atty. Gen. Henry Petersen of the Justice Department's criminal division was a comment on the FBI's application for a court-approved wiretap on the line, which was turned down.

"Your feeling that our application in the Wounded Knee case was based on information from an illegal wiretap concerns me greatly," Felt said in his letter to Petersen.

He said the information in the application had come from two informants, whom he did not name because they asked that their identities be protected. Felt said the informants provided their information on March 14 and March 15, 1973.

The last application submitted to the Justice Department for approval of the wiretap was dated March 13, 1973.

U.S. companys cut investing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Many U. S. industries have cut back their 1974 investment plans because of the energy shortage, although the total investment outlook remains about the same, the Commerce Department reported yesterday.

The department said a big 7.3 per cent increase in investment in the petroleum industry nearly offset declines in most other industries.

Total 1974 investment by all industry is estimated at $112.7 billion, only $60 million less than was planned before the energy shortage became serious.

The information was obtained in a Commerce Department survey during January and February in which businesses were asked if they had changed their investment plans because of the energy shortage.

The survey appeared to show some concern, but no great alarm, on the part of business over the long-range effect of the shortage on the economy.

About 20 per cent of the firms said they had changed their spending plans, the department said.

Most of these had cut back on their investments, led by the airlines industry where spending was down 3 per cent, or $60 million, from earlier plans.

Warning on schools

BOSTON (AP) — Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn warned young people Thursday not to jump into private business and technical schools under the lure of a "fast talker's tongue."

He defended his own record on such schools and praised a newspaper series on shoddy practices of some schools as a "fine consumer service." That series — which ran in the Boston Globe — had criticized him for not doing more.

Quinn urged newspapers to scrutinize advertisements from such schools to make sure they were legitimate.

He told newsmen that action by his office resulted in the closing of three dozen schools. Last year, he said, "We secured refunds totalling $13,000, and we had only three dozen complaints."

He said complaints about such schools had dropped 70 per cent since licensing regulation that he sponsored became law in 1972.

Quinn said he would try to better coordinate efforts by state and federal agencies which watch over the schools.

Legion and veterans

BOSTON (AP) — The government must do more to get jobs for the Vietnam veteran and improve his educational benefits, Robert E. Eaton, national commander of the American Legion, said.

"The Vietnam veteran is in the largest group of unemployed," Eaton said. "The U.S. Department of Labor has been given funds to get more personnel and we feel that much more can be done for the nearly half a million unemployed in this group."

Eaton, addressing a weekend conference of legionnaires, remained firm in his opposition to a blanket amnesty for those who refused to fight in Vietnam.

"America owes much to those who served," Eaton said. "America owes nothing to those who refused to serve."

Monthly bills

CRANSTON, R.I. (AP) — Electric customers should be able to pay their bills monthly instead of every other month, says James A. Murphy, Democratic councilman at large here.

Murphy said yesterday he will introduce a resolution in the council April 22 asking the state legislature and the state Utilities Commission to require electric companies to read meters and send bills each month.

The state's electric companies now send bills every other month.

Murphy said if bills were sent monthly, they would be easier to pay and customers could make more frequent changes in how much electricity they use.

Resignation call

NEW BEDFORD (AP) — The New Bedford Standard-Times, a politically independent newspaper that supported re-election of President Nixon in 1972, called for his resignation today.

The newspaper, which has a circulation in southeastern Massachusetts of approximately 50,000, said the report on Nixon's back taxes was "the final straw."

"We have made a determined effort to be fair to Mr. Nixon through months of revelation, belated and unsatisfactory explanation, the lack of White House candor, the whole gloomy aura of administrative arrogance, ineptitude, skull duggery and tough-it-out reaction that have followed Watergate," the newspaper said in its lead editorial.

"But, this is the final straw, and we believe that a majority of Americans-striving and often sacrificing to meet the tax obligations of the federal government — will agree that it is.

"If Mr. Nixon cares about the United States — and he maintains that he does — he should resign from the presidency without delay, for the good of this nation and the troubled millions who yearn for White House leadership in which they can once more have faith," the editorial said.

Agnew in jail?

BOSTON (AP) — U. S. Attorney George Beall, who prosecuted Vice President Spiro Agnew on tax evasion charges, said Saturday he disagreed strongly with Atty. Gen. Elliot Richardson over whether Agnew should go to jail.

Beall said he wanted to send Agnew to jail instead of allowing him to resign. But he said he now feels that Richardson was right and that resignation was the best way to handle the matter with dignity.

Beall declined to comment on Agnew's upcoming disbarment proceeding. But he said it would be deplorable to let convicted felons practice law.

"The very best pathway to both a better example and reversal of reduced public confidence in our system is enforcement of the law, in letter and in spirit, with one standard for all, regardless of social position, political office, or financial worth," he said at a Common Cause symposium.

NORTHAMPTON, (AP) — A section of a 19th century canal would be restored under a grant request submitted to the Massachusetts Bicentennial Commission.

The request from the Northampton Historical Commission would help create a 10.3 acre part including a restored portion of the Northampton-New Haven Canal, a major source of trade between Northampton and Long Island Sound from 1835 to 1847.

The City of Northampton would contribute $15,000 toward the project.

Fatal hotel fire

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — A 35-year-old unemployed Springfield man, his clothes ablaze, plunged to his death Sunday from the fifth-floor window of the Mayflower Hotel, police said.

Police said Robert Stokes had been doused with gasoline in his hotel room and set on fire before his fall.

Stokes' next-door neighbor, Frank Clifford, 28, was arrested shortly after the incident and charged with first degree murder and arson, police said. He was held without bond and was to be arraigned in Springfield District Court Monday.

Deaths ruled natural...

He said outcome of a Saturday autopsy was pending after the results of a toxicology report. Clapp said there was no evidence of drugs in Hutchins body other than those prescribed for his epilepsy.

Edwin D. Harrington, a former Army medic in Vietnam, lived on Burke's floor in Dickinson in Orchard Hill.

"I tried to revive him," Harrington said, "but he didn't have any pulse." Harrington and Burke's roommate discovered his body at 5:30 about an hour after other students had seen him walking a corridor of the dorm.

"He was only here one semester and it was in the middle of the year when most people have already made their friends," Harrington said. He said Burke was a junior transfer who studied a lot.

"He wasn't a very healthy looking person, so I guess it wasn't really a complete surprise," Harrington said.

Burke's father said by phone from Abington his son was tall and thin and was interested in chess and music. He had transferred from Bates College in Maine where he made the deans list.

Burke's father, said Marfam syndrome caused curvature of the spine "so his death, though not expected, was not totally a surprise."

The other dead student, John Hutchins, had epilepsy since high school when he had played hockey as a goalie. Friends, who called him "Jack", said he was a dedicated student who had been elected by fifty-four students as floor representative during the fall and was actively involved in student government.

Scott D. Binder, 18, a freshman who lived next to Hutchins, said he liked to get up early for morning classes. "His fits came on and they came strong," Binder said, "but he told us to just leave him alone and not worry about it."

"A lot of people knew him all around the dorm. He was very outgoing, and a lot of people liked him."

Hutchins, short, medium-build, black mustache and blue eyes, "was very much involved in house affairs," according to Regina H. Korpela, 60, the house mother of Brown dormitory where he lived on the sixth floor.

"I feel very badly about it. He was a real sensitive human being. He always wanted to help. He knew so much about classical music — even Grieg and Sibelius," she said.

Editorial quotes on the upcoming impeachment

In the upcoming months the subject of impeachment will be more and more mentioned in the news. With the many references to the topic in television, radio and newspapers the Collegian believes its audience should be well informed on what the political climate of the nation is. We have collected a random sample of opinions to show you what the current trend of thinking is

There is no way, even if there were a desire to do so, for the committee or the full House to avoid a vote on this momentous issue. For these bodies are following a procedure prescribed in the Constitution itself. And by now it is clear that the committee's staff and majority and minority counsel, John Doar and Albert Jenner, have done a most conscientious job both in trying to obtain all possible evidence and also in trying to avoid the slightest appearance of the sort of leaks and sensationalism that made the Senate Watergate Committee hearings subject to criticism despite their great value to the nation.

In its long labors, the House Judiciary has had to contend with frequent and massive White House attempts to keep evidence from it. And it has also had to consider the claims of supporters of Mr. Nixon and even of the President himself, at his press conference of last Feb. 25, that "a criminal offense on the part of the President is the requirement for impeachment."

We urge the committee to give the latter claim short shrift. Prof. Raoul Berger's book, "Impeachment: The Constitutional Problems," refers to 13 impeachments in which no criminal offense was present and says this by no means "exhausts the list..." And a scholarly study published last January by the Association of the Bar of the City of New York reached the conclusion "that the rounds for impeachment are not limited to indictable offenses."

What is really involved in the impeachment proceedings is not whether a crime has been committed personally by the President of the United States, but whether he has so conducted himself in office that the welfare of the nation requires urgently the taking of steps toward his removal from that office.

—Boston Globe (April 6, 1974)

The major concern is to determine whether the President committed impeachable offenses by obstructing justice in the Watergate coverup, by ordering or approving illegal invasions of the constitutional rights of individuals through such means as break-ins and wiretaps. These major items, plus perhaps a few others, will give the Judiciary Committee more than a handful. Moreover, time is important; if the committee us to come anywhere near meeting the April 30 target date set by Chairman Rodino, it must limit the probe to areas that appear most productive.

—Washington Star News (also March 27, 1974)

In the interest of justice, e House Judiciary Committee ought to honor any reasonable request from President Nixon, including some that it may not be strictly bound to honor.

The national interest in seeing the sordid Watergate mess brought to a conclusion that will be acceptable to an overwhelming majority of the people overrides all other considerations. This is no time for legalisms.

Having said that, however, we must go on to say that the president appears to be asking not merely that he be assured justice, but that he be allowed to dictate the terms of the inquiry, that he be able to control all the procedures and that he be able to withhold evidence the committee feels is essential.

Though he proclaims his willingness to cooperate, the president's strategy seems to be to stall, to frustrate, to retreat from one defense to another. He is probably correct in his apparent assumption that the committee and the country have no stomach for seeing him impeached on any kind of procedural question, but the committee and the country are not being made more dispassionate by the administration's tactics.

—Detroit Free Press (March 27, 1974)

As William Pitt Fessenden put it in opposing the impeachment of President Andrew Johnson, an impeachable offense must be "of such a character to commend itself at once to the minds of all right thinking men, as beyond all question, an adequate cause. It should...leave no reasonable ground of suspicion upon the motives of those who inflict the penalty."

History shows that the authors of the constitution did not mean to limit impeachment to indictable criminal offenses. We should set no precedent which would limit the impeachment process in the future more than the founding fathers did. At the same time, however, a political and moral judgment must be made as to whether the rounds for impeachment and the evidence for conviction in the present case will convince all right thinking men.

—Atlanta Journal (March 17, 1974)

The House Judiciary Committee, the first bar of judgment facing President Nixon, is probably the least representative committee in the House of Representatives.

This group of 38 does not reflect the political ambitions or professional aspirations of their fellow 397 representatives

The Judiciary Committee is issue-oriented. It is the least parochial of House committees and probably has a livelier regard for the national interest than, say, the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries or the Interior Committee

Not so long ago the rules for success in Congress required a freshman to angle for a committee assignment with ready access to the pork barrel. Appropriations, controlling all the money, was a plum Ways and Means was another because it wrote the tax laws.....By the tribal standards of reverence for custom and radition that once ruled Congress, the Judiciary Committee is a wild bunch, a group of wild-eyed radical runaways.

But by the standards of American life and law, the committee is staid, square, and a cross-section of society — very much, in fact, like your average grand jury.

—Martin F. Nolan (March 14, 1974)

A strong argument can be made that the President is entitled to know the general outline of the evidence against him before the debate begins on the House floor. This is not just a common criminal proceeding. It involves the highest oofficial of the land and questions of the gravest national import. The President ought to have some representation during the proceedings. Ordinarily, it could be assumed that the committee's minority counsel, Albert Jenner, would keep a sharp eye out for the President's interest. But that does not seem to be the case; rather Jenner appears to be adopting a non-partisan posture.

Estelle wrong on Panama

To The Editor:

As a Panamenian I consider myself well-informed on the history of Panama. Awareness has come not only through observation but also through very fine primary and secondary sources. Bob Estelle is a man who lacks knowledge on the history of Panama. The article possesses information which is wrong, out-of-context, infantile and just plain irresponsible.

In a period of two years the Collegian has deteriorated from a high-quality university newspaper to one in which the functions of a college newspaper are misinterpreted. Bob Estelle is not important, to attempt to ridicule him is wasteful, since he will continue to write in the manner to which he is accustomed as long as the Collegian philosophy allows all those like him to.

The basic issues with every newspaper are freedom and responsibility. Throughout the year the Collegian has answered attacks with little homelies on freedom of the press because it frequently forgets its responsibility. To inform us of facts. To spread knowledge, food for thought. To act as a guiding beam through the college period, time so many attitudes matured and prejudices settled. All of these functions are dependent on truth, which is no longer being written in this newspaper. I ask Karen Lynch to resign for the job she is not doing and to the writers to question themselves twice whether they have full knowledge of the subject they are writing on. The Collegian is further dividing this polarized campus. Like so many, all it produces in me now is hate.

Vote on April 9

To The Editor:

On Tuesday next, April 9th, the people of Amherst go to the polls to vote for the candidates of their choice for several offices, including those of selectmen and the school committee.

Let me urge all registered voters to make the extra effort needed to get to the polling stations in order to exercise their franchise. It is an understandable reaction for the UMass student not to be particularly interested in an election the outcome of which is unlikely to have much influence on his or her future. However, especially after only so recently winning the right to participate in such elections, let us demonstrate our concern for the responsibilities of good citizenship with a heavy turnout. The polling stations are open from 12 noon until 8 p.m.

Arthur R. Quinton

Write on Zamir

To The Editor:

I am not an avid follower of UMass student politics. Far be it from me to unweave this tangled impeachment web — to sort out the facts from personality and sensationalism games. However, after reading Tim O'Brien's response to Zamir Nestelbaum's editorial of April 3rd, I can't help but wonder if this same vindictiveness was at the root of his drive to impeach Apostola.

A true reformer can stand on his facts, refute opponents point by point. If one's need to exhibit a "principle" is so fanatic that he must scrounge for facts with which to perform, he can degenerate to personal attacks on his adversaries' intelligence and ability, rather than on their views. O'Brien did make a point or two, perhaps validly. The mass of his "refutation," however, was mere subjective attack.

What then can I conclude about O'Brien's cause? To bolster his position by disparaging Nestelbaum's writing ability is absurd, unless an attack on Tim O'Brien automatically denotes poor writing "utterly lacking in intellectual content." It takes some pretty intense mind games to make oneself ignore that Zamir is an articulate and perceptive writer who makes his points, if at times strangely, nonetheless well. Please stick to the points.

The role you have chosen, Timothy, is not that of a newspaper satirist, but of a crusader. In the future, if your grand crusades have cause, it might be wise to remember that good little martyrs treat their critics with respect.

Balagura: insulting, offending

To The Editor:

In reference to Saul Balagura's Psychology 230, Emotion and Motivation lecture last Tuesday morning, I wonder, did he realize one of the students present that day had just recently had a leg amputated?

My father, also, is missing a leg, but I know for a fact that he does not consider himself a "degenerate". He is capable of doing most things well, if not better in some cases, with the help of an artificial limb, than I am with both real appendages. Unlike Mr. Balagura, I think, he is a gentle, kind and caring man; he does not feel the need to "put a gun to his head and commit suicide". He knew than, and is constantly reassured, that he is needed, that many are concerned for him.

I do not know the above mentioned student personally. I do not even know his name. From mere observation, though, I recognize one female who is constantly at his side. I cannot believe that he has felt, or does he feel, as mangled and unwanted as you suggest you would or he should.

I, by no means, consider myself an expert on the effects of such traumatic experiences. Maybe I've assumed wrong. Maybe my father has succeeded in brainwashing me. The only thing I can be anywhere sure of is the fact that Mr. Balagura, to some extent, embarrassed, offended and-or insulted his student. Surely even he can see that an apology is called for.

Funny letters

Letters to the Editor are usually the funniest part of a newspaper, and in the Collegian's case, where everything not written in Sanskrit is published, they're even funnier.

Only having written on the editorial pages for one semester, I haven't paid strict attention to "Letters" for very long. But I've seen enough at this point to want to reply to some of them.

So here goes:

To William Troy and Tim O'Brien, who wrote letters attacking Zamir Nestelbaum and Barbara Voorhees after they wrote columns that described student government, and area government in particular, in less than savory terms— No one except you two, who are both involved in area government, has written in with any other nice words about said government or to criticize Nestelbaum's or Voorhees' positions.

Might there be a message for you?

To Susan M. Mulcahy, who wrote in saying it was absurd to expect Grad students to have to pay for the Collegian (she also said she was insulted) — you've got more nerve than an abcessed molar, expecting undergrads to pay for the Collegian while you get it for free. Do you also expect undergrads to pay for your food? Gas? Books? It's grad leeches like you, taking as much as you can from undergrad services and laughing when you're asked to pay, that make me hope someone will write nasty graffiti all over the Grad Research Towers.

To Robby Fair, whose letter attacked Steve Tripoli's column about the recent Third World statement on racism in the Collegian— Nice language. Some day you might be able to write an intelligent (or semi) letter without resorting to personal attacks and gutter semantics.

To Jim Lindsey, who wrote in criticizing stories by Gary Gomes and Noel Conley, as well as a cartoon by Don McGilvray. Lindsey, in his capacity as Chairperson of the Campus Center Board of Governors, felt that the BOG had been slighted, and the facts about it weren't accurate. In other words, the Collegian News Editor a year ago, Lindsey came to see me, crying piteously about how a grad student (which he is) couldn't possibly be elected to a high position on the BOG. Shortly, shortly, shortly thereafterward, he was elected Chairperson.

Distorted facts? Inaccuracies? Jim Lindsey, I quote from an unimpeachable source: We reap what we sow.

To Joe Formica, who wrote a letter saying that President Nixon is a person, and thus should not be treated as badly as he has been— Nixon refused to let himself be prosecuted and-or investigated as a person. Rather, he hides behind his office and position and thus forces people to attack the facade he sets up. Your compassion is commendable, but that's all.

To Saul Balagura, M.D., PH.D., P.D.Q., S.O.B., who was attacked by Barbara Voorhees for calling his students imbeciles and in general treating them like change from a nickel, and who replied by admitting the charges and then listing ways students try to get good marks (all sarcastic),— You suggest your students study; I suggest that the contempt for study that you perceive they show is a direct result of the contempt you show for your students and education.

To any other pip whom I've missed—keep writing, for the errors of your logic are the sunshine of my day.

Loyal opposition

Last Thursday night NBC aired an hour interview program, called The Loyal Opposition, with Ed Newman as host. It was a chance for the "leaders" of the Democratic Party to air their individual views, and to set some sort of theme for the upcoming State and Congressional races, as well as the Presidential Contest of 1976. The theme was party unity, with those present echoing the feeling that "everyone's welcome", with the most important task being the election of Democrats, period. Of course we've heard it all before, and while the air was filled with friendship, one couldn't help seeing the hungry look in Sen. Jackson's eyes. He frantically attempted to get his points across, usually one octave or more above the others. Scoop is a paradox; on the one hand a cold warrior, and on the other a gutsy Senator who stood up to the big oil companies. He can talk at length about the price we're paying for detente with our old enemy, and in the next breath take up the sword for the worker who can't make ends meet on a meager salary. He enjoys labor support, as well as business support. He's called a conservative, a middle of the roader, and even an FDR liberal. And Thursday night he was sitting with Robert Straus, (Mr. Dynamic), George McGovern, and Ted Kennedy, and sounding like a man off and running, and to hell with everyone else.

Mayor Daley was hooked up to the meeting via television, and he had pretty much the same things to say. His idea was to concentrate on the pocketbook issues, and let Watergate take care of itself. He made the point that nothing concerns voters more than unemployment, high food prices, and inflation. Of course this approach wins elections, and if anyone should know about that, Daley should.

Then the inevitable was discussed; the future plans of George Wallace, or to be more exact, the effect he will have on the Party. The reaction was curious, and really not what I had expected. Ted Kennedy commented that the Wallace people are not the sole possesion of Wallace himself, and that a Presidential candidate could receive their support, provided he was responsive to their needs. It sounds to me like a Wallace strategy, minus Wallace. I don't know if they can do it or not, but what it amounts to is pulling the rug out from under the Governor, to keep him off the ticket. It won't be easy, but worth a try in any case.

Of course this is all nothing really new, the Democrats have been talking about unity for years. Just the other day Walter Mondale was on Martin Agronsky's Evening Edition, (a good show, by the way), and he stated that if he came to a decision to run for President, he would go full barrell no matter who else was running. The question was put to him in reference to Ted Kennedy. Now nobody's denying his right to make the run if he wants to, but how many more will there be like him? Granted, he's an attractive candidate, and could be very successful, but first he must show the people something besides his good looks and libertarian good intentions. In short, he's just not very well known. Yes, I know it's early yet, but you know the old story about the bird and the worm? At any rate, the point is that once the primary's start, all that unity business goes the way of most good intentions. They are a great test of vote getting and campaigning ability, but they're also at the root many hard feelings come Convention time.

And speaking of Conventions, one of the reforms to be practiced for the first time in 1976, will be the abolition of the winner take all delegation. In other words, the delegations will be apportioned to the percentage of votes received by any one candidate. This is sure to lead to some interesting goings-on, as note the tactics of the Massachusetts delegation last time, when McGovern wanted Kevin White on the ticket. Unbelievable shenanigans on that one. But such is the life of a delegate, I suppose. At any rate, the Democrats will have to be really sincere about this unity thing, or the big chance could blow up in their faces. The opportunity to regain the White House has never been better, but they still need a candidate. So careful, careful, because it almost seems too good.

But basically I agree with Kennedy's analysis of the Wallace syndrome. So does Scoop Jackson. He realizes what might happen if a liberal is nominated President, and there is resistance to putting Wallace on the ticket. Scoop is running for President, but he's not too proud to take second best. So before you choke on your beer the next time he comes screaming onto the tube, think about what the alternative could be. He becomes more palatable that way. And besides, he and Ted looked pretty chummy the other night.

P.S. Just one other, non political comment, if you please. There's been a lot of opinions expressed lately concerning the Academy Awards Show. Let me say, that no one ever deserved a Best Actors award more than Jack Lemmon. He's a great actor, and a great human being. He added class to a sometimes classless show. He deserved it, hands down, and don't let anyone tell you any different.

Help Daniels

Policy Editorial

Tonight at 8 p.m. in rooms 171 and 173 in the C.C. there will be an organizational meeting for students who plan to demonstrate at the State House in Boston, Tuesday, for the freedom of Russell Daniels. This mentally retarded black man is now serving a life sentence in Norfolk State Prison for the murder of an elderly Springfield woman, a murder that people who know Russell, to a man, say he is not capable of committing. Also at the meeting the award-winning WFSB-TV (channel 3) documentary on Daniels, "A Nine-Year-Old in Norfolk Prison" will be shown.

Anyone who sees that documentary or who is familiar with the Daniels case at all cannot help but be shocked by the actions of the Springfield Police Department. The Police picked up Daniels, who worked as a part-time janitor in the same building as the murder victim, initially as a witness. After seven hours — without a telephone call, an attorney present, or family allowed to see him — Daniels was released. This man, with the mind of a nine year old, had signed a statement admitting the murder. In court on the witness stand Russell could not read that statement, except for a few simple words, and after it was read to him by his lawyer he could not tell the jury what it meant. And yet he was convicted — solely on the strength of that statement. The police got their man.

Your reactions to the documentary can be channeled into constructive action by participating in the demonstration in Boston Tuesday. Demonstrators will be leaving Haigus Mall (The area between Whitmore and SBA) at nine a.m. To be aware of the Daniels case is to be committed to his release. There are very few other causes where the line separating awareness and action is so readily crossed.

The demonstration in Boston will center on Governor Sargent, who, while professing a genuine concern for the mentally retarded, his action or more accurately inaction on the Daniels case — is nothing short of shameless. Secretary of Human Affairs Peter Goldmark, who also has failed to act on this matter, must shoulder the responsibility, too. Legislators will meet with the demonstrators in Boston. Hopefully action on their part will follow, even though it involves a politically treacherous issue — the establishment of civilian review boards to investigate Police Practices.

Dr. Ben Ricci, UMass Professor of excercise science and president of The Friends of Belchertown Association and Russell's brother, Alto, a UMass senior, have worked for over a year for Russell's release. Now there is a growing number of students at Umass willing to spend time and energy for the same cause. See the documentary tonight. Talk to Dr. Ricci or Alto Daniels. Then decide if you think that Russell Daniels' case is worth your participation in the demonstration Tuesday.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed, and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

Working in Haiti

UMass zoologist goes batty

It took UMass zoologist David Klingener two weeks of nocturnal vigilance, more than 1000 square feet of mesh netting, a thick pair of gloves, and a dozen colleagues, but eventually he bagged 85 bats on a Haitian mountainside earlier this year.

The collection, now at the University, includes two unexpected prizes: the first two "fishing" bats, with a two-foot wing span, ever netted in Haiti, and three "flower" bats, the first ever caught by a zoologist.

Approaching the first of the flower bats, Klingener recalls that he knew it was "something different. Black wings, delicate bone structure, silver-gray fur all over the body. It's a beautiful species—well, beautiful as bats go."

Klingener, who is 36, went to Haiti during the January intersession at the invitation of University of Vermont professor Charles Woods, one of his former graduate students who was heading up a zoological field expedition to the island. Klingener had been to Central America on a similar foray, but that was 10 years ago.

This time, coming upon the three flower bats was the high point of the two-week trip, but Klingener couldn't identify the species before two weeks of "mad searching through the literature" when he came back to Amherst. Until his discovery, its existence was known only from bone fragments uncovered 50 years ago.

Klingener sees the study of bats as important to the understanding of the evolution of all forms of life.

Klingener added that such expeditions also are an attempt "to identify what species live where. That is necessarily the first step in understanding their evolutionary patterns—patterns which give more insight into the changes in the natural environment of different regions."

Bat-catching is best done in the air, not on the ground. To do this, seven Japanese mist nets, each 15-feet long and 7-feet high, were erected by the scientists across a field, just above the waist-high vegetation of assorted grasses, flowers and small plants.

The nets, made of fine mesh, provided more than 1000 square feet of bat-catching space.

The zoologists kept the nets up 24 hours a day and checked them for bats at 10 p.m., midnight, and 5 a.m. Klingener said the usual "take" was between five and 10 bats a night.

A few bats, entangled low in the nets, were eaten by small land animals before the zoologists could get to them. Klingener and Ginny Naples, a UMass animal science doctoral student on the trip, guessed that flesh-eating cat-like mongooses were the culprits.

The bat retreivers themselves, including most of the 13-member troupe, had no mongoose troubles, but were forced to wear gloves when denetting the bats.

Naples said the bats were killed in the nets. "They are squirming, wiggling and biting when you grab at them," she said, "You'd run the risk of ripping the net by taking them out alive."

A quick shot of air, squeezed from a syringe, punctured their hearts. "It's the most humane way we know of (for killing them)," Klingener explained. "They die instantly."

The dead bats were preserved on the spot by formaldehyde injections, placed one by one into small plastic bags, then stored in boxes for Klingener's return to Amherst. The federal Food and Drug administration approves this technique, Klingener said, but frowns on researchers bringing live bats into the country.

This newest bat catch is now in the zoology department's teaching and research museum in the Morrill Science building. Klingener estimates the UMass total bat collection is near 250.

Naiads '74

The University Aquatic Art Club, better known as the Naiads, is busy putting the finishing touches on their spring performance. The Naiads have been practicing since September, learning and perfecting dolphins, walkovers, kips, ballet legs and the other stunts, twists and spins found in aquatic art.

The primary purpose of aquatic art is the communication of ideas, feelings, emotions or experience. The Naiads attempt to do this primarily thru aquatic movement. The music and movement as well as the title, costume and lighting presented should all blend to clarify the development of the theme of each composition.

Under the supervision of Ms. Pat Griffin and club President Michelle Theberge, the club has put together an inspiring show. Dumbo the Elephant and Dracula along with many other creations, on April 10, 11, 12, or 13 at 8:00 p.m. in WOPE pool. Tickets are now available at WOPE for $.50-ID, and $1.50 for others.

Unique workshop

The education team at Room To Move will be offering a unique series of six workshops on "Personal Growth through Human Consciousness Exploration," every Wednesday from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. in room 174 Campus Center beginning April 10.

The workshop times and leaders are as follows:

——April 10, Yoga and Relaxation Techniques lead by Rose Davis
——April 17, Art and Self Discovery lead by Lynda McIntyre
——April 24, Chanting and Meditation lead by E.T. Mellor and Sat Kartar Singh ——May 1, Fantasy and Movement lead by Rose Davis and Lynda McIntyre ——May 8, Music Therapy lead by Larry Ruhf and Linda Rosen
——May 15, Altered States of Consciousness through Meditation lead by Rick Taupier

These workshops are open to the student community. They will emphasize experimental learning and are designed to be both educational and fun. For more information call Room To Move at 545-0400.

Notes and quotes

Teachers needed

The Southwest Women's Center is seeking teachers for a series of three-credit courses planned for the 1974-75 academic year.

The center has a tentative course list, gotten together mainly from student requests. The list is not final and proposals for additional courses are being accepted.

The list: Women in Movements for Social Change in the United States, Revolutionary Societies and the Role of Women, Women in Journalism, the Place of Women in the American Economy, the Experience of Third World Women in America, Sexism and-or Racism in the Public Schools, Women's Center Practicum, Women's Counselling, Women Look at the Law, Women Look at Religion, Women in Africa, Our Bodies, Our Selves, the Lesbian Experience, Women's Theater and Women Look at Mental Health.

Those interested should apply before April 15. Collaborative effort is sought and people who want to teach a course together are urged to apply together. The place is George Washington Lobby, the telephones are 545-0626 and 545-0702.

UMass on WHMP

The Division of Continuing Education at UMass will be featured today on "Forward Northampton," a talk show broadcasted from WHMP (99.3 FM). The show, moderated by Joe Fennessey, will be aired at 7:10 p.m.

Representing the Division of Continuing Education will be Alan Ashton-Director of the Evening College, Fran Koster-Director of "Toward Tomorrow: A Symposium of Alternatives," Rich Cornell-Director of Summer Workshop Series, and Stan Rosenberg-Director of Arts Extension.

Musical lecture

"Igor Stravinsky: In Memorium" will be the subject of a lecture by renown musicologist Charles Warren Fox Tuesday at 11 a.m. in Herter Hall on the UMass campus.

Dr. Fox is a member of the Eastman School of Music faculty, where he has earned international recognition as one of the preeminent practitioners in his field.

This lecture is presented to the public free of charge.

New skin grown from old will improve skin grafting

By MARY SCHEIER
Associated Press Writer

CINNCINNATI, Ohio (AP) — Two doctors say they have grown bits of human skin to 50 times their original size in laboratory dishes and used the new tissue to cover burn injuries.

The technique has been employed successfully on rabbits and a few human patients and shows promise of vastly improving skin-grafting techniques, say the two Skron, Ohio, doctors.

Dr. Howard Igel of Akron Children's Hospital was in Cincinnati Friday to explain the procedure to the American Burn Association. He and a colleague, Dr. Aaron Freeman. developed the technique.

Theoretically, enough skin could be grown to cover all burned parts of a patient's body, he said. "This would cut down on the chance of infection. With very severe burns, we could cover the wound much more rapidly.

"If you have a large raw section, it could take weeks and weeks to grow and graft skin under conventional grafting techniques," which involve moving healthy skin from one part of a patient's body to another, where it grows.

Igel said that, under the new procedure, a physician takes a patch of healthy skin from a burn victim, minces it and puts it on a base of pigskin in laboratory dishes.

Marketing seminar to discuss planning

The Third Annual Marketing Planning Seminar, jointly sponsored by the AMA's Western Massachusetts Chapter and the Department of Marketing, UMass, will be held April 29th at the Campus Center.

This planning conference, especially appropriate in an era of economic upset and dislocation, is designed to pinpoint some of the economic conditions and challenges which will affect marketing planning. Economic factors, consumerism, shortages and other unsettling dislocations, and social and environmental changes are among the topics which will be covered. The Seminar will begin with a presentation by Thomas A. Staudt, Director of Marketing, Chevrolet Division, General Motors Corporation. Staudt's responsibilities include marketing research and planning, advertising, and passenger car merchandising, and will speak on "Planning in an Uncertain Environment."

Daniel Yankelovich of Daniel Yankelovich, Inc., will follow with "Forecasting Social Trends." Yankelovich's firm has counseled many leading U.S. and foreign based firms.

Guy O. Mabry, Vice President and General Manager, Home Building Products Division, Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corporation will speak on "Planning Under Changing Conditions in the Construction Industry." Mabry is responsible for marketing planning and programs directed toward the residential construction market.

The morning session will conclude with a summary and question session chaired by Harland R. Nye, Manager of Commercial and Industrial Marketing, Western Mass Electric Company and President of the Western Massachusetts Chapter of the AMA.

Luncheon speaker will be John Macomber, President, Celanese Corporation, who will present "The Strategic Planning Approach at Celanese."

Registration fee is $40 for AMA members and $50 for non-members. Contact the Western Massachusetts Chapter Vice President, Jack S. Wolf, Head, Department of Marketing, School of Business Administration, UMass, for registration.

Encyclopedia Britannica 3G

Editors attempt to obtain all knowledge

CHICAGO (AP) — Mortimer J. Adler says the objective was stated simply: "Start with a blank page of paper and collect all of human knowledge."

After 15 years, $33 million, and more than two million academic, research and editorial man hours, Britannica 3 is ready.

Warren Preece, the editor says, "It does for its users what encyclopedias always should have done but what no encyclopedia has ever done before."

"It is a total departure," says Adler, director of planning for Encyclopaedia Britannica. "All previous encyclopedias were based on earlier editions. Britannica 3 is completely new. It is the first restructured and reconceived encyclopedia in two centuries."

The new set is called Britannica 3 because, unlike previous encyclopedia sets, it is divided into three parts: a single volume Propaedia which serves as a systematic table of contents; a 10-volume Micropaedia which covers 102,000 subjects in 14 million words with no more than 750 words in a single article; and a 19-volume Macropaedia containing 4,200 articles of greater depth, some of them as long as 250,000 words. More than 4,000 scholars from 131 countries contributed.

The Britannica 3 project, biggest private publishing venture in history, germinated in the 1950s when the late owner and publisher of Britannica, William Benton, met with his board of editors.

"Let's talk about what we would do if there were no Britannica," he told them. Finally, Benton committed himself to spend $17 million — what later became $25 million and then $33 million — to launch Britannica 3.

"It was done solely for the public interest," Adler says. "We knew we would sell X number of the old Britannica and we would sell X plus Y of the new set. The only difference would be the 'plus Y' and I can tell you there's no way that the 'plus Y' will make up the $33 million. No way at all."

The editors adopted Adler's plan for what they first called "a table of intentions," which later became the Propaedia.

IMPEACHMENT COURSE is being offered by the Philosophy dept. at UMass-Boston, according to a page one piece in their Mass Media.

The one-credit mini-course in being given by a young criminal lawyer during a month-long session, twice weekly.

Highlight of the course is an "impeachment watch", whereby the students keep track of developments in THE case being considered.

STUDS MUST EVALUATE TEACHERS, according to a recent ruling of Trustees at the University of Wisconsin at La Crosse. A page one piece in The Racquet tells all about it.

The Board's business and finance committee says that students must be involved in deciding which faculty get bonuses for superior teaching. This new action vetoes a Faculty Senate decision of last semester, which had done away with student merit evaluations of faculty. And it overrides the resulting system of deciding merit increases in salaries as recommended solely by academic departments.

CRAP IS AVAILABLE WEEKLY at Blue Ridge, (Va.) Community College, according to a story in their Ridge Runner.

Under a banner hed on page one, "'Crap' is Positive Sign of Life", the announcement was made recently of a new underground publication on the campus.

The appearance of "Crap" was reportedly hailed by faculty, students and editors of the regular campus newspaper. One prof is quoted as saying "It's the most positive sign that any student here is alive." A student reaction was "That's what BRCC needs, because BRCC is too straight." The RR Art Editor said, "It's a lot of crap and crap should be continued." The President of the college said: "It wasn't particularly informative."

Memorial Lecture Series

TUESDAY, APRIL 9

Film: "From Montgomery to Memphis"
7:30 p.m. Campus Center Auditorium

The film, much of it videotape, presents the public life of Dr. Martin Luther King: his actions, philosophy, principles and followers. Montgomery to Memphis is a record of recent history, when millions of Black Americans took to the streets to proclaim their right to equality, justice and freedom. These events begin with the 1955 Montgomery bus boycott, when Dr. King was 17 years old, and they end shortly after his march in Memphis in April, 1968.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 10

Lecture: Lerone Bennett, Jr.
"Meaning of Martin Luther King for the Black Community in the 70's."
8:00 p.m., Student Union Ballroom
Coffee Hour following lecture —

Parker to run for School Committee

Gladys Parker has announced her candidacy for the Amherst School Committee. An Amherst resident since 1972, Mrs. Parker advocates increased communication between the school and community through a weekly newsletter and an action center staffed by volunteers.

She also wants to better utilize community resources, senior citizens and the college community. She believes more educational alternatives should be offered to students to increase motivation.

Mrs. Parker advocates taking positive steps toward achieving cultural diversity in the schools through in-service courses, better use of materials and community resources and effective implementation of the Affirmative Action Program.

Mrs. Parker has a B.S. in education, an M.S. in educational guidance and has been a licensed secondary teacher since 1964. She is the mother of two children in the Amherst school system.

Sexism and social change

Sexism and its implications for social change will be the topic of the first presentation of Student Volunteer Services' film and lecture series. The lecture is to take place on Tuesday, 9 April, at 7:30 p.m. in Hasbrook 134. The speakers for this discussion will be Kathleen Reardon and Barbara Johnson of the Valley Women's center, Mark Cherin of the Amherst Men's Center, and members of the Student Homophile League. "Make Out" and "Homemovie" will be shown.

It is the purpose of the SVS series to bring out problems of current concern to the minds of the students in this area. Further programs have been planned to deal with the topics of Alcholism, Racism and China as a socialist model.

All programs are free. For further information contact Student Volunteer Services at 408 Goddell.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

With Uranus in the Fifth House, the native is impulsive, falls in and out of love quickly, has an unorthodox childhood, often terminates education due to unusual circumstances, is creative but can be sidetracked by eccentric member of opposite sex. The desires of this native are considered out-of-the-ordinary, the wishes are fulfilled due to an amazing chain of events. Elements of timing, luck, accalin and publicity accompany this person as almost constant companions.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Emphasis is on agreement regarding money, savings, investments. Be careful about interpretations, intentions. Promises now can be sincere but lack substance. Know it and protect assets. Get something on paper and be sure legal documents will hold up under scrutiny.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Defer to judgment of mate, close associate. You know what should be done, but require cooperation of another in order to implement plans. Utilize lessons learned in past. Be patient. Time now is on your side.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Finish what you start. Leaving job half done would be an error. Aries, Libra persons could aid in advertising, distribution. Concentrate on basic issues. Improve services. Highlight displays. Proper lighting is more important than usual.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Good lunar aspect coincides now with change, creativity, unusual dealings with member of opposite sex. You can imprint style. Individuality is emphasized. Leo figures prominently. Figure out publicity campaign.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Co-operate with Cancer. Build on solid base. Improve domestic conditions. Fulfill family obligations. Follow through on hunch. Teach and learn. Avoid needless brooding. Get off sidelines and into game. Older person does have your best interests at heart.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Accent is on hort journeys, communications with neighbors, relatives. Social activity increases. Remember recent diet, health resolutions. Give thought to nutritional requirements. Sagittarian could be involved.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Emphasis is on collecting, studying details, being thorough enough to plug loopholes. Debts are paid, collected. You also add to possessions. You get estimate which pleases you. You may be worth more than is apparent on surface!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Lunar cycle is high; personality shines. Get going. Be independent, a self-starter. Highlight new contacts, originality, creativity. Shake off lethargy. What you feared proves to be a paper tiger. Gemini, Virgo can aid in bringing out constructive changes.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Pace seems to slow. Steam is building, however — you are on brink of discovery. Meantime, work quietly behind the scenes. What was restricted will become available. Taurus, Libra persons could be in picture.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Some friends make promises which cannot be fulfilied. Know it and don't be too harsh in judgment. Realize that, for many, facing the real world is a difficult task. Choose wisely. Includes romantic activity — don't expose vulnerable points — unless you want to be disappointed.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Advancement indicated. Views are vindicated. You receive compliment from professional superior.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Look beyond the immediate. See picture as a whole. Deal with aggressive persons who seek action and are willing to work. Find out where to go for special information. Discuss travel plans. Check learning opportunities. Read, write, publish and advertise.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are an organizer. You have zest for living. You do things all or nothing — no lukewarm or halfway. Your emotions are powerful. You can be headstrong. You often act on impulse and later regret. November could be one of your most important months of 1974. You draw to you many born under Cancer and Capricorn.

UConn tops HC

STORRS (AP) — University of Connecticut pitcher Steve Lake struck out three and left 11 runners on base in the seven innings he worked Sunday to give UConn a 6-4 college baseball victory over Holy Cross.

Connecticut was trailing 4-1 into the bottom of the seventh until four walks, a fielder's choice, a single by Gerald Levi and a sacrifice fly by Brad Linden put five Huskies across the place.

UConn now is 3-5 while Holy Cross dropped to 2-1.

In playoff preview

Cashman trick trumps Leafs, 6-4

BOSTON (AP) — Wayne Cashman fired three goals and assisted on two others in a Boston Bruins 6-4 victory last night over the Toronto Maple Leafs in the National Hockey League season's finale between the two clubs.

The Maple Leafs and Bruins will meet Wednesday night in Boston in the opening round of the Stanley Cup playoffs.

Last night's game also saw Phil Esposito ejected with a game misconduct in the third period, and Toronto's Davy Keon assessed the first fighting major penalty of his 14-year NHL career.

Bobby Orr collected two goals, including the game-winner, and four assists and Esposito had a goal and three assists.

Esposito's 68th of the season and Cashman's 28th, sandwiched around a Toronto goal by Denis Dupere, gave Boston a 2-1 lead in the first period. Esposito's score came at 16 seconds, Cashman's at 19:59.

Orr's 31st moved Boston ahead 3-1 early in the second session, but Brian Glennie, Ron Ellis and Darryl Sittler tallied in succession to put the Leafs ahead 4-3.

Cashmans 29th, a tip-in of an Orr blast, tied it up for the Bruins 58 seconds from the end of the period.

Cashman got his 30th goal in an empty net with 27 seconds remaining.

Keon, who had served only one two-minute penalty previously this season, tangled with Gregg Sheppard midway through the second period.

Air Force ROTC... The college scholarship program with fringe benefits.

Some people might need to be coaxed with more than a full college scholarship to join the Air Force ROTC. So, if free tuition, lab and incidental fees aren't enough . . . the Air Force offers a monthly allowance of $100.00, tax-free, in your junior and senior years. And free flying lessons to those qualified provide the most exciting fringe benefit of all. Interested?

Crew team powers past MIT in first race

CREW WINS DEBUT IN BOSTON

By BOB ESTELLE

The varsity crew won its first race of the season last Saturday against the M.I.T. 150's by a four second margin.

The race, held at the Charles River course, started with a slight crosswind going from the starboard to the port side. The first 1,000 meters of the 2,000 meter race, approaching the Mass. Ave. Bridge, had choppy water which accounted for the first half of the race. At that point, the Minutemen had a three-seat lead.

The water was smoother during the second half of the race and the UMass oarsmen pulled ahead by a length at the three-quarter mark.

They finished the race with a time of 6:25 and a two-length lead over the Engineers.

The junior varsity won their race with the M.I.T. jayvee lights and Boston University's third varsity with a 6:35.5 time.

Two freshmen shells also raced. The first frosh won their race with a 6:40 time against the lightweight frosh of M.I.T. while the second frosh went down to the M.I.T. heavy frosh crew, losing by two-tenths of a second.

Another team entered in the varsity race and they are from Imperial College in London, England. They have been staying at the Phi Mu Delta and Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity houses for the past week and will be here for another week as they are entered in next Saturday's regatta on the Connecticut with UMass and LaSalle. They finished third in last Saturday's race, but they should be ready for this upcoming one.

The varsity shell is directed by sophomore coxswain Bruce Kline.

Sox pitching third best in majors

Trades will bring East flag to Fenway

(Editor's Note: This is the final part of a four-part series in which Collegian Columnist Bob Estelle examines the major league baseball teams.)

By BOB ESTELLE

The Boston Red Sox have a new manager in Darrell Johnson. They also have seven new players who will finally make the impossible dream come true. It will be a close race but the pitching that came from St. Louis will make the difference. For the looks, let us take a peek at the rosters.

BOSTON RED SOX (1ST)

The trades that Dick O'Connell made will bring a flag to Fenway Park. Bill Lee and Luis Tiant will team up with newly acquired Rick Wise and Reggie Cleveland to make up the main starters. Behind them, Rogelio Moret and former Giant great Juan Marichal are enough to bolster a strong staff. The icing on the cake comes with Dick Drago, and Diego Segui. Only the A's and Mets have stronger pitching.

Catcher Carlton Fisk should have a year like his rookie year. Carl Yastrzemski will probably play first base, Doug Griffin is at second, Mario Guerrero will play shortstop and Rico Petrocelli has third base.

Bernie Carbo, Tommy Harper, Rick Miller and Dwight Evans are strong enough in the outfield to keep Yaz at first base.

BALTIMORE ORIOLES (2ND)

The Orioles strengthened their pitching by adding former Red Ross Grimsley to a staff with Jim Palmer, Mike Cuellar, Doyle Alexander and Dave McNally. Grant Jackson is one of the game's top relievers. Earl Williams ought to have a better year behind the plate. Boog Powell, Bobby Grich, Mark Belanger and an aging Brooks Robinson form the infield. The outfield has Rookie-of-the-Year Al Bumbry, Rich Coggins, and Paul Blair. Veteran Tommie Davis is the designated hitter.

(AP Wirephoto)

NEW FACES SHOULD GIVE NEW LIFE to the Red Sox and propel them to their first pennant since 1967. The New faces here are infielder Dick McAuliffe, obtained from the Tigers, and ex-St. Louis outfielder Bernie Carbo.

NEW YORK YANKEES (3RD)

The Bronx Bombers are no longer. They now occupy a Queens, Flushing home known as Shea Stadium. They also have a new manager in former Pirate man Bill Virdon. They also might have found a new left fielder in a trade with Kansas City. The new man is Lou Piniella. He will team with Ron Blomberg and Bobby Murcer in a much shorter outfield.

A major Yankee problem is at second and short. The New Yorkers tried to trade but couldn't. Horace Clarke and Gene Michael are still around. Jim Mason will get a chance. Mike Hegan is the first baseman while Graig Nettles is at third.

Thurman Munson handles most of the catching and Duke Sims is the backup.

The Yankees will be playing roulette with their pitching all summer long. Mel Stottlemyre, Steve Kline, Doc Medich, Fritz Peterson, Sam McDowell and Pat Dobson are starters. The relievers are Wayne Granger, Fred Beene and Sparky Lyle.

The designated hitter is Jim Ray Hart.

CLEVELAND INDIANS (4TH)

Cleveland manager Ken Aspromonte has done a fantastic job with this team. He has probably saved it. The pitching staff starts with Gaylord Perry, goes on to Dick Tidrow and Milt Wilcox and ends with reliever Ken Sanders. Dave Duncan and John Ellis share the catching. Chris Chambliss, Jack Brohamer, Frank Duffy and Buddy Bell form a decent infield. The Tribe outfield has George Hendrick, Charlie Spikes and Leron Lee. The designated hitter is Oscar Gamble.

DETROIT TIGERS (5TH)

Ralph Houk moved over from New York to Detroit and he'll wish he hadn't when 1974 is over. He has an aging team with only one young prospect. That prospect is second baseman Tom Veryzer, whom this reporter say play as a Islip, New York high school youngster. He may be a good one but it won't help the Tigers that much. He joins Ed Brinkman, Aurelio Rodriguez and Norm Cash in the infield.

The outfield has Gates Brown, Al Kaline, Mickey Stanley, Jim Northrup, Dick Sharon and Ben Oglivie.

The pitching has Mickey Lolich and Joe Coleman but is marginal elsewhere. John Hiller and Jim Ray are good relievers but the rest is questionable.

MILWAUKEE BREWERS (6TH)

The Brewers keep building and keep trying, but the rest of the league is too far ahead of them. Jim Colborn is a good American League pitcher but Clyde Wright, Jerry Bell and Jim Slaton aren't enough. The Brewers have Darrell Porter as a catcher and he isn't great. George Scott plays first base. Pedro Garcia is at second, the shortstop job is open while Don Money has third base. John Briggs, Dave May and Ken Berry are the outfielders. Sorry, Del Crandall, it will take a miracle to get out of the cellar.

Whelan does it again, fourth in NCAA'S

By WALT POWERS

Gene Whelan completed a phoenix-style return from the ashes last weekend when he finished fourth place in the NCAA men's gymnastics all-around championships. Only three weeks before, a torn bicep had made it doubtful whether he would compete at all.

Whelan, who also finished second in the individual finals of the parallel bars thus became the highest UMass finisher in both the individual and all around competition.

"I don't think I could have done any better" said the ebullient Whelan. "Two weeks ago I thought I wouldn't even compete."

As it turned out Whelan's injury exerted an almost negligible factor in the three-day meet, though he can thank an opponent from California for much of this.

"Credit Larry Castle for helping me succeed," said Whelan. "He had suffered the same injury before, and he's showed me how to work around it."

Three people, Stanford's Steve Hug, Doug Fitzjarrel of Iowa State, and Wayne Young of Brigham Young, finished ahead of Gene, but this did little to mitigate Whelan's satisfaction. The fourth place finish made Gene a legitimate all-American, culminating a dream he had as a high school student in Bedford, New Hampshire over five years ago.

The top seven all-arounds in the country qualify for the world games, he said "And I'm really happy to reach that status."

While his fourth-place finish did not qualify him for the world-games — he qualifies for those separately — it was a reference to his feeling about individual and all-around competition. International competition consists solely of all-around.

"My second place finish on the high bar?" Just icing on the cake" he said.

Whelan's ride to his fourth-place finish was smooth and except for two horrendous vaults on optionals he never finished worse than eighth on any single event. Whelan thinks the lapses he made were the turning point of his meet.

"I had a terrible first vault but my second was worse," he said. "I knew I was bad, but I decided to get to my job and forget about the scores.

There were times in the meet when Whelan had his doubts. He was in sixth place after Thursday's compulsories and felt his Friday optional score would not place him near the leaders.

"I saw my optional score, 54.40, and I thought I didn't have a chance", he said. "But once I saw Hug (a two-time Olympian) with a 54.50, I knew I was up there."

Whelan finished with an all-around score of 106.25, 2.70 points behind the winner, Steve Hug, and 2.35 ahead of Temple's Bob Rice, his closest Eastern competitor. Gene's brother Jay had one of his worst meets of the year, and the expected brother duo never materialized.

Bergquist's boys disappoint, B.C. Eagles dominate 9-4

By MIKE BROPHY

Boston College continued its dominance over UMass athletics yesterday in upsetting the Minuteman baseball squad by a score of 9-4 in what Dick Bergquist called "a disappointing performance, to say the least."

It seemed as though the Minutemen could do no right as they fell behind to stay in the first inning on poor fielding judgement on a pop fly to shallow right. And it plagued them all day as the hometown squad committed four errors before the large opening day home crowd that came out hoping to see a performance of last year's 8-4 UMass victory.

The first batter of the game, Ed Smith, reached on an error by Rob Beaurivage when the first baseman dropped a throw from pitcher John McManus in fielding a bunt. He later scored as Al Bassignani singled to center and came home on a double to deep center field.

The wind was blowing out all afternoon and could account for the great number of deep flies, three of which cleared the fences.

For UMass the lone bright spot of the day came when DH Craig Allegrezza came to the plate to lead off the Minutemen second and stroked a homer over the left field fence as though he was launching a rocket. The four bagger brought the Minutemen as close as they would come for the rest of the game as BC simply pounded the UMass pitching. "I thought our pitchers could do a better job than that," said Bergquist from the dugout after the disaster.

"They simply outplayed us in every aspect of the game. They outhit us, outfielded us, pitched much better than we did, and won the game on the fundamentals. We made mistakes...they didn't."

"I didn't like what I saw out there and you can be sure there will be some changes come Tuesday afternoon when we play A.I.C.," continued Bergquist.

UMass could have come within tying the game on several occasions as they left the bases loaded two times and stranded a total of 14 men. Winning ball teams do not do that and remain winners for very long, one of the major league scouts in the stands noted.

John McManus started for the Minutemen and was later lifted in favor of Jeff Reardon who looked good for the time he was in the lineup. Reardon took the loss for the Minutemen in his relief work while striking out four. Steve Merrill also struck out four while working 2.1 innings in relief.

AT THE BATTERS' BOX — It was here that B.C. totally dominated the game in outhitting the Minutemen 13 to 6. The one department UMass did lead in was not to their benefit as they left 14 men on base to BC's 7. For a team that had played so well in Florida, the Minutemen seemed to be missing something yesterday. Perhaps "lack of aggressiveness" would best describe their efforts.

Trackmen stun Northeastern near end, 99-97

By SCOTT HAYES

It was a cold and windy Saturday afternoon at the track. There were indications from the start of the meet that it might be a long afternoon for the UMass Track team.

Take, for instance, the hammer throw. The Minutemen throwers were doing fine until Dev Djerassi of Northeastern stepped into the circle and tossed the hammer for what seemed to be a mile (actually 197'). Northeastern went on to take the top three places in the hammer throw and a 10-1 lead, while NU's weight coach cracked jokes about how Djerassi almost came to UMass.

The next event that took place, the six-mile run, turned out to be a heartbreaker for Paul Segersten and Tom Maguire. There were few fans at the meet, and those who did brave the chilly weather, were scattered, watching different events. As the starting gun went off, Segersten and Maguire jumped into the lead, side by side, and held it for 21 laps.

The six-mile run is the loneliest event in track. While fans watch more interesting events like the long jump, shot put, or pole vault, the best of the long distance runners battle opponents and mental fatigue. Occasional questions of "How many laps to go?" rise from the crowd while these "iron men" compete for 24 laps at a pace close to five minutes a mile.

Segersten and Maguire had command of the race with three laps to go, but Steve Hamel came out of a "box" which he had been in all race and flew by Segersten and Maguire. Segersten managed to finish second while Maguire faded over the last three laps and wound up fourth. Maguire, who had a less than great indoor season, looked good in the race, but showed signs of fatigue on those final laps. Maguire has been known to come through late in the season and it's another good bet that he'll peak around championship meet time.

UMass had been trailing throughout the meet. In fact, Northeastern's lead varied from eight to 30 points. But then a UMass sweep in the 120-yard high hurdles seemed to turn the tide. Jim Hennessey, Curt Stegerwald and Pete Farmulari took the top three places and the Minutemen began their comeback. After 15 events were completed Northeastern's lead had been cut to 85-73.

(Staff Photo--Joe Martins)

HIGH-FLYING KEN ADAMSON had a great day in the long and triple jumps, where his double victory led UMass to a 22-0 sweep.

Stegerwald's record-breaking 54.8 in the 440-yard intermediate hurdles brought UMass within striking range. Teammate Skip Cobb took second behind Stegerwald, and BU took third and fourth. The trackmen now only trailed by four points, 85-81.

And then to top it all off, the sun came out before the start of the two-mile, as if to indicate the good things to come. Mike Buckley, the Huskies' exceptional distance runner, was entered in the race. Buckley, however, was pushed in winning the mile by Jack Maloney and Chris Farmer. Randy Thomas and Bill Gillin were entered for UMass, a fresh Thomas and a fresh Gillin. The result was a race that featured some "sophisticated" running by both Thomas and Gillin. Thomas and Gillin set the pace, but Buckley was only a stride behind. With two laps to go, Thomas made his move and left Gillin to battle with Buckley. It took Gillin nearly another lap, but he had his mind made up and pulled away from Buckley. Thomas lowered his own school record to 8:57.3 in winning the race and teammate Tommy Wilson picked up an important fourth place.

A full summary of the meet will appear in tomorrow's Collegian.

TIGHT AND TOUGH TOLD THE STORY. Jeff Spooner is harried in the Cortland zone while Harry McVea (33) awaits a pass that never came. Tight aggressive defense forced the game into a record four overtimes.

UMass hurt by outside forces, finishes in third

From the point of view of organization, the meet was at best as well-put-together as a state championship and at worst the most poorly organized event since the lifeboats were lowered from the Titanic.

At the Eastern Regionals held at the Cage, every score that went up was the right one, but at Sacramento the opposite seemed true. And when the wrong score wasn't put up, the judges often lowered the posted scores themselves, usually at UMass' disadvantage.

What's even worse, the organizers of the meet didn't seem to be very alert all week. When UMass arrived at the Cal State gym on Wednesday afternoon to practice, the gym wasn't even set up. It was if the sponsors of the meet and meet director Kathy Shelley, the coach of Cal State-Sacramento, who the head of public relations of the university called "a pretty bad meet director," had started making preparations for the competition a few days before it started. That's alright for local meets but inexcusable in a national competition.

But no matter how poorly the meet organizers performed, you can't escape the fact that UMass did not perform at its best. But that was more the fault of Kathy Shelley, the judges, et al. than the team.

As Coach Virginia Evans stated after the meet was over, "the team wasn't as sharp as they were in the Eastern's. We didn't have the depth and we weren't hitting with any consistency."

Especially in beam and on bars, UMass failed to come up with the all important third scored of about 8.70 which would make the 9.0's and 9.1's stand up. For example, on bars, Jeannine Burger scored a 9.00, Ann Vexler scored an 8.60 but Betsy East and Margie Combs only scored 8.05 and 8.10 respectively, thanks more to bad judging than bad routines. East's score was protested by Ms. Evans but to no avail.

As the UMass coach said in a post-mortem, the fact that UMass went in the first grouping really hurt.

"They (The UMass team) could have made a fight of it later on if they were in a later group," she said. Being in a later round would have allowed UMass to compete without the exasperating waiting period which they endured in the first round. And any lack of sharpness could be blamed on that.

In taking third place as a team, mightymite Jeannine Burger, who placed fourth in the individual finals in bars, emphasized that she thought that UMass was still "the best." She and the UMass team will have to wait a year to prove it.

A heartbreaker! Gorillas fall in four Ot's, 10-9

By MIKE ELLIOTT

With about 400 fans watching on a cold and windy day, the UMass lacrosse team lost, 10-9, in four overtimes on Saturday to Cortland State, the defending small college national champs.

Garbers Gorillas started off hot, scoring two goals within the first three minutes of the game. Harry McVey assisted on both of them, passing in from behind the net, first to Bill Collins and then to Jeff Spooner.

A minute into the second quarter Bill Arnold netted a third UMass goal, but Cortland tied the score at three with eight minutes left in the period. However, John Martin scored again for the Gorillas with 2:34 remaining, to give them a 4-3 lead at halftime.

In the second half both teams played sloppily, missing shots and muffing passes. Cortland scored first in the third period but the Gorillas pulled ahead, 4-3, when Jack Moran netted his first goal of the season. However, Cortland State proceeded to score three straight goals within the next three minutes to take the lead, 7-5.

Both teams traded goals throughout the next few minutes of the fourth quarter. UMass scored the first three goals of the final period, with Jeff Spooner hitting the first two and Harry McVey scoring the third. Spooner's score was a beauty as he picked up a loose ball at the restraining line and went in all alone and deposited the ball into the net over the goalie's shoulder. McVey's goal was also a picture play as he made an excellent fake near the restraining line and fired a shot about chest-high into the opposing net.

Cortland's Jim Lucksinger tied the score, 8-8, at the 6:56 mark of the third quarter. Cortland then pulled ahead at 4:22 when John Espey scored his only goal of the game.

The Gorillas pressed hard and tied the game at nine with only 2:27 left to play in the game. The final and typing UMass goal was another picture play. Peter Connolly gathered in a loose baseball and made a neat pass to Hirsch Seidman, near the restraining line, who promptly fired a quick shot, about waist-high into the Cortland net.

Both teams fought through four overtime periods before Cortland finally netted the winning goal at 2:03 of the fourth overtime. UMass dominated the play in the overtime periods. They controlled the ball most of the time and they also outshot Cortland, 10-3. One time a Umass player hit the crossbar on an open net and another time Peter Connolly scored a goal which was called back because he was in the crease.

The Gorillas will try again for their first win of the season when they face Wesleyan in an away game on Wednesday at 3 p.m.

RECREATION

From "An Outdoor Guide to the Region Around Amherst" published by the Kestrel trust, a private trust set up by the Amherst Conservation Commission. Courtesy of the Amherst Public Library."

The Connecticut Valley around Amherst has some of the finest bicycling in America. With a USGS map you can plan a circuit and choose flat land or hills; or a combination bicycling, hiking and picnic trip is fun, too. Here are some ideas:

Short rips. These are possible in variety and abundance in the area west of Rte. 116 to the Connecticut River, north of Northampton Road, and south of Sunderland. The flat farm country is beautiful, its terrain mildly varied, and there is little automobile traffic.

Long trip (around Mt. Toby, 25 miles). Take Rte. 47 through Sunderland and over the Montague line; turn right, crossing Rte. 63, up Saw Mill River Road to North Leverett; a beautiful coast after a long climb to Cushman and Amherst — combines river-bottom farm land with "up country"; beautiful views.

Bike-hike trip (to Quabbin Reservoir, 8 hours). Take Main Street east from Amherst to the top of Pelham Hill (a super coast in reverse); or for back roads, laurel, and easier grades, turn left on Valley Road at the Pelham Highway Dept. barn and continue east to the main highway to Pelham. Cross Rte. 202, leave bike, walk down a dirt road 2 miles to Quabbin Reservoir; trail along shore. Here you will see abandoned pastures, old foundations, young pines, deer, and wilderness.

Youth hostels. These make overnight bike trips possible from Amherst through Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Vermont. Get pass and handbook from American Youth Hostels, Inc., 20 West 17th St., New York, N.Y. 10011. Provide your own food; lodging is available at hostels. The nearest hostel is in Sunderland on Falls Rd. just off Rte. 47, about 2 mi. N. of the center. Open July 1-Oct. 1.

BOATING AND CANOEING

The Connecticut River is alive with boats of all kinds and water skiers. The number of free public accesses increases as this is written; ask around among the "fraternity."

Marinas. At present there are: The Oxbow Marina (take East St. off Rte. 5 at Mt. Tom Junction and follow signs; Sportman's Marina (SE of the Coolidge Bridge in Hadley); Mitch's Marina on Rte. 47 in Hockanum; and Brunelle's Marina, 1 Alvord St., S. Hadley, also headquarters of the Pioneer Valley Ski Club (water-skiing). If the federal program for the Connecticut Historic Riverway is adopted (see "Reservations, Holyoke Range"), further facilities including boat-in camping will be provided in this area of the river.

The Holyoke Canoe Club. This private club is opposite Mt. Tom Reservation off Rte. 5. Although canoeing is no longer a feature of this club, it has a clubhouse, tennis courts, swimming pool and social program. There is boat storage but no rentals.

Aside from the Connecticut River there are other locations for boating. Boats may be hired for fishing at three mooring sites on Quabbin Reservoir. Certain local ponds have public accesses and Lake Wyola Park (see "Swimming") allows boating.

Canoeing. Quiet water canoeing is accessible on the Connecticut River, Leverett Pond, Cranberry Pond and Lake Wyola. Those interested in white-water canoeing or kayaking will have to go to the Westfield River or Miller's River slightly over ten miles away. Likewise at the appropriate season, the Deerfield River provides quiet and white-water canoeing. For more information see the AMC New England Canoeing Guide and The Connecticut River Guide ("References").

Meteorologists hope to tame tornadoes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Weathermen running America's tornado warning system hope some planned improvements will help save more lives in future disasters.

For example, a new high-speed electronic system "that seeks to take full advantage of computers, modern display technology and modern communications technology" is being developed, says a top federal weather agency official.

The weathermen hope to begin deploying this in about 18 months to offices around the country so the whole system can react faster and more effectively to quickly developing weather situations such as tornadoes.

"It will be much more efficient than our present system and will enable a much quicker response" especially in cases such as the one last week when many tornadoes erupted at virtually the same time, an official said.

If such a modernized approach had been available last week, "it could have lengthened warning times five to 30 minutes — and in tornadoes, that could be important," another official said.

"Most natural disasters that kill people happen fast — you can't consume that time by inefficient methods which eat up the time for warning," he said.

The weathermen also are working toward gaining new satellites that could upgrade the experts' ability to forecast "and enable us to keep a continuous watch on developing weather," said the official.

Improvements also are being sought for the warning network's local-use radar system.

"In what we call our local-use radar, we are using radar sets that go back to World War II. They are obsolete sets, they need replacement," the official said.

More than 300 persons died, thousands were hurt and property damage was measured in the millions of dollars as some 90 twisters tore through parts of a dozen states last week.

Robert M. White, head of the Commerce Department's National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and other top federal officials visited Kentucky, Indiana and Ohio last Friday to look at some of the damage and to talk with local weather agency officials.

FISHING

From "An Outdoor Guide to the Region Around Amherst" published by the Kestrel trust, a private trust set up by the Amherst Conservation Commission. Courtesy of the Amherst Public Library."

Fishing in the Amherst area affords great recreation for the followers of Isaac Walton, but good catches are more a memory of the past than a present day reality. The Massachusetts Division of Fisheries and Game has an excellent fish-stocking program but the fishing pressure is so great that in most instances the streams and ponds are fished out by early summer.

The state stocks the ponds, rivers and streams with over 1.5 million trout of the three varieties each year. At least 200,000 of these fish are released in the area around Amherst. The stocking is done in the early spring before the season opens and a supplementary in-season stocking usually takes place in the large waters again in May.

Norwottuck Fish and Game Club customarily raises 10,000 trout in the club pools. These fish are released in waters immediately around Amherst as a supplement to the state's program. The state also stocks bass in some of the larger ponds and has a program for stocking the Quabbin Reservoir which will hopefully bring that great body of water up to its potential. There is now a good resident population of lake trout, and a growing one of landlocked salmon and rainbow trout.

Most ponds have a resident population of bullheads, perch, bluegills, crappies and some pickerel. The Connecticut River, especially in the Oxbow area south of Northampton, often produces wall-eyed pike and carp. Some of the smaller ponds are periodically reclaimed for trout where the fishing can be quite good for a year or two. Notices of the reclaiming and the special regulations are posted at all access areas.

Quabbin Reservoir has the greatest potential for good fishing and larger fish. The reservoir has a natural population of many varieties in addition to the regular state stocking. Most of the shore line is open to fishing and three boat landing areas are maintained where boats and motors may be rented. Private boats of over 12 feet in length, with outboard motors of 10 horsepower or less may also be used if properly equipped with life preservers and fire extinguishers. Maps of the Quabbin area which contain the special regulations may be obtained at the headquarters building at Winsor Dam off Rte. 9 in Belchertown or at various sporting goods stores or the boat launching areas.

The fishing season opens on the third Saturday in April and closes in the third Saturday in October. There are a few special regulations, so the small digest of the laws which is available at all town clerks' offices should be consulted.

Although all the waters of the Commonwealth receive appropriate stocking for early season fishing, a few of the trout streams deserve mention as they have the capacity to hold fish over a longer period of time. The Deerfield and Miller's Rivers to the north are numbered among the best streams in the state and often produce good summer fishing. Hop Brook in South Amherst, the several branches of the Swift River in the Quabbin area, the Sawmill River in Leverett, Manhan Brook in Easthampton and Factory Hollow Pond and Roaring Brook in North Amherst occasionally offer rewarding fishing late in the season.

The Sunderland State Fish Hatchery on Rte. 63 about 4½ miles N of Amherst rears brook, brown and rainbow trout for release in the area;

Mention should be made of the Charles L. McLaughlin Trout Hatchery, State Div. of Fisheries and Game, just off Rte. 9 (12.7 mi.) near the Swift River in Belchertown. It is one of the largest and most modern hatcheries in the country and visitors are welcome. The two miles of rearing tanks hold trout of various kinds and sizes and visitors may drool over the trophy-sized fish in the pools or stir them into exciting action with food from the handy dispensing machines. (Open daily 9-4; no charge.)

Crucial finding surrounds tapes

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - With encouragement from the White House, two challenges have emerged to a crucial finding of the technical experts examining the subpoenaed Watergate tapes.

One came from a volunteer, and the other from an unnamed expert consulted by James D. St. Clair, President Nixon's chief Watergate attorney.

And both were factors prompting U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica on Tuesday to order all sides in the tapes case to halt further public discussion of the matter.

At issue is the report of the six-member panel of experts on the 18 ½-minute gap in the tape of a June 20, 1972, conversation between the President and H. R. Haldeman.

The panel, chosen jointly by the White House and special prosecutor's office, and then appointed by Sirica, told the court it had determined that the Uher 5000 recorder on which Rose Mary Woods, the President's secretary, had listened to the June 20 tape, had been stopped and started manually at least five times during the 18 ½-minute segment.

The experts said they based their conclusion on the electronic marks made by the record and erase heads on the Uher machine. The marks, small parallel lines, are left on the tape when the record key pops up and sends a momentary pulse of electricity through the heads just before they are deactivated.

St. Clair questioned the experts about whether they were certain that deactivating the heads simply by pulling the plug out of the wall wouldn't leave the same marks. The experts conceded they hadn't done that but they said they were certain pulling the plug would not leave marks.

HORSE RIDING

..From "An Outdoor Guide to the Region Around Amherst" published by the Kestrel trust, a private trust set up by the Amherst Conservation Commission. Courtesy of the Amherst Public Library."

In the Connecticut River Valley and its watersheds, there are good opportunities for hunting most of the common game birds and mammals. The season and the bag limit are covered by law which is condensed in a small leaflet at any Town Clerk's office.

Most of the pheasant are stocked birds. The habitat is only marginal for this game bird. Ruffed grouse are scattered in the wooded areas, being most abundant in forests of early succession where there are abandoned orchards, stands of aspen, some conifers and other brushy cover. Woodwock are very common in poorly drained areas including alder, young aspen growth, dogwood and other species of brushy growth. Many woodcock are reared locally and are augmented by migrants during the fall. Woodducks, black ducks and some mallards breed in the valey and during migration there is some excellent duck hunting on the Connecticut River.

Most of the game mammals, with the exception of the cottontail rabbit, are confined to the wooded areas in the hills. Snowshoe hare are common in laurel stands and black spruce or hemlock swamps. Deer, scarcer than 20 years ago, are commonly found in all forested land and at the edges of bordering farmland.

HUNTING VIEWS

Distant views and spots of intimate charm delight the automobilist, the bicyclist, or the walker who traverses the highways of our valley and the winding roads of the hills. Listed here are some favorites. There are many more.

World's fair

Spokane knuckles under

Expo 1974, the world's fair that almost wasn't, is rising through the snow of Spokane, erasing what used to be crumbling slums and railroad trestles. Hopefully it will leave in its wake a 50-acre waterfront park and a rejuvenated city.

By STEVE WEINER
Associated Press Writer

SPOKANE, Wash. AP — Can the smallest city ever sanctioned to hold a word's fair really pull it off.

This city of 200,000 is giving it the All-American Try, and things look good for Expo '74, the theme being worldwide energy and environmental conservation.

Ironically, one of the impediments to the success of the fair may be fuel and gasoline shortages, but the fairs's promoters think even those dire events can be surmounted.

Peter Spurney, Expo general manager and a mechanical engineer by trade, is the man who is putting ti together. His problem: how to let Americans know it is on schedule to open on May 14. The fair ends Nov. 2.

"It's a sad commentary on our nation if we can't get together for our 200th anniversary," Spurney said. "What we're trying to do here in Spokane is say, 'Look America, here we are with a world's fair.'

"It's a celebration of how we can solve some problems, the beginning of our bicentennial era. Let's look where we've been and where we're going and start pulling on the same rope."

On stage are exhibits from Japan, Taiwan, Lorea, Canada, Mexico, Australia, Iran, West Germany, Montana, Idaho and the Canadian provinces of British Columbia and Alberta.

When the 180-day stand is over, Spokane will have given itself a major slum clearance project as a 100th birthday present. Most pavilions are going up in a decayed section of the city.

Mayor David Rogers is ecstatic. "So many things that are happening now either would never have happened or would not have happened to the degree they are now being developed without Expo.

"Expo gave us a certain degree of political clout and influence . . . Without Expo we could not have opened up our river. We will have about the greatest city center a person couuld dream of . . . Our central business district and city heart is being saved from decay."

"IF Expo had failed," contends Spurney, "Spokane would have failed."

"Expo is not going to be known for the ice cream cone, or Little Egypt who danced at Chicago, or the Belgian waffle that made a hit at New York," Spurney says. "It's something more significant."

At least that's the hope. Most of the nations and companies are now completing their exhibits together.

The Soviet Union pledges that its 52,000 square-foot pavilion will include three cinema halls, art exhibits, and a program on the environment presented in layman's language, presumably English.

"We will show everything — our industries, our countryside, even our environmental problems," a Soviet spokesman said.

The Australians say, "Our exhibit will be in keeping with the environmental theme. Tentative plans call for an exhibit of Australia's unique flora and how it is handling its environmental problems."

General Motors, with 20,000 square feet and 40 displays, will include a mass transit people-mover, animated exhibits on emission controls, ecology and alternate power sources.

Everyone, of course, will blow his own horn. That's the reason for a world's fair, or always has been.

The fair ran into some trouble last summer. Foreign exhibit commitments slowed, and cash flow became critical. The federal government began re-evaluating its participation, including its $11.5 million pavilion as the fair's initial leadership faltered.

It was rescued, however, and Spurney was one of the rescuers, as was Tommy Walker, the Disneyland consultant specializing in extravaganzas.

Spurney estimates that gasoline rationing to a 15-gallon-a-week level would cost the fair $300,000 a week, mostly in attendance lost from distant points. But this will be made up partly by regional residents who will have to forego longer vaction trips. Spurney also plans to beef up mass transit if necessary.

Far from dying, Expo 74 is stubbornly succeeding. Its organizers think the fair and the city have something to offer the nation and the world. If nothing else it has rekindled the spirit of Spokane.

Mountains. The state parks and reservations have roads to the summits of several mountains; the hiking section suggest many views off the highways.

Pelham Hill. Starting on Main St., drive 7 mi. E, and then N or S along Rte. 202; fine views of Quabbin Reservoir; Mt. Monadnock, N.H. is visible from some spots.

Quabbin Reservoir. This largest body of water in the state was made by flooding the sites of four former towns. Its entrance is on Rte. 9, 12 mi. E of Amherst; good road over the dams and along the shore to the observation tower — views of forested shores, islands and distant hills. For autumn foliage it rivals N.H.

South Amherst. For superb views W and S, take Rte. 116 to Shays St., and then Station Rd. from the N end of the Common, across the R.R. tracks and up a steep hill for views of the Holyoke Range. Or, continue on Rte. 116 to Bay Rd., there, turning either right or left, you will see some old brick houses, some of which have been taverns in the "old" days.

Hockanum Rd. Rt. 47 S from Hadley goes through Hockanum Village along the Connecticut River (note flood level signs) and skirts the base of Mt. Holyoke with views of the two Ranges. Take the first left S of the Range and return by Rte. 116 through the Notch.

East Leverett Rd. to Shutesbury. Take a sharp right at North

Montague Rd. From North Amherst, a drive along Rte. 63 is suggested for western views and sunsets.

Sunderland. At the intersection of Rte. 116 and 47, turn N onto Rte. 47 to Falls Rd. (about 2 mi.). Continue on Falls Rd. to Montague and return by Rte. 47 for falls and river views and wooded slopes.

Factory Hollow Pond. These falls at the end of Summer St., when they are draped in ice are Amherst's most photographed winter scene.

Amherst, drive through Cushman and turn right after the bridge. The road follows cascades to Shutesbury hill (1,225 ft.); take Locks Pond Rd. to Lake Wyola, then down to North Leverett and Rte. 63 for return to Amherst.

Rattlesnake Gutter and the Charcoal Kilns: Start your trip as above, but after the bridge in Cushman, continue straight to Leverett Center; about 1.7 mi. N a gravel road leads across fields, then steeply up the gutter, a ravine with high cliffs and a cascading stream. A scramble up the rocks and cliffs to the ridge is worthwhile. From a road on the east side of the ridge, a waterfall is seen on the left, and a short distance away and easily seen are the old charcoal kilns which are worth a visit.

Cigarette tax eyed

A bill which would tax cigarettes according to tar and nicotine content has been heard by the Legislature's Joint Committee on Taxation.

Rep. John A. Businger of Brookline filed the bill which was studied and evaluated by Asst. Prof. Ethan Katsh and several students of the UMass Legal Studies Program.

The bill would add four cents tax to each package of cigarettes high in both tar and nicotine. Speaking before the Joint Committee last week, Prof. Katsh said the tax would be "an important public health measure and a dependable source of revenue." A similar tax in New York City brought in $22.6 million in revenue the first year, and resulted in the reduction of tar and nicotine content in about 12 per cent of all cigarettes sold in the city, he say.

Smoking, he says, is a "public" health problem, and the tar and nicotine tax is a "realistic means of reducing the harm associated with smoking...Since cigarette smoking is habitual in nature, the most--and perhaps only--effective public health strategy to discourage cigarette smoking short of outright prohibition is to encourage switching to lower tar and nicotine levels."

Kodak to change film line-up

BY IRVING DESFOR
AP Newsfeatures

The annual convention and trade show of the American photo industry is an important barometer of what's ahead for this country's camera fans.

This year it's something special because the Master Photo Dealers and Finishers Assn. were celebrating their 50th anniversary at their sessions in Chicago in late March. For the occasion, major manufacturers and distributors were unveiling new films and equipment that will affect or concern the country's picture takers.

Probably most newsworthy was the announcement of a three-film shakeup. First is the replacement of popular Kodachrome II film by new Kodachrome 25 daylight film in all sizes for still cameras and in 8mm and 16mm movie sizes.

Secondly, present Kodachrome-X will be replaced by new Kodachrome 64 daylight film. Both new films for still cameras should be available at dealers starting in April.

Thirdly, new Kodachrome 40 movie film type A will replace type A Kodachrome II in double-8mm and 16mm sizes. It is scheduled for distribution in July along with new Kodachrome 25 movie film daylight.

However, movie makers with super 8mm cameras will have to wait till fall this year before Kodachrome 40 type A film reaches camera stores.

Following a demonstration for press representatives of the differences between the new and present films, these points can be made:

There is no increase in film speed in the changes to new emulsions but there is clearer knowledge of each film's rated speed because it's incorporated in the new film's name. Thus, new Kodachrome 25 has an ASA 25 film speed. New Kodachrome 64 has an ASA 64 film speed. And new Kodachrome 40 type a has an ASA 40 film speed. With a box of new film, you know immediately what to set the ASA rating at without hunting for the instruction sheet.

In comparing new Kodachrome 25 with Kodachrome II, officials acknowledge no improved grain or sharpness but say that these qualities have been maintained at a similar level. There is a general improvement in tone and color reproduction in the new film but the change is very subtle and takes a keen eye to be aware of it.

The yellows are slightly cleaner and reds, blues and greens are a bit brighter. The sky tone has less magenta and may be more natural although some camera fans may prefer the magenta tone as it is now.

BRIDAL/FASHION

Planning the perfect wedding for a modern bride

Reprinted
Copyright, (c) 1974 by Ziff-Davis Publishing Co. Reprinted from April-May 1974 issue of Modern Bride.

Send announcements to the newspapers in your home town and in your fiance's if he lives elsewhere. Many papers and some photographers have forms on which you can record your name, your fiance's name, names and residences of both parents, background material on both you and your fiance (schools, clubs, positions, etc.), and the expected date of your wedding.

Society editors decide how much of this they can use. Type of print all the information. Indicate the date when you would like the announcement to appear. (Allow plenty of time: if in doubt, check with he society editor as to when she would like to have your copy.)

Wedding invitations

Be sure to include your name, address and telephone number on the upper right-hand corner.

If either parent is not living, be sure to include the name of the deceased, writing the words "the late" before it.

Divorced parents may announce your engagement together, with your mother's name preceding your father's, or the announcement may come from whichever one you live with. Mention of your other parent however, must be made. If both parents are deceased, the announcement of your engagement may be made either by your grandparents or other close relatives.

If you send a photograph with your announcement, it should be a glossy 8" by 10" with caption attached, writteon on a separate piece of paper, but not on back of photo.

Traditional formal invitations are engraved on a white, cream-colored or ivory double sheet of fine quality paper. There are a number of popular styles of engraving to choose from. The large size, folded square with engraving on the top sheet, is generally used for formal ceremonies.

This is folded once for insertion into the envelope. Tissues inserted to protect the engraving are left in. A smaller size, which is inserted without folding, is often used for less formal weddings.

A form of printing that resembles engraving and is considerably less expensive is sometimes used and has become acceptable. For informal weddings, pastel-tinted invitations with engraving or printing in matched ink has also recently become quite popular.

Order your invitations from your jeweler, stationer or department store. They all have qualified consultants to guide you in correct wording.

Just remember that invitations to a church always request "the honour of your presence," invitations to the reception read "pleasure of your company." Invitations are sent by your parents.

In cases where parents are divorced, invitations should be extended by the parent with whom you have made your home. If all guests are invited to both tne wedding ceremony and the reception, a single invitation is sufficient. However, if only some of the guests are invited to the reception, a separate reception card will be needed as well as the wedding invitation.

In addressing invitations, outer envelopes should be handwritten, never typed, and no abbreviations should be used. The inner envelope is left unsealed and addressed to "Mr. and Mrs. Johnson," without first names or addresses. Young children may be included by writing their first names in a line below their parents; older children should receive separate invitations.

Formal invitations are very much in order for a large informal wedding. However, at a small wedding where fewer than fifty guests have been invited, handwritten notes from your mother are acceptable. In the case of a second marrage, handwritten or telephoned invitations are most frequently used, although engraved invitations may be sent if a large number of guests is invited.

Be sure to allow plenty of time so that your invitations may be ready to mail three or four weeks before the wedding. Often you can obtain the envelopes beforehand so that you may start addressing while the invitations are being engraved.

who pays for what

Whether you want a simple or elaborate wedding, there will be certain expenses that are important to consider when deciding how large your wedding should be. These expenses, according to custom, are divided among the participants in the following way:

the bride

1 Wedding ring for the groom if it's a double-ring ceremony
2 Wedding gift for the groom
3 Presents for her attendants
4 Accommodations for her attendants
5 Personal stationery, calling cards
6 Her medical examination
7 If the bride has money of her own, she may assume any responsibilities that belong traditionally to her family; if not, her family may pay for the above expenses the groom

1 Marriage license
2 His medical examination
3 Bride's engagement and wedding rings
4 Gift for the bride
5 Bride's bouquet and going-away corsage (the bride's family may correctly pay for this if they wish to)
6 Boutonnieres for the men of the wedding party
7 Flowers for the two mothers
8 Gloves, ascots, or ties (if desired) for the men of the wedding party
9 Gifts for his ushers and best man
10 Accommodations for his best man and ushers
11 Optional: the bachelor dinner
12 Fee for the clergyman (as much as $100 if wedding is large and lavish; usually $10 to $25)
13 The wedding trip

the bride's family

1 Bride's personal trousseau (wedding gown, headdress, veil, accessories, and going-away outfit)
2 Wedding invitations and enclosure cards
3 Announcements
4 Engagement and wedding photographs
5 Rental for church (if one is charged, it is usually $10 to $30, depending on whether there is music and, in a Catholic church, whether a nuptial Mass is said)
6 Fees for the organist, soloist, and sexton (usually included in charge for church; if church is free, they have set fees)
7 Aisle carpet, canopy, and other church properties made available
8 Flowers for church
9 Bridesmaids' bouquets and flower headdress (if worn)
10 Gratuity for traffic policemen asked to direct traffic in front of the church if it's a large wedding (usually $5 to $10 for each man)
11 Transportation for bridal party, from the house to the church and to the reception
12 Bridesmaids' luncheon
13 Rehearsal dinner (the groom's family may elect to pay for this)
14 Entire cost of the reception: rental of club, or hotel accommodations, if reception is not held at home; decorations; music; flowers; food (including wedding cake); wine, other beverages; fees for professional help
15 Optional: Supply linens, china, silver flatware, crystal and other household necessities for the bride and groom
16 Optional: Packages of groom's cake or bride's cake for guests to take home to "dream on"

the groom's family

1 Clothes they wear to the wedding
2 Any traveling expenses and hotel bills for themselves
3 Wedding gift for the bride and groom
4 Optional: Dinner preceding or following wedding rehearsal (this is the responsibility of the bride's family; however, if they wish to, the groom's family may offer to give the rehearsal dinner)

the attendants

(Bridesmaids and Ushers)
1 Their wedding clothes and accessories
2 Any traveling expenses for themselves
3 Wedding gift for the bride and groom

the guests

1 Any traveling expenses and hotel bills for themselves
2 Wedding gifts to the bride and groom

Bulbs bloom in Spring gardens

We pay a lot of attention to spring flowering bulbs. Let's consider the summer bulbs, such as dahlias, gladiolus and lilies.

Pull weeds by hand when possible because surface roots and stems may be hurt by a weeding tool such as a hoe.

Normal rainfall is usually enough for summer flowering bulbs but they'll appreciate a good ground soaking at weekly intervals during dry weather.

Fertilize the plants lightly with 5-10-5 when they bloom, applying a light ring, but keep it off the leaves and away from bulbs and roots, which may burn. Don't use high nitrogen fertilizers because they may cause bulb decay if you apply too much at one time. Bonemeal is good because it releases nitrogen slowly. Apply it at flowering time — about three pounds for a 5 by 10 garden bed, mixed into the soil thoroughly.

Cut the flowers off when they fade. This will prevent seed formation, which takes stored food from bulbs.

After leaves yellow, dig the bulbs and store them in a cool place for replanting the following season.

Garden Weddings

By ELLEN PROXMIRE,
GRETCHEN POSTON
AND BARBARA BOGGS

Don't be at all surprised if the bride of 1974 requests the "Pleasure Of Your Company" at a wedding and reception right in her own backyard. The house where she grew up, the magnolia tree she climbed, the garden she helped plant and tenderly care for — it's all a perfectly natural setting for the most important day of her life.

Although today's young people still cling to hints of tradition where weddings are concerned, they also lean toward what is natural, simple, less structured, and less expensive. What better setting could be found than one that includes lots of background scenery, lots of roaming-around space, lots of fresh flowers, and the colorful additions of lanterns and pastel sheets turned into tablecloths. None of this is uncomplicated. The success of the day will be determined by the quality of the professionals engaged, careful planning, attention to details, and a rain plan.

The florist is the professional who will do more than any other to set the scene. He should be called as soon as the date is set so that he can survey your garden, see what existing foliage can be used, suggest an altar spot and paths leading to ceremony site, receiving line site, and reception site. Think of topiary trees of geraniums or carnations for centerpieces, or in larger size to line the path at a garden ceremony; or consider pots of tulips that can be replanted later or lanterns filled with yellow flowers on a gold and green meadow-blossom sheet; or, simplest of all, goblets filled with daisies or bachelor buttons.

Instead of veils, the garden bride and her attendants might wish to wind flowers in their hair and carry arm bouquets or baskets instead of the more stylized versions of wedding flowers. The overall effect will be fresh and informal minus the stiffness of potted palms, candelabra, carpeting, and the air-conditioned isolation of commercial wedding sites.

If more than fifty people are invited, real consideration should be given to the installation of a tent or tents. These and all the equipment for the reception can be rented conveniently from a local party-rental agency. On a simple scale, a tent can be viewed as an extension of your home. For example: ceremony in living room, food in dining room or family room, tent for bar, music and dancing. On a more lavish scale: tent for ceremony, tent for seated meal and, of course, there then must be a tent for the caterer and his portable kitchen. Preferably, this would be situated behind bushes or a garage so all cooking and serving can be done outside of the house facility. These tents would be joined to each other and to the house by connecting canopies. Tents are colorful today, coming in stripes as well as solid pastels. They are an insurance against inclement weather and they add a festive touch to the day, but they are not inexpensive. If your budget is limited and your record as a weather prophet is dismal, invite only the number of guests that will comfortably fit in your home. If the sun seems to shine regularly on your parade, take a chance and remember that newspapers are marvelous for soaking up dew or unexpected raindrops.

Menu possibilities are extensive, keeping in mind light fare, fresh fruits and vegetables, food that is colorful but doesn't run, melt or need a knife. For example, a two o'clock ceremony followed by a buffet reception can be unique and innovative without breaking the bank or relying on the well-worn standbys of turkey and ham. Instead of an open bar, offer Bloody Marys and Whiskey Sours only. Fruit Punch for the non-drinkers can be served in coconut shells. Hibachis can be set up on one section of lawn for kabobs of Pineapple, kumquats, and beef for the adults, and baby hamburgers and sausage for the small fry attending. The buffet table can feature Scampi New Orleans, ginger and cream cheese balls rolled in macadamia nuts, a melon basket with fresh fruit or a strawberry tree, caviar with assorted crackers and soft cheeses, miniature French pastries and tarts. Later, accompanying the wedding cake for dessert, you can serve the traditional champagne or tumblers of iced coffee with a scoop of French vanilla ice cream added.

A more expensive menu for a seated buffet can include cucumber-watercress sandwiches, miniature quiches, cold poached salmon, ham encrouts, asparagus, cherry tomato platter, stuffed zucchini salad, carrots Vichy, and pears with ginger or Cointreau to be served with the wedding cake for dessert.

The center of attention for any wedding, large or small is the cake. At a garden wedding you want to replace the usual cake-top decorations with a nosegay of fresh flowers. Sprays of jonquils and mimosa can surround the base of a milk-glass compote for a small wedding cake (allow one pound for every five people) or a larger, many-layered cake could be strewn with miniature roses on a basketweave frosting. If the day arrives hot and steamy, leave the cake indoors for cutting, for icing does soften, and, instead of a glorious creation, you could wind up with something resembling a leaning Tower of Pisa.

Music can be provided by a strolling guitarist, a trio, or even taped music from your own stereo set.

Planning a garden wedding requires detailed checking on equipment. Very few homes have fifty of anything, so for comfort and a worry-free wedding day make a list of everything that will be required from the party rental agency and check it off as acquired: chairs, tables, dishes, glasses, punch bowl, silver, set-ups, tubs to ice champagne, ice, cake table, napkins, tablecloths, ash trays, cigarettes and matches. Each person helping, whether friends or professional, should have a specific assignment to carry out.

If electrical outlets are being used outdoors for fans, musicians, or cooking equipment, make sure the existing system can carry the extra load.

Whether your lighting plan calls for a chandelier hanging from a garlanded tent pole, lanterns hung from tree limbs, candles floating in a pool, or sand-filled paper bags into which a taper is stuck, the softness of the setting will insure relaxed guests and happy memories.

The garden bride of 1974 may wear her "Something Blue" in the form of a pale sash and matching blue stockings; her invitation may be informal in wording and bordered with sprays of garden flowers; she might write her own ceremony and use bird seed or grass seed instead of rice. But, she will cherish always her special kind of wedding day celebrated in the house and garden of her childhood — the symbolic transition from her roots to theirs.

Honeymoon planner

When choosing a honeymoon destination the two most important things to consider are the time you have available, and the amount of money you can afford to spend. It's best to be honest with each other.

If you can only afford a five-day jaunt through the neighboring state in your trusty old VW, a little advance planning can make those five days as special as the most glamorous European whirl. Promise her Europe for your second honeymoon. It will still be there.

It's your responsibility to make the hotel reservations. You can do this through a travel agency, or make them yourself by telephone or letter. A small deposit is usually required (a sum equivalent to three night's charges, in the Caribbean). If you buy a "honeymoon package," you prepay (pay the whole thing, sometimes even including tips, in advance).

In either case, you will receive a deposit receipt which signifies confirmation of your reservation. Take it with you so that when you pay your bill at the end of your stay, you can give your deposit receipt to the cashier, in part or in full. It's also your responsiblity to make the plane reservations either through a travel agent or at the ticket office of the airline you've chosen to fly.

Arrange to pick up or have the tickets delivered well in advance of the wedding date. Immediately double-check them to make sure the date and time of your reservation is correct. You don't need a last minute hassle.

If you are going on a cruise, book the space on the ship, and here we'd defintely advise you to use the services of a travel agent. Again, pick up the tickets well in advance. How much money should you take?

More than you think. Basically, the answer depends on how much you've paid for in advance. If you've paid for part of your hotel bill, you can easily calculate the rest. Then you must take a suitable amount for daily expenses, like meals, drinks, etc.

Add on for irresistible extras like SCUBA-diving lessons, or a shopping spree for your bride. Estimate what you'll need for tips, plus something for emergencies. Whatever amount you need, don't carry much in cash! Use travelers cheques.

The average couple takes over $315 in travelers cheques on honeymoon, mostly American Express Travelers Cheques. If you plan to pay your bill with a credit card, make sure that credit card is acceptable and valid. There are islands where credit cards are not accepted in payment of hotel bills; nor are personal checks — another good reason for travelers cheques.

Take some small bills for tips. And if you're off to a foreign country, you may want to convert a small sum into the currency of that country, for expenses on arrival such as taxis and tips. It comes in handy.

Tipping does not have to be a problem, if you don't make it one. The most important thing is to budget enough for what might seem to you to be hefty tips.

Sociologist Specializes In Problems of Women

By ALISON LERRICK
AP Newfeatures

PARIS (AP) — "After 25 years, I'm on my second honeymoon. At last I have something to tell my husband at night," one woman said.

She hasn't remarried. She simply decided to go back to work.

How do you find a job after 10, 15 or 20 years of being a wife and mother? By applying for one. What is the fastest way to lose a job? By getting the wrong one, says Evelyne Sullerot, a sociologist who specializes in the problems of women.

L'Institut National pur la Promotion Femine, a brand new "school" under the auspices of the Ministry of Education, is dedicated to helping women get out of the rut where marriage put them.

"After years in the home, women don't want to do the same work as before their marriage. They've changed. Meanwhile, business methods have progressed. It's impossible for the older generation of women that stopped working to compete with young college graduates," said Mrs. Sullerot, director of the institute.

The frail-looking blonde herself took time off from work between 1949 and 1957 to raise her four children. She emerged from her pots and pans to found the French Family Planning organization.

"During those years I didn't work 'outside,' but I never worked harder in my life," Mrs. Sullerot says wryly.

Today she supervises women going through an aptitude reactivation and vocational guidance course in the institute's classrooms. Four hours a day, for a four-week period, four groups of 20 women go through the course.

What they learn is not to type or keep books, but simply to diagnose their aptitudes, dust out the corners of their minds and to discover new fields of endeavor.

"Many businesses seek mature women who are more stable than the young. France historically has always had more women working than the United States. But after World War II the bourgeois mentality took over. Women who stayed at home were highly respected," Mrs. Sullerot explained.

Today the opposite is true. "A woman who stays at home is less than nothing. She feels a loss of prestige and self respect. Her friends work and so do her daughters," she added.

Student at the institute fall into two groups: those who need to work for financial reasons and those who have a psychological need.

"Many women are divorced, widowed or brutally abandoned. These are our SOS cases. Others have grown-up children and think that they don't exist any more," Mrs. Sullerot said.

Students learn through audio-visual and spatial exercises to reawaken aptitudes of memory and attention. They review logic for solving problems. They renew communications methods. They also learn vocabulary lists relating to economy and technology.

In short, the course is a giant step toward what Mrs. Sullerot calls "precision."

"Women must learn objectivity and mental rapidity. This is the direct opposite of Gallic charm and American liberal arts education," she added.

Students not only grade themselves on their results but learn to accept the harsher grades of other students, a useful training for business. They also play roles of boss and employe or secretary, which teaches them how to take orders.

"In the business world, women must learn to leave their personal problems at home. How many women cry when their boss yells at them. They feel, 'He doesn't like me'," Mrs. Sullerot said.

During the month of intensive training, students also receive lectures from businessmen in various fields and make field trips to several companies.

Getting better mileage from a big car

For many years, Herb Adams was a development engineer with General Motors' Pontiac division. His knowledge and expertise as an automotive engineer is unquestioned, either in the drafting rooms of Detroit or the pits of the southern NASCAR ovals. Now a design consultant with offices in Santa Ana, California, Adams has conducted for Motor Trend one of the most exhaustive studies of big-car mileage factors ever compiled—from axle ratios to radial tires. On the following pages, Adams relates the findings of his study.

The question is this: How can you get better mileage from your big car? The single most important factor affecting your car's mileage is you, the driver. Assuming you know all the tricks of economy driving, we're going to examine the mechanicals of a typical full-sized American car—and show you how to get better gas mileage.

The purpose of our tests was to determine what fuel-economy improvements might be made to a typical, full-sized American four-door sedan. Most of the results were interesting, some of them surprising.

Although cars of different makes and with different equipment might not respond exactly like our test car, the trends and overall effects would be the same.

We used professional drivers and calibrated equipment in our test study. The data on the next few pages shows what the car is capable of doing, and the results from one test to the next can be compared in good faith. All exhaust emission equipment was disconnected to eliminate this variable. The elimination of the emission controls and the use of optimum test conditions make the fuel economy values greater than those experienced by most motorists today. Again, it should be emphasized that we were looking for trends and effects.

Our test program was limited to those car factors that could easily be changed and quickly tested on one vehicle. It does not include many of the factors that might effect fuel economy. (Internal engine efficiency would have a pronounced effect on overall car fuel economy but we felt that type of investigation was beyond the scope of our tests.)

The data shown here was acquired from a full-sized American car. Test weight of the vehicle was 4800 pounds and unless otherwise noted, the car was equipped as follows:

—V-8 engine
—Two-barrel carburetor
—Single exhaust
—Standard camshaft
—8.5 to 1 compression ratio
—Automatic transmission
—H-78 tires
—All exhaust emission equipment disconnected
—Four-door sedan body

Gas prices up three cents

BOSTON (AP) — The U.S. Department of Labor has announced that regular and premium gasoline prices in the Boston area increased an average of three cents per gallon between January and February.

The regional office of the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics reported that the figure represents a one-month, increase of 6.4 per cent in regular gasoline prices and 6.1 per cent in premium.

The U.S. city average increases for the same period showed 5.7 per cent increase for regular and 5.2 per cent increase for premium.

In order to isolate the economy and performance effects of each test condition, great pains were taken to obtain consistent and repeatable data. At all times, the driver drove the car to obtain the best possible economy of performance, depending on the objective of the test. No tricks were used to improve the data. Tests were conducted on level roads under warm, dry weather conditions with wind velocities of less than 10 mph. Data was taken several times in both directions and averaged.

Three data points were taken to determine fuel economy. 1) Level road at 50 mph. Although this is not a likely condition in actual driving, it does provide a very controlled point for comparing one car with another. 2) Simulated city driving. The car was driven over an established course that simulated city driving. There was no traffic and the car was driven to get the best economy while maintaining the speed schedule. The numbers will probably look high, but they represent what can be achieved under ideal conditions. 3) Simulated highway driving. The car was driven over a course that simulated highway driving. This particular course represented driving over regular country roads rather than on expressways. Again, the course and the driving schedule was chosen for consistent and comparable data. The values achieved might appear high, but you could get similar results if you drove carefully.

Performance data was taken simply by measuring the time in seconds it took for the car to accelerate from 0 to 60 miles an hour. As with the fuel economy data, conditions were controlled and optimized to obtain repeatable and comparable data.

Since the range of axle ratios and engine sizes were limited, we were careful in projecting results beyond the limits of our data. The trends indicated, however, would be the same over a wide range of car weights, car sizes, and vehicle types.

EPA mileage guide in '75 models

DETROIT (AP) - The federal Environmental Protection Agency is planning to circulate simplified gasoline mileage data as an easy-to-use guide for buyers of 1975-model cars.

The agency currently is the only federal office performing fuel economy tests. It has been releasing figures for the past two years on about 500 cars, often including more than one result for the same model with varying engines and gear ratios.

Eric Stork, deputy director of the agency, says the current method of releasing the figures is too difficult for the average consumer to use.

"It's just not descriptive to the public," he says.

"If I were your personnel director and I handed you a phone book and told you the person you wanted to hire is listed inside, I'd probably be right, but I wouldn't be very helpful," he said.

Under a new plan still on the drawing board, Stork said similar car models with the same weight and engine size would be grouped together for convenience.

The agency's mileage tests, a byproduct of emission testing performed in its Ann Arbor laboratory, has come under constant criticism from auto executives.

They say the agency has been consistently low in computing fuel economy. Stork concedes the automakers "rightly protested the validity of a sample of one."

Results of the new individual test runs will be published in the Federal Register and will coincide with the fall introduction of new car models.

It happens every spring

By MIKE KNEELAND
MDC Staff

There can be no doubt about it: It Happens Every Spring.

It usually happens that first warm day when you don your winter jacket and by mid-afternoon it's slung around your right arm.

You're usually a good note taker in class but today your mind is out the window. Five minutes into the class you discover you've missed the definition of a cis molecule. The rest of the class might as well be taught in Latin.

But still, you don't care. Your spirit feels free as the air strikes your face after class: "To hell with organic chemistry!"

On your way to the student union you notice something you may have neglected during the cold, winter months: the opposite sex. They seem more beautiful than ever and you've "got the feeling that everybody knows." During Spring, it just seems to come more often.

You know you've got a 12:20 rhetoric class and no matter how hard you try, you just can't force yourself to go. In a burst of self confidence you boldly announce to yourself: "I'm cuttin' class!" Surprisingly, you feel good.

Looking around you see a dog swimming across the pond. Only two months ago you were skating on its ice, but that seems so, so long ago.

It's almost four o'clock now and you still feel great. Love that Spring weather!

And nothing goes better with that first Spring day than an ice cold six-pack. What you've forgotten, however, is that nothing goes worse with an empty stomach than an ice cold six-pack.

The first six taste so well a buddy makes another run to the local package store. By the time you're on beer number nine it's 7 o'clock and it seems to be getting colder. By the time the 12th brew hits your lips, you know you shouldn't be outside without a jacket on.

During the short night there is an occasional visit to the bathroom. Between visits you recall the 8 o'clock quiz you're sure to miss.

Come morning, the hangover dominates every move you make and every word you utter. You're out of aspirin. You need a cold drink of coke but you have none. You also need sleep but a guilty conscience won't let you. You want your Mommy.

Yes, there can be no doubt about it: It Happens Every Spring.

The auto layoff

Unemployment and free time

BY TERRY RYAN
Associated Press Writer

When Bob Smith graduated from Kearsley High School in 1969, his father gave him a '61 Chevy and got him a job at Buick.

Three months ago, the foreman at the head of the assembly line in factory 36 handed him a K-release. Indefinite lay-off.

Bob Smith is a 23-year-old automobile worker, a young American worker complete with wife, two kids and a $164-a-month mortgage. He likes to spend weekends at the drag races, tells you he's as well off as the next guy and says he doesn't care much for his job.

FLINT, Mich. (AP) — Bob Smith thought during high school that he might become a mechanic. He liked cars, liked tinkering with engines. His father had worked for Buick for 20 years then, 25 years now. Five days after graduation, Bob went into the shop.

"You live in Flint, it's the only good paying job there is. Really, there ain't no other place you can work."

His first job was putting in rear main seals as the empty motor blocks started down the line in factory 36, the engine assembly plant. Webbed by air hoses and parts conveyors, he put in rear main seals, 197 an hour, every hour, every day.

"I was taking home $130 a week, right off the bat. I'd never even thought about money like that."

He bought a new car, a Chevy II, built up the engine and raced it superstock at the Tri-City Dragway. He was drafted in September, 1969 and went to Vietnam, to the DMZ.

"There were maybe a few kids whose parents were rich enough to buy them out. But everybody, just about everybody, goes into the Army in Flint."

He was riding on the side of an M-48 tank when a pair of land mines blew the tracks off. The flash seared the backs of his eyes, scarring the retinas. The Veterans Administration rated him 60 per cent disabled by the loss of vision.

"They put me in for a Purple Heart. I was supposed to get one, but I never did. They never said nothing about it."

Smith can see well enough to drive a car, but the state will not give him a driver's license. He says Buick did not want to hire him back when he got home. The union intervened. He went back, in factory 36.

"I went right back where I was. I knew the job already. I might have had a hard time at another job."

Bob and Nancy met at McDonalds after his Vietnam service. They had known each other in high school.

"I thought she was a stuck up bitch."

"I thought he was a red neck."

"She told this guy I was running around with that she wanted to go out with me."

They have two children now. Mike, 6, is Nancy's son from her first marriage. It is Bob's first marriage. Mary, their daughter, is just learning to walk.

Living the family life, and working for Buick. He worked at other stations, did other jobs. But, always, on the line.

"Sometimes you go in there, it's like a jungle. Everything is banging and hissing all over the place. All the tools are compressed air, that's how they run, the wrenches and all that. Each one makes a noise, a different noise. After a while, you get used to it. But every so often, you know, it just hits you."

People on the lines live with the monotony of it a lot of ways. Some go in with a half pint of Gilbey's gin tucked in the belt; others punch in with two or three marijuana joints tucked in the end of a pack of Kools.

Bob Smith has $145 in the credit union, $150 in the bank and says that they will make it.

"It's going to be a little tight. I'm used to getting paid every week. But, yeah, we can make it."

Nancy had driven him down to the state unemployment office that morning. He collected the first of his $85 weekly checks. He is eligible for 26 of them.

"Getting free money, it doesn't bother me a bit. Except I was getting more when I was working."

Smith made $13,320 last year, a fair chunk of it on overtime. He took home from $160 to $200 or more a week.

Few unemployed auto workers have $179 government checks coming in every month. But many, at least in Flint, have working wives or some other source of family income. On the whole, the Smiths' income, and their expenses, are not unusual.

They bought the house on Esta Drive last summer. For $164 a month—mortgage, insurance and taxes—they have three bedrooms, cedar shake shingles and an aluminum canopy over the front door. They also have two lots, almost half an acre.

They spend $45 a week on groceries and the last bill from Consumers Power was $52. They make $80 monthly car payments and send Sears $40 a month on the lawn tractor that sits in the garage beside the car Bob used to race. He can't race it anymore, but doesn't want to sell it.

"Buick makes big cars. People just aren't buying big cars now. That's why I'm out of work."

Like most people in Flint, Bob Smith believes that things will get better. People will start buying big cars, Buick will make smaller cars. If worse comes to worst, it might even be September, when next year's models roll out. But things will get better.

"I just hear what's going around. That everybody's going back by September. You know, around August or September. That's what you hear. I don't think it will be any longer."

"People with less than a year, with maybe a year or two, they'll never get called back. But sooner or later, I'm going to get called back. I got '68 seniority. Things will pick up. Hell, I'm going to retire from Buick."

But somewhere there is a grain of doubt.

"Even if it is September, that wouldn't be too bad.

The ultimate vehicle

It's green, metal and hides in tall grass

By MICHAEL COLLINS
Associated Press Writer

STORRS, Conn. (AP) -- What's green, carries four men and hides in tall grass?

It is the 20th century version of the black stallion, broken to ride. The Walter Mitty in us dreams of owning a surplus model, of feeling its gutsy growling power beneath us as we climb Pike's Peak the back way, or outrun enemy machine gun fire in Dead Man's Gulch.

During the period between World War I and World War II, the U.S. army was looking for a replacement for the horse, a vehicle that could carry up to four men and some supplies and do reconaissance. And under the pressure of an increasing war threat, the answer was developed in just 49 days by a small Pennsylvania firm in 1940 -- the legendary military Jeep.

"The military was looking for a very small vehicle that would in effect replace the horse . . . a general vehicle that would do what the horse did. They were interested in one that was light and very short so that it could be hidden in tall grass," said Dr. Duane Denfield, a sociologist at the University of Connecticut here. He is the author of "The Indestructable Jeep," a 150-page history of the all-purpose vehicle.

"There is a controversy on how it came to be called the Jeep," he said in an interview.

"There are stories that its initials were g.p, standing for general purpose, and it became 'Jeep'.

"I think it probably evolved from the Popeye cartoon character, Eugene the Jeep, who appeared in 1936. The character could become invisible and could solve all sorts of problems and dilemmas. I think that's the thing the military people compared the Jeep to," Dr. Denfeld said by phone Monday.

"One of the spectacular things was from the time the Army conceived the vehicle and put out bids to manufacturers, the first model was build in only forty-nine days. This was really a spectacular techinical achievement."

The original Jeep met these specifications, but in its development became heavier and taller than what the Army wanted. Attempts to reduce its size have been unsuccessful, Denfeld said.

The original developer, American Bantam Co. of Butler, Pa., lost the contract after a few thousand vehicles were produced to two larger firms, Ford and Willys.

-The Jeep "was soinf q

The Jeep "was doing so well in testing that it became clear the Army was going to need a lot more.

There was a controversy over whether or not it was fair play, but Ford and Willys came into the picture and then received all the contracts," Denfeld said.

"Bantam was forced out of production and was given a contract for little trailers used behind Jeeps and quarter-ton trucks,, but went bankrupt after World War II."

Except for the increase in size, Denfeld said there is little difference between today's military Jeep and the originals in 1940.

Gary's computer speed deliveries

BY BRENDA W. ROTZOLL

MANCHESTER, N.H. UPI — Gary Wallin's business speeds fuel deliveries, helps stop bank robberies and tells the babysitter how to cope with a chronically ill child.

He does it with a computer he built himself and cigaretpack size radios which anyone anywhere in the world can reach if his telephone has the capability of dialing the Manchester telephone exchange.

Comex, Inc., founded by Wallin and fellow engineer William J. Cullen in 1969, is best known in New Hampshire for being "those people who called the police" when bank robbers shot a guard during an attempt to rob an armored car the Friday before Christmas.

Security guard Robert Broyer dragged his wounded partner to their truck, slammed down a loading ramp door to keep the gunmen inside the building, and grabbed the two-way radiophone in his truck to yell "ninety-nine, ninety-nine."

"That's part of our code setup. It means they're being robbed. They guys were in a little bit of a panic. Our girls calmed them down and found out where they were and what had happened, at which point we called the Manchester Police Department and alerted the hospitals to receive gunshot cases," Wallin said.

The robbers escaped through a Oarking ramp before police arrived.

The guards called for help via a standard radiophone. Comex switchboard operators had to use the pint-size radio pagers to let the guards' boss at Manchester security know a robbery was in progress. His telphone was busy so they sent him a pager notice to hang up fast for an urgent call.

The radio pagers are trigered by someone on a standard telephone dialing the proper seven-digit number. It goes through the phone lines to the computer Wallin built. It sends an alert signal to the unit paged. Then the caller hears a beep and has 10 seconds to deliver a message, such as "call your office for new orders." For a longer message, the caller must redial for another 10 seconds of time.

Wallin said his firm helps in the energy crisis by letting businesses such as fuel oil deliverers operate more efficiently, saving time and gasoline by avoiding backtracking on routes.

"A serviceman goes into an area, leaves, then finds he must return to the same area.

Man waits years for paint job

NEWLYN, England (AP) -- School teacher Bobby Waters wanted his car resprayed and a friend recommended Harold Thomas's garage in Camborne, Cornwall, as "slow but thorough."

True enough -- that was back in 1969 and Waters is still waiting for his car. Meanwhile, Thomas lends him cars, "calls me Bobby and invites me in for tea," said the frustrated Waters.

"But each time all he does is tell me the car is nearly ready."

"Best team I've ever coached" - Dick Garber

Gorillas grapple for NCAA bid

"This year's team is probably the best that I have ever coached," said UMass varsity lacrosse coach, Dick Garber, of his 1974 team.

In fact, Garber's Gorillas, (as they are more commonly known) although they are 0-2 so far this season, have shown signs of being an excellent team.

"This year we are very well-balanced," said Coach Garber, "We have excellent depth in all positions."

The Gorillas lost their first two games of the season: the first to Hofstra by a score of 7-6, and the second to Cortland State, 10-9 in four overtimes. Against Hofstra they started off tight and battled back to tie the game, 6-6 in the fourth quarter. A penalty allowed Hofstra to score the winning goal. In the Cortland State game they scored the first two goals of the game and it seemed as if they were going to run away with the game. However they played well in spots and other times they looked bad, missing passes and misfiring on shots. UMass dominated play in the overtime periods and outshot Cortland, 10-3 but Cortland managed to make their last shot good.

In those first two games UMass did not show the consistency with which they played all during pre-season. In pre-season scrimmages the Gorillas outplayed all their opponents. Some of their victims include Army, Yale, and the Brine Lacrosse Club. On their Spring trip to Long Island they plastered three excellent teams: Nassau Community College, 11-4; Princeton, 15-6; and the Tobay Lacrosse Club, 16-6. In all those games the Gorillas played excellent all-around lacrosse. They passed, shot, and ran well. Their fast break and extra-man plays were worked to near perfection. The "run and gun" is probably the strongest aspect of the UMass game. If they run well they can beat any team.

The 1974 version of the UMass team has excellent depth and balance at all positions and everyone has to work together to play a strong and consistent game. Here is a preview of this year's team, broken down by position:

GOAL

The Gorillas have three excellent goaltenders this year. John (O.J.) Rutledge, an All-American last year, is the premier goalie. He was a key in helping UMass compile a 10-3 record last year. Last year one of his wins was a 12-0 shutout of M.I.T. - a feat very rarely accomplished in lacrosse. Rutledge will again be the starting goalie. The other two netminders are Bobby Druland and Jim Haddad.

DEFENSE

Last year the UMass defense was strong and consistent. However, this year the Gorillas will be minus one of their top defensemen, John McCarthy. McCarthy will be out for the season, due to a knee injury incurred in a sledding accident. The Gorillas' other two defensemen, Billy Blaustein and Rich Lally will be back. Russ Incorvia, who also played well last year, will be starting at crease defense in place of McCarthy. Other defensemen expected to see action are Walter Foley, Tim Murphy, and Kurt Olson.

MIDFIELD

UMass is very deep at midfield this year. Tri-captain and All-American, Hirsch Seidman will bolster the midfield. Last year Seidman scored 24 points on twelve goals and twelve assists. Other returning lettermen include Gene Hardiman, John Martin, Jack Moran, Bruce Sibson, and Bob Gormley. Other midfielders who will play a lot are Bill Collins, Bill Arnold, and freshmen Steve Pappas, Terry Keefe and Vin LoBello. The Gorillas will rotate three midfields during each game.

ATTACK

This year the Gorillas are expected to have another highscoring attack. However, they did lose Frank Garahan, who left school due to academic problems. Garahan last year compiled 62 points on 55 goals and 7 assists. However, Peter Connolly, who was UMass' third leading scorer with 47 points, is back, Harry McVey, freshman Jeff Spooner, and Sophomre Andy Scheffer will also rotate at attack. Spooner, a high-school All-American and McVey, a Junior college All-American should take up some of the scoring slack caused by the loss of Garahan and Fred Michels (55 points).

OTHER NOTES - UMass will be playing in a new division this year. They moved up to division I from division II. They will be among such perennial lacrosse powerhouses as Virginia, Johns Hopkins, Navy, and Maryland... UMass can win a berth in the NCAA tournament if they can finish in the top eight in the rankings... This year UMass iill play 14 games - 5 home and 9 away, including one under the lights at Boston College... Last Thursday's game against UConn will be played Sat., April 13.

Save the Berkshires

BOSTON (AP) — A bill aimed at protecting the beauty of the mountains in Berkshire County was supported and attacked by Berkshire legislators yesterday.

One of the most important features of our county is our mountains," Rep. Dennis J. Duffin, D-Lenox, told the legislature's Natural Resources and Agriculture Committee in support of the bill.

"They are important for the people who live there because of them, and for people who spend their vacations there. It's important to find ways to preserve them so they are developed in the appropriate way."

Rep. Anthony P. McBride, D-Adams, criticized the bill as providing no standards on beauty and a confusing hearing procedure. Rep. Joseph S. Scelsi, D-Pittsfield, said, "I think the aim could be accomplished by zoning and a bill like this is not necessary."

Scelsi also said the bill "provides no real way of determining what is a scenic mountain and what isn't."

The bill would permit Berkshire County communities to empower conservation commissions, selectmen, or mayors to regulate development of mountains.

Criteria for regulation provided in the bill are protection of water supplies, prevention of pollution and erosion, control of flooding and preservation of "the natural scenic qualities of the environment."

Decisions of the local bodies could be reviewed and modified by the commissioner of natural resources.

Long training period preps rowers for Dad Vail defense

By Bob Estelle
MDC STAFF

This year's varsity crew team is looking to defend its championship title, which they earned by winning the Dad Vail last year. Four of last year's rowers are returning and coach Mike Vespoli is optimistic about his varsity's chances of repeating.

Senior Rich Clair leads the returnees. He rowes in the fifth position. The other returnees are juniors Peter Herg (second position), Paul Gowen (third position), and Bill Fitzpatrick (sixth position).

The newcomers are Bowman John Moynihan, a soph, senior Jack Watkins (fourth position), senior Peter Flood (seventh position) and soph Steve Loomer (stroke position). Soph Bruce Kline is the coxsupin.

Other team members who could crack the lineup are juniors Jim Bouzienis, Bill Vose and Mike Kaczmsrek; senior Rich Iamara and soph Kevin Connor.

Besides the first team, UMass also races another upperclass team and two freshman teams.

Conditioning is a nine month process for crew members. They start in the fall by rowing on the nearby Connecticut River for the first eight weeks of the first semester. Then, the weather forces them to go indoors to their facilities in the North P.E. Building. There, they lift weights on the weightlifting machine downstairs and practice their rowing on the ergometer located in Coach Vespoli's office and Bill Gillin to team up in the two-mile, and the result was a UMass victory. It's depth like this that typifies the distance corps. Tom Wilson, Tom Maguire, Paul Segersten, John Scheer, John McGrail, Andy Levy and Chris Farmer make up the rest of the distance squad while Jack Maloney is a swing man. Distance events include the mile, two-mile, six-mile and the steeplechase.

The quartet of Pete Byron, Jim Hunt, Devin Croft, and Weeden Wetmore paces the middle distance runners. This segment of the team provides most of the runners for the relays and the 440 and 880-yard runs. Barron Littlefield, Steve Crimmin, Larry Whitfield and Mike Gillen round out the runners who combine strength and speed in the middle distances.

Another area in which the team enjoys superior performers is that of sprints and hurdles. Marshall Pendleton leads a group of competitors who run the dash events and the four legs of the 440-yard relay. This group consists of Tony Pendleton, Tom Beland, Bob Adsmson and Larry Whitfield. with occasional help from Larry Beland and Ken Adamson.

Co-captain Jim Hennessy (Jack Maloney is the otherco-captain) and Curt Stegerwald are the stalwarts of the hurdle crew. Skip Cobb and Pete Famulari add a little depth to the squad.

The Adamsons, Ken and Bob, are the point-getters of the jumping events. With Ken Adamson making twin victories a habit, Pete Ryan and Mike Geraghty have had to settle for second or third. Senior John Osborne leads a trio of high jumpers, which includes Conrad Gess and Mark Hughes. Dan Grigus has been making some welcome waves in the pole vault.

Although the weightmen have had problems scoring, each individual improves with experience Bob Bocaah, Scott Herman, Tom Lonergan and Ed Mcllency compete in the weight events while Kevin Hall is among the leading javelin throwers.

With about a month left to bring the times down, add to the distances and top new heights, the team appears to be in fine shape. Then, starting May 11, the UMass Spring Track team will begin the all-familiar drive for New England supremacy.

Dedicated women aim for College World Series

By DAVE VARG
MDC Staff

During their team meeting, when strategy and business was discussed, the women's softball team more closely resembled a group of women at a bridge club meeting, than an athletic organization. They bandied about such momentus topics as unattractive uniform socks and the pros and cons of hitting tennis balls inside the WOPE gymnasium. They were occasionally inattentive and restless during the sixty minute session when strategy and fundamentals were being discussed.

But even though they may have difficulty in focussing all energies on their sport during a classroom session, the women softball players certainly didn't lack devotion when they took to the field. Outside, the women replaced their feminine conduct with slick fielding, smooth swinging and hard running.

The womens' softball squad, under the direction of Carol "Doc" Oglesby, appears to be embarking upon a peak season. The team is blessed with the return of nearly all of last years starters and each expects to improve their performance.

Junior shortstop, Karen Fruzzetti is looking forward to a productive year. Her defense has always been as effective as a well-tuned vacuum cleaner. But her hitting was sub par last season. This year, Karen is anticipating a hitting surge. But from her performance in practice sessions it's hard to believe that hitting is her problem.

Center fielder Jenny Edminster is a highly qualified player and highly respected by Oglesby. Defense is her forte, and she should keep the center field grass safely protected from falling softballs.

Barb Doucet is reputedly one of the best catchers in the nation. Ms Oglesby calls her arm a cannon. Maybe with Pennington leaving, Mac Pherson should take notice.

All other positions are relatively open. And with many palyers capable of handling more spots than one, competition is very keen on the softball squad.

Doc Oglesby is beginning her second year as head coach. With one year under her belt, she too should be more effective. In fact the season is already progressing more smoothly. At this point one year ago the team had barely begun swinging a bat, while this season the crew has been practicing for all of a month.

But even with the added time, Doc realizes that much work is still in store. And when the work has been completed, she feels her team has a good chance of being selected to compete in the college World Series.

But while the women are diligently pursueing softball excellence on the field, in quest of this invitation, they must also pursue financial backing off the field, to pay for the trip.

Winning isn't everything, says Garber

By BEN CASWELL

The year was 1955 and this writer was two years old. That was also the year that Dick Garber took the head coaching reins of the University of Massachusetts varsity lacrosse team. Now at the "ripe old age" of fourty-five coach Garber is starting his twentieth coaching season. "It seems impossible to tell you the truth," he said, because I don't know why, but the time has gone so very very fast. Now the guys kid me when I talk about something that happened two or three years ago, in fact it was probably eight or nine years ago."

Originally from Virginia, coach Garber came north and did his undergraduate work close by, Springfield College. It was here that he first got involved in playing lacross. Later at Penn State where he did his graduate work, he got his first coaching job working there with the freshman team. Looking back, Garber says, "I smile now because you know I really thought that I was doing a heck of a job and I probably was just a real rookie."

In the time since that first "rookie" year coach Garber has seen many changes in the game of lacrosse. As he put it, "the game has changed dramatically. The first ten years I coached here we had three fellows who had never played before. Everybody else came out who had never even tried the game and of course now in the last about five years at least fifty per cent and probably eighty per cent of the guys have played before they came out. So the nature of the coaching has changed from teaching fellows the basics to now more of the strategy kind of a thing. Plus the whole game has changed with the advent of plastic sticks and now there is much more offensive power in a game, a lot more scoring."

Over the years coach Garber had held in addition to his coaching position various league and national committee positions. He was president of the New England Intercollegiate Lacrosse league for four years. In terms of league and national offices in relation to actual coaching, Garber says, "being on some of the league and national bodies was something I enjoyed, although now I've kind of gone the other way and come back to the local thing. Developing the game and the teams right here where it counts is a little more meaningful. When you sit on those national committees, you are talking in terms of the whole country. I'm sure it does some good but you don't see it. If we spend time running clinics for players around here such as the one we ran last summer for Amherst youths, you can really see the results here at the grass roots level."

Throughout his years at UMass coach Garber's teams have compiled one of the nation's finest win-loss records. His 143 wins puts him in a small class of coaches having 100 or more lacrosse wins.

either a prophet before my time or I'm really out to lunch even now. I think essentially that sports are meant to be played for the fun and enjoyment of the people who play them. I think that we've attached an overkill to the idea that winning is the only acceptable outcome and I think we've taken the fun right out of it for half the kids who play. I've expressed to my players and in talks and papers that in terms of my own coaching, winning is not the most important thing, the most important thing is what happens to the kids on the team as a result of playing. Winning is one of the three possible outcomes of competing. You win, you lose or you tie, and I think that people should understand that. Now right away people will say, well that's a great alibi for a loser, yet our team has I think the best win-loss record of any team on campus for twenty years, not just one season but twenty years. So we win, and I think that striving to win for a guy who wants to play is one of the real funs of doing it. But if you try with a fear that you are going to be cut down or chopped up or emasculated if you lose then I think that's really lousey. Players come here from various high schools and when I tell them that, they almost fall off their chairs because up to then they've always been told that the only acceptable thing is to win, and I tell them I'm not going to get fired if we lose and I'm not going to get a new car if we win but what I do expect of them is to give it their best effort, so they can see how good they really can be. I want them to explore that possibility."

Garber said that "this is the best team we've ever had here in terms of the number of good players, we've got good players and good depth at every position, we're well-skilled and in good shape and this should be a very sucessful team." As far as his own personal coaching goals for the team goes he said, "my general goals on a given year are to see the team realize it's own potential." In terms of the team's first near miss against Hofstra, that game is in the past and has to be forgotten. It was a tough loss but the team has the whole season ahead of them and as Garber put it, "we've got a fourteen game schedule and we've got to take every game as it comes, the season is not over because of one loss."

Hustle, depth build Lil Gorilla success

Hustling players and depth at all positions are the tools the JV Lacrosse team has in building a winning season.

The team is also two weeks practice ahead of last year's 6-3 team and might improve on that record. The team has already had three good scrimmages and will have three or four more before the season begins.

"We have some good talent on the club," Coach Russ Kidd said. "Most

"We have some good talent on the club," Coach Russ Kidd said. "Most of the real good freshmen are on the varsity, but that doesn't matter that much as we have some upperclassmen who want to play on the team."

The squad is in a state of flux as no set line-up has been made yet, but goalies Tim Harney and Bob White are expected to work -out some in the goal. Some of the defenders expected to contribute are Bob Morse, Tom Miller, Wayne Martin, Joe Perry, and Dave Boudreau.

The attack men will probably be spearheaded by Ed Childs, Peter Lyons, Dave Lewis, and John May. The midfielders corp will be helped by two former varsity players: Steve Crimmins, who is also track and that's why he's on the JV, and Ben Freidle, who was out last year with an injury. Overall there is more depth and strength in the midfielders with Bobby Graham, Rich Walsh, Larry Heton, Jack Dacey, Joe Hickinson, Bruce Johnson, and Mike Philips being the reason for this.

"The spirit of the team is great. The kids just want to play Lacrosse," said Coach Kidd. "The members of the team either don't have the time to play varsity, or just aren't good enough to play a lot with the varsity."

The junior gorillas start off with their toughest opponent, Brown. "We haven't beaten Brown in the four previous years I've been here. Harvard is the next game we play and they're the second toughest team we play this season," said Kidd.

The team still has three weeks to get it together. Now it's the question of who is going to play. Coach Kidd and his assistant, Greg Norton, are still preparing them for the season, but the time is fast approaching to put the team to the test.

'74 Netmen seek YanCon title

By GLENN I POSTER

Twenty-five years is a long time. That's the current term of UMass tennis coach Steve Kosakowski. He is the senior varsity coach on campus and starts season number twenty-six on an optimistic note.

"Until someone knocks us off in the conference, I feel that we're still number one. I have every intention along with the rest of the players that we'll keep it (the Yankee Conference Championship) this year even though competition between the four schools will be a lot better than it's been in the past," states Coach Kosakowski.

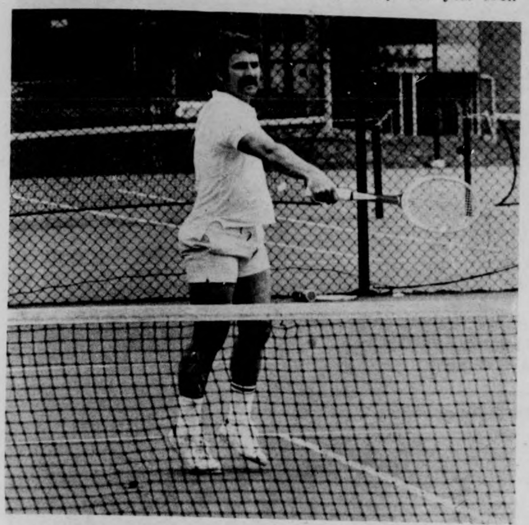
The first six positions on the team have not been nailed down as yet, however Bob Spheiser will probably be in the number one slot. Spheiser, returning from last year's YanCon championship squad, is only a junior so the future of the team looks bright at this point. Other spots are up for grabs. Said Kosakowski, "As for outstanding players — I don't know any...we'll find out as the season goes on."

The balance on the team is good, though definitely not as strong at the top as many opponents will be. Of course, the personnel changes from one year to the next, so there may be a "sleeper" in the crowd of new faces. Graduation stripped the team of Steve Ferber and Ted Donahue who both had outstanding seasons last year. A substantial loss to the team was Gary Ney, who decided to give up the sport this year.

As far as the opposition goes, the strongest teams in the Independent League will be Amherst followed by Springfield, BC, and MIT. Cross-town rival Amherst managed to defeat the Minutemen last year, 6-3. (a copy of the schedule appears on page 19 of this special). The Yankee Conference Championships will be held at URI the weekend of April 26th. In the tourney, UMass will be competing against very strong squads from UConn, Vermont, and New Hampshire.

The team has been in "spring training" on what is known as the "Tea-Cup Circuit." These were scrimmages held earlier this year indoors. The team broke even — losing to Williams and defeating Amherst.

The opening home match will be this Thursday at three o'clock vs. URI.



Don Douglas, returning senior from Newton, shows his form on the backhand. Douglas will be one of the keys to a successful season for the defending YanCon champs.

Who to watch

- Fred Braley - Senior Captain
- Donald Douglas - returning sr.
- Mark Brass - returning sr.

Golfers hope to continue Spring success

By RICH SEVIERI

The UMass golf team opens it's spring campaign at Rhode Island today, hoping to continue their high caliber performances of the Fall season.

The Mass golf team opens it's spring campaign at Rhode Island today, hoping to continue their high caliber performances of the fall season.

Coach Fan Gaudettee's linksmen gained valuable experience last Fall by playing in head-to-head competition with some of the finest teams in the East. Gaudette said that playing eastern golf powerhouses such as Noth Caroline, Maryland, and Temple in the ECAC and Yale Invitational Tournament will be to the benefit of the team this Spring.

Last Fall the Minutemen captured their first ECAC Regional title, finished second in the Connecticut State Open, and finished a strong fifth in their first ECAC Fall Championship.

Joe Artman played up to his advanced billing as the team's number one player throughout the Fall. He was medalist in the Western Conn. State Open with a 75, and qualified for medalist play in the ECAC Championship with a 77 at Hickory Ridge in the Regional competition. In both these rounds Artman finished in the dark, and artificial light from cars and spotlights were employed so he could complete his rounds. With the change in Daylight Savings Time Dave won't have to carry a flashlight in his bag this spring.

Dave Kern played consistent golf throughout the fall season, breaking 80 in most of the tournaments. He was co-medalist in the ECAC Regionals with a 76. Coach Gaudette will need the continued consistency of Artman and Kern, his No.1 and No. 2 players for a strong team showing this Spring.

The play of freshman John Lasek was the surprise of the Fall season. Lasek playing in his first major competitions was team medalist at Pleasant Valley in the ECAC Champtionship and the Yale Invit. tournament. This spring, he should be number three on the team ladder.

Coach Gaudette will be experimenting with the other four spots on the starting seven. Jim Moriarity, a freshman, will get the starting nod in today's match at Point Judith, Rhode Island. Howard Turban, a transfer from golf powerhouse Houston, will also start. Turban has been touring Hickory Ridge in the low 70's during practice, and Gaudette thinks he has the potential to become a "great golfer."

"It's hard to predict how you're going to do in a golf season," said Gaudette. "But I think that by the time the Yankee Conference and New England championships roll around we'll be in good shape. With some luck in the New Englands we could make it to the Nationals."

Spring track hopes to ride NU upset to New England title

After Saturday's upset of Northeastern, one word best describes the outlook for the remainder of the spring track season—bright.

In defeating the indoor New England champions, the Minutemen upped their record to 2-1. The trackmen have two more home meets showing on their schedule, and they will face tough competition in the Boston College relays, the Penn relays, and a dual meet with Dartmouth. These meets will help prepare the squad for the championships meet, which include the YanCon's, the New Englands and the IC4A's.

There have been a number of good performances so far this season, but the team has been outscored in first place finishes. In order to be considered a threat to win the New Englands, UMass will need more quality performances.

The victory over Northeastern has to be a big psychological lift for the team. It showed that UMass is a better team outdoors and that the team members can work together to win. During the meet-deciding two-mile, teammates lined the track in an effort to give Randy Thomas, Bill Gillin and Tommy Wilson spiritual support so that UMass could move into the lead.

Looking at the team, it is probably best to start with the strengths—and the distance men are definitely a strength. Standard-setting Randy Thomas (what more can be said about him?) leads a group of runners that can enjoy the extra events of the outdoor season. Jack Maloney and lofty Chris Farmer gave NU's Mike Buckley some competition in the mile, enabling Thomas and Bill Gillin to team up in the two-mile, and the result was a UMass victory. It's depth like this that typifies the distance corps. Tom Wilson, Tom Maguire, Paul Segersten, John Scheer, John McGrail, Andy Levy and Chris Farmer make up the rest of the distance squad while Jack Maloney is a swing man. Distance events include the mile, two-mile, six-mile and the steeplechase.

The quartet of Pete Byron, Jim Hunt, Devin Croft, and Weeden Wetmore paces the middle distance runners. This segment of the team provides most of the runners for the relays and the 440 and 880-yard runs. Barron Littlefield, Steve Crimmin, Larry Whitfield and Mike Gillen round out the runners who combine strength and speed in the middle distances.

Another area in which the team enjoys superior performers is that of sprints and hurdles. Marshall Pendleton leads a group of competitors who run the dash events and the four legs of the 440-yard relay. This group consists of Tony Pendleton, Tom Beland, Bob Adamson and Larry Whitfield with occasional help from Larry Beland and Ken Adamson.

Co-captain Jim Hennessy (Jack Maloney is the other co-captain) and Curt Stegerwald are the stalwarts of the hurdle crew. Skip Cobb and Pete Famulari add a little depth to the squad.

The Adamsons, Ken and Bob, are the point-getters of the jumping events. With Ken Adamson making twin victories a habit, Pete Ryan and Mike Geraghty have had to settle for second or third. Senior John Osborne leads a trio of high jumpers, which includes Conrad Gees and Mark Hughes. Dan Grigus has been making some welcome waves in the pole vault.

Although the weightmen have had problems scoring, each individual improves with experience. Bob Bocash, Scott Herman, Tom Lonergan and Ed McAleney compete in the shotput.

Pitching, fielding will hurt

By MIKE BROPHY

Coming off the recent loss to Boston College the Minutemen seem to have their work cut out for them in working towards the New England championship and the Yankee Conference crown, two goals set by Coach Dick Bergquist and his co-captains Ron Beaurivage and John Olson.

The pitching, on which Bergquist was counting to come on reasonably strong, has seemingly fallen to a new all-time low as they could serve nothing but mediocre stuff against the Eagle on a windy Sunday afternoon.

But that was not the big let down as the fielding simply was not there. Texas-leaguers dropped in when the outfielders failed to call off the infielders and runners advanced to scoring position.

Not only did they fail to take control but when the flies came out toward the wall, they were misjudged on more than one occasion.

Despite these, and other, disappointing notes from Sunday's performance, Dick Bergquist remains optomistic that his ballteam can, indeed, recover and come back to form as they have done in the past. "We have all the potential," he says, "now all we have to do is put the right pieces in the right places."

Around the infield Mike Koperniak and Ron Beaurivage seem to be the main standouts for the Minutemen as both are good in the field as well as at the plate. Beau went one for two at the plate while accounting for one of two UMass rbi's. Craig Allegrezza connected for the other with his line shot that cleared the left field fence. Koperniak went two for four on the day while scoring a run and batting in the second slot in the line-up for the Minutemen.

The look down South was good as they finished 5-3 overall and 3-2 on the regular season. "I thought things would fall in to place up here but, needless to say, I am very disappointed with us today (Sunday)" he said.

This is a young ball team and may just need more time to get acquainted with one another and their respective playing styles. Two new outfielders are rapidly learning the tricks of Lorden Field and should help to solidify the somewhat shaky defense of Sunday.

For some reason things just did not click for UMass in their home opener. It would be a safe bet to say that Bergquist has some changes on his mind and that the nine year coach will bring the Minutemen to another Yankee Conference championship, at least.

Rick Mansen takes a mighty swing but fails to connect as did most of his teammates in Sunday's less. They will be looking to get on the right track today as they face the Yellowjackets of A.I.C.

(Staff Photo-Steve Ruggles)

Defense may be a big problem for the UMass baseball team this spring, as this picture indicates. It is hoped that their powerful hitting will make up for some lost pitching and defense.

McKay confident as JV's ready for opener

By BOB HIGGINS
MDC Staff

After cutting his squad down from the 60 who first tried out to a more workable 22, first-year junior varsity baseball coach Jeff Mckay seems to have little to worry about.

"The only thing I'm worried about is our defense, because we've had to practice; indoors most of the time," said McKay. Other than that, it would seem that the coach has good reasons for his confidence.

McKay has two starting pitchers returning from last year's squad. They are Jim bedard, who was 4-0 last year, and Jim Witherelle. Both men are righthanders.

He also has four fine freshmen hurlers; righthánders Mark Santini and Gordon Smith, and lefthanders Chris Kirby and Dave Tewhill. "This gives us six good starting pitchers which is a nice position to be in," said McKay.

The team is also deep at catcher, which pleases McKay as well. Three men are fighting for the position Bob Moore, last year's starting catcher, and freshmen Kevin Crowley and Mike McLoughlin.

McKay sees his role in the junior varsity program as that of helping the younger players. "The purpose of this is to help the younger players develop in hopes of making the varsity in the future."

McKay has been very pleased with what of he has seen of his team and the baseball program in general. "I'm extremely pleased with my team, and Coack Bergquist (varsity baseball coach) runs a damn good program."

The coach is not too sure about his opponents. "We open next Monday with a doubleheader against Connecticut, who are supposed to be very good," he said. "We also play Harvard and Dartmouth, who should also be quite good."

Right now, however, McKay is not looking that far ahead. The large part of each practice session is spent on defense, because the coach feels this is most important at this point. Once this is remedied, McKay will be able to relax. "The pitching's strong, we've been hitting well, and they have a good attitude," he said. "I think we have a really strong team, and I'd be happy to lose a half dozen guys to the varsity this year," he concluded.

Coach McKay seems to exude confidence at this point, and it would seem that his confidence is justified. The true test will come next Monday against Connecticut.

Stepped minimum wage raise to $2.30 in 1978

WASHINGTON (AP) - Legislation raising the federal minimum wage in stages from $1.60 to $2.30 an hour was signed into law yesterday by President Nixon.

Nixon had vetoed similar legislation last year, and voiced reservations about the measure sent him by Congress. But he said he was signing it because "raising the minimum wage is now a matter of justice that can no longer be fairly delayed."

The measure raises the minimum wage for 36 million workers covered under the 1966 minimum wage law from $1.60 to $2.00 on May 1, with other increases boosting it to $2.30 by Jan. 1, 1976. The $2.30 rate will be effective for all affected workers by 1978.

In addition, the legislation extends federal minimum wage and overtime requirements to 7.4 million additional workers.

When fully effective, the new law will cover 56 million workers.

NIxon signed the bill in his oval office, telling Labor Secretary Peter Brennan, who was seated alongside, that "we wouldn't have it without you."

In a written statement distributed by the White House, Nixon said the new wage schedule fits his criteria for "reasonable increases... phased in so that the very people such increases are intended to help do not find themselves suddenly priced out of the job market.

ELECTION

Today, hundreds of UMies will go to the polls in town, to vote for various Amherst offices. Most students know where their polling places are, but for those who don't, here they are quickly.

First of all, if you have moved and are registered somewhere else, you are still suppposed to vote in the precinct in which you are registered. Southwest residents votes at the precinct 2 polling station, the Amherst Fire Station, next to Louis' Food Store.

Central area residents along with Orchard Hill and the Quad all vote in precinct 3, the Odd Fellow's Hall, next to the town Post Office.

Sylvan residents who are registered are in precinct 7 and should cast ballots at the Amherst Auction Gallery at the junction of Route 116 and Meadow St.

See page two for a more detailed look at the election.

Students rally for Russell Daniels

By DENNY MATTEAU
MDC Staff

A meeting was held last night in the Campus Center in preparation for today's support of Russell Daniels in Boston. Sue Sherry, one of the students organizing support for Daniels, said "What we're going to be doing tomorrow is get public support around this case, to get a governor's commission on it."

About 250 Massachusetts legislators have been contacted regarding Russell Daniels' case, according to Sue Sherry, and about 50 of those have agreed to meet with the students in Boston today.

The "case" involves the murder of an 83-year-old woman in Springfield in 1972 and Daniels' subsequent arrest, trial, and conviction of that murder. Daniels was twenty-eight at the time of the murder, but was said by mental health authorities to be mentally nine years old. The authorities were people interviewed by reporters Brad Davis and John Sablon (of WTIC-TV in Hartford), including Edward Bisson, the director of a half-way house, who was working with Daniels.

Speaking of the reporters Davis and Sablon, Sue Sherry said, "They're more interested in this than just for their awards (which the film "Nine Year-Old in Norfolk Prison won). They have been trying to give the film to Boston stations, but the Boston stations won't touch it."

The only evidence that the prosecution brought to the trial to incriminate Daniels was his confession, a confession which was taken during a seven-hour interrogation with no lawyer present. Daniels' brother, Alto, and other relatives were not allowed to see Daniels at any time immediately after the arrest. According to Alto Daniels, speaking in WTIC's film, the policemuc at the desk told him "I just got here and don't know anything about any Russell Daniels." and then did not check the record to see where Daniels was.

A flyer distributed by the students supporting Daniels explained their involvement in the case. It said, "The current project originated with a group of students in OH 386D, "The Delivery of Health Care", taught by Dr. Ben Ricci....The timeliness of the Daniels case (an election year) and the importance of the broader issues that it represented stirred people to action. The fact that many groups in our society, especially those who are institutionalized, are not presently in a position to demand their civil rights and speak for their own needs necessitates that other citizens act as advocates for these rights and needs."

Daniels' case, according to Sue Sherry, is now "in red tape in the appeals process somewhere."

"We really don't want to see him given a new trial," she said, "we just want to see this past trial declared a mistrial and thrown out. And stuff must be done to prevent this sort of thing from happening again."

Sue Sherry attributed Daniels' arrest and conviction to "the police department's desire to get a case closed quickly." One of the support project's main issues is that "The actions in the Daniels case alone would justify an investigation by a citizens group.", according to their flyer. The flyer goes on to attribute those actions to "racism and lack of understanding of retardation on the part of the police."

Other issues being hit by the students are related to the Department of Mental Health.

Eric Walgren case appeal expected soon

By SHERM BOYSON
MDC Staff

Eric Walgren, the radical of Amherst politics, is expected to announce his appeal of the Walgren vs. Town of Amherst case within a few days.

The case, tried in Boston during the recent UMass intercession, was tried to determine if the Town of Amherst purposely tried to prevent students from voting in the 1973 primary caucus. The caucus was held during the 1973 intercession when most students were not on campus.

The case was ruled in favor of the town by Judge Arthur Garrity of the U.S. District Court in Boston.

The caucus is a primary used by Amherst to narrow the field of candidates for any one office to two persons. Walgren was a candidate for the seat eventually won by Selectman Merle Howes. Walgren lost the primary by 200 votes.

The primary date was originally set to be held during the 1973 intercession. Walgren argued with the town selectmen that the date should be changed to accomodate the students. In December of 1972, the selectmen pledged to change the date if it were legally possible. This was found to be unworkable because many town officials had set their schedule to the original date and could not accomodate a new time. The selectmen then established the original date as the official one.

Walgren contested the case in court on the claim that the students were prevented from participating in the electoral process of the town. The trial was held last January in Boston's District Court with Judge Garrity presiding.

During the trial, the selectmen adopted a policy statement to insure that future election dates would assure full participation of voters, under the suggestion of Judge Garrity.

Garrity closed the trial with the statement that he felt the town "acted in good faith, with no intent to discriminate" in setting the date for the election. This established the feeling that he would rule in favor of the town. Walgren admitted before the decision was released that he felt Garrity would go with the town.

Garrity released a 27 page opinion of the case last March after Walgren threatened legal action if the case was not resolved soon. Garrity's office would give no comment as to whether Walgren's threat had anything to do with the subsequent release of the opinion.

NE Psych Assoc votes Birney pres.

By STEVE FELD
MDC Staff

Hampshire College vice-president Robert C. Birney has been voted president-elect of the New England Psychological Association. He is a former student liaison officer for the association.

When contacted at his home, Dr. Birney explained the association was formed 10 years ago with the primary purpose of presenting high-quality symposiums on a yearly basis, with special attention given to graduate psych majors.

"We usually meet in Boston on an invited-only basis, and work towards the furthering of the discipline of psychology. We like to think of ourselves as being a little ahead of our time with our ideas.

"A system was set up under our present president, Dean Apply, where campus representatives brought the activities of the organization to the attention of psych majors."

Amherst balloting noon to 8 p.m. today

By KEN MOSAKOWSKI
MDC Special

Amherst's annual town election is being held today, with polling places in all seven precincts open from 12 noon until 8:00 p.m.

Voters may indicate their choices for candidates in the following townwide contests:

SELECTMAN — Two seats on the five-member board are being contested by three candidates: incumbents Michael Sullivan and Nancy Eddy, and challenger Kenneth Garfield. Garfield is a third-year student at Hampshire College. (Vote for not more than two.)

SCHOOL COMMITTEE — Two three-year seats on the five-member committee are being contested by four candidates: incumbent Robert Fischer and challengers Maria Roberts, Simon Keochakian, and Arthur Quinton. (Vote for not more than two.) Two candidates are vying for a two-year seat on the committee, caused by the resignation of Nathaniel Reed. They are Gladys Parker and Fred Cheyette. (Vote for one.)

JONES LIBRARY TRUSTEE — Four candidates are competing for two seats on the board: incumbent H. Hills Skillings and challengers Brian McCullough, Herta Paulsen, and Dale Sheckels. (Vote for not more than two.)

All other townwide offices are uncontested.

At the precinct level, more than 100 candidates are running for seats on the Town Meeting, including several students.

In Precinct One, 18 candidates are competing for 15 seats: incumbents Barbara Ford, Donald Mader, George Marston, Clinton May, Dale Sheckels, Robert Shumway, and challengers Sara Berger, Wendell Dodge, Samuel Faizone, Norman Ford, Edward Kaynor, James Ludtke, William Masalski, Surinder Mehta, Brent Spears, Betty Steiner, May Szwacz, and Michael Zlogar. Precinct One includes voters in Village Park Apts., Mill Hollow Apts., Fraternity-Sorority Park, and the Cushman area.

In Precinct Two, 5 candidates are competing for 3 seats: incumbents Loren Beth and Willard Weeks, and challengers Florence Frank, Peter Manning, and Robert Plattner. Precinct Two includes voters in Southwest and Lincoln Apts.

In Precinct Three, 7 candidates are running for 3 seats: incumbents Helen Field, Robert Gass, Flora Hosford, and Thomas Wilkinson, and challengers Peter Kitchell, Jean Shepard, and Karol Wisnieski. Precinct Three includes voters in the Central Area, the Northeast Quad, Orchard Hill, and University Apts.

In Precinct Four, there will be fewer Town Meeting candidates listed on the ballot than there are vacant seats: 14 candidates for three-year terms, with 16 seats vacant. However, within the last 48 hours, at least two write-in candidates have emerged to compete for the two uncontested seats: Bonnie Isman of 49 South Prospect St., and Holly Dominie of 5 Churchill St. Precinct Four includes voters in Brittany Manor, Riverglade Apts., Crown Point Apts., and Amherst College. An Amherst College student, Matthew Cohen, is running unopposed for a two-year seat in the precinct.

In Precinct Five, 18 candidates are competing for 17 seats: incumbents Charles Chase, Evangeline Darity, Joan Golowich, Peter Graham, James Harrington, Everett Kosarick, Susan Lowance, and Helen Whitbeck, and challengers Patrick Brock, Andrew DeToma, Frederick Filios, Charlotte Guyer, Raymond Kucinski, Donald Nielsen, Jamieson Reid, George Scheurer, Kathleen Spencer, and Raymond Werbe. Precinct Five includes voters in Colonial Village, Rolling Green Apts., University Park Apts., and Echo Hill.

Precinct Six will show the hottest contests, with 27 candidates running for 20 seats: incumbents George Como, Joseph Demaradzki, Stevenson Fletcher, Charles Klein, George Levinger, Alfred Mathieson, George May, William Moebius, Anton Mushovic, John Reynolds, and challengers William Atkins, John Banner, Scott Blau, Norman Brown, Frederic Cann, Thomas Chalmers, Alice Epstein, Claire Fortier, Bradlee Gage, John Hewitt, David Hornfischer, Loren Howell, Richard Kofler, Richard Sclove, James Walker, Richard Warner, and Howard Wiarda. Blau and Sclove are both students at Hampshire College. Cann is also a student. Precinct Six includes voters at Hampshire College and Jeffrey Manor Apts.

In Precinct Seven, 13 candidates are running for 10 three-year seats: incumbents Marcia Bates, Steven Brode, Winthrop Dakin, Richard Harper, Pauline Kuzmeski, Robert Lentilhon, and Barbara Southworth, and challengers Frank Decker, Chisato Kitagawa, Susan Malo, William Malo, Jean Murray, and Judith Souweine. Murray is a graduate student in nursing. Also, four candidates are running for three one-year seats: John Adams, Marian Adams, William Annable, and Ellen Wolf.

By JANE MARINO
MDC Staff

Student Senate Presidential Elections will be held Monday, April 22nd in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Undergraduates interested in running for Student Senate President may pick up nomination papers at the Student Senate Office on the third floor of the Student Union.

Nomination papers must be turned into the Senate Office by 6 p.m., Wednesday, with the signatures of at least 25 other undergraduates. The candidates will have a chance to speak before the Senate on the 22nd preceding the vote. They may also have one or two speakers on their behalf.

The Student Senate president is the coordinater for all student and other area government associations. He makes Student Government Association appointments to Faculty Senate and other University-wide committees. In addition to these duties he is the Student Trustee on the Board of Trustees with full voting privileges.

The voting is similar to the electoral college system. There are a total of 96 votes, the Senate having 48, Southwest Assembly 9, Commuter Assembly 9, and other area governments 6. Only the Senate and other area governments may vote.

Erratum

In a story reporting the natural deaths of two UMass students Friday night, The Collegian erroneously transposed the dormitory addresses of the two students.

William E. Burke, dead of Marfam syndrome, was a junior and a resident of Dickinson sixth floor.

John R. Hutchins, dead of complications of epilepsy, lived in the sixth floor of Brown House.

The alternative in the Pioneer Valley

By FRED NOBLES
MDC Staff

If you don't read the Valley Advocate regularly you probably don't know about low cost house construction in this area or how Sweet Pie's act evolved or about the tobacco industry's migrant workers or what's the best daily newspaper in the area.

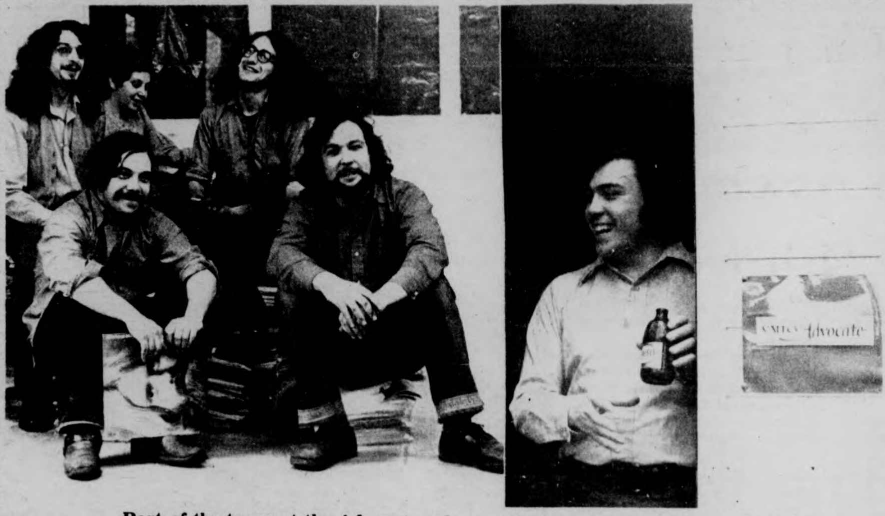
The Valley Advocate is an example of that small branch of American journalism broadly referred to as the "alternative press." What makes these newspapers "alternative" has a lot to do with their news priorities, their formats and their readership. In the words of Advocate editors: "We're writing about stories that don't have ample coverage elsewhere...you might say we take a different slant on topics...we try to be straight forward and get it out to people."

The Advocate has four full time staff members, a couple of regular department editors and a growing number of contributors. Editors Jeff Robinson and Ed Matys first conceived of the idea of an Amherst-Springfield area paper a year ago while they were both working for the Hartford Courant. Ed said he would like to run his own newspaper. "We had a lot of ideas about how we wanted to go about it so we got it all together one night and decided we could do it," he said.

They spent the summer getting the project underway,selling ads "after never having sold any before in our lives" and generally trying to get a paper out with very little outside help.

The first issue came out last September and, according to Jeff, "After that issue writers started coming out of the woodwork." The Advocate then began the slow process of plowing back income to keep up with expanding circulation and content. "When ads revenues went up," said Jeff, "we'd say we could afford another phone; when they crept up again we could afford stationary. You might say that when we began we limited our press run because of stationary."

In the push to keep up with the paper's growing popularity and circulation, the staff recently moved from its original office, a rear basement room complete with kitchen sink, to a larger office on Amity Street. There are no "off" days at the office. On Friday after the most recent issue came out, the staff was back at work. Their phones never stop ringing and contributing writers, advertisers and well wishers fill up the large office.



Part of the troop at the Advocate relax on the latest issue, while a fellow constituent looks on.

Advertising Director Mitch Young, "the good will ambassador of the world," points out, however, that it continues to be a battle to keep the operation going. "We're not funded by anybody, there is no outside money coming in except for the advertising we can sell." Mitch would like to see the paper grow to a size that would allow it to "tie the whole school community together."

The most recent addition to the Advocate's full time staff is Gib Fullerton, a former Collegian business manager and photo editor. Like the other staff members his responsibilities extend beyond his title. "My major responsibility is production with a secondary emphasis on advertising and I do some photography when its needed," he said.

All staff members are interested in expanding the paper's coverage. Recently they have begun to include sports but not, as Editor Robinson noted, "exactly the establishment sports thing." Their most recent offering in this department was a feature on roller derbies.

There are other ideas. Mitch Young would like to get an audio column going, "because that is what people want." Ed Matys says that "one thing we really need is a woman music writer."

One of the Advocate's greatest assets is the number of freelance writers it attracts. Contributors include members of the college community and professional writers who work for many of the areas "traditional" newspapers as well as such "alternatives" as Rolling Stone, Zoo World and the L.A. Free Press.

The Advocate has come to represent a real addition to this area's media. If you want to know why the Bondsville train is no longer running read the Advocate.

Quad gets 'Questor' newspaper

Questor, the new area newspaper in the Quad, recently made its debut. Bill Foster, a resident of Dwight House, is the Editor.

"I've always been interested in Journalism," Bill said. "I've worked on the Collegian for three years. When I moved into the Quad after being in University Year For Action (UYA), I talked to Sally (Dwight Head of Residence), and she told me about the past area newspaper here. People were dissatisfied with it, and it hadn't made use of all the great possibilities," he said.

Aside from his photography and writing for the Collegian, Bill was the Editor of the UYA newsletter, and he worked for the Amherst Record for three years.

Bill said that the important thing to start off was getting people interested and involved. "I actively recruited to do this. People came up to me, too, asking to help out. A lot of them asked what kind of material they could contribute, and I told them 'just about anything.' My main intent is for the paper to be an outlet for expressing forms of creativity and comment," he said.

Getting a printer was another step. "I knew the kind of work that the Star Press in Holyoke could do," Bill said. "I contacted them, and they agreed to do 1,000 copies, four pages each. Lastly, I brought my proposal to the Northeast Area Government for funding, and they were very excited about it. They caught on to the idea and allocated money."

Bill thought of the name for the paper himself. "I felt that Questor was appropriate," he said. "By definition it means 'a seeker; a hunter, or one who journeys in search of adventure.' For the area, this name was a good one. In a sense we're 'hunting out' all the possibilities (creative and otherwise) for the paper."

The first issue of the Questor was originally planned to be out on March 22, the Friday before Spring vacation. It was finally delivered to the Quad residents on April 3. "The paper was late," Bill said, "because when we brought it to be printed, they were backed up with a lot of work. They really worked hard to get it done, and they deserve a lot of credit."

Articles in the first issue were mainly about Quad news and topics, such as the Northeast Office of Student Affairs, the racism issue in the area, the Northeast Women's Center, and the Area Government. The photography was done exclusively by Bill, and a cartoon on the third page was done by Kris Jackson of "Kampus Kapers" fame. The fourth page displayed poetry done by area residents, and some by other, more famous poets such as Sandburg and E. E. Cummings.

As far as feedback from the area residents about the paper is concerned, Bill said, "We put comment cards in the paper for people to fill out and send in," Bill said. "We've only got a few so far, and the remarks have been favorable. On the whole, though, I've gotten more verbal feedback than written, and it's all been good. I'd say the paper has been very successful so far."

For the future, Bill says that he sees "a lot of good things." "There's a chance that we could have our own office for the newspaper at some time," he said. "We'll be printing more phtography, and perhaps some personal columns and advertising."

Media conference tomorrow

Interaction between campus media and black, white and Puerto Rican-Americans, along with the problem of access to media coverage will be discussed next Wednesday at a meeting of several campus media.

Organized by representatives of the Daily Collegian, Black Mass Communications, Black New Service, WMUA, Drum and Eco Latino, the meeting will be open to the entire campus community.

It will be at 2:30 p.m. in Campus Center room 903.

A planned conference of black and white campus media, with black reporters and editors from national publications will also be discussed.

A specific agency for the conference is as yet undecided, according to organizers. Suggestions will be solicited Wednesday.

Golan Heights battle

Israeli warplane shot down

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

An Israeli fighter-bomber went down in flames over the embattled Golan Heights front yesterday, and the two pilots bailed out and were captured in Lebanon. In was the first Israeli warplane lost over the front since the October war.

Tank and artillery duels raged from dawn to dusk along the length of the 40-mile Golan cease-fire line for the 28th consecutive day. No casualties were reported.

Syria said the Israeli F4 Phantom was brought down over Mt. Hermon by its air defense system, apparently meaning a missile. But Israel denied this, saying the plane burst into flames because of "a technical hitch."

Lebanon said the plane crashed in the Arkoub region near the village of Chebba, only six miles north of the Israeli border and about 40 miles south of Beirut.

A Lebanese spokesman said the two pilots were safe and said they were picked up about three miles west of Chebba. He did say where they were being held.

Israel admitted using warplanes for the first time since the October war on Saturday. It said air strikes were ordered after the Syrians attacked an Israel admitted using warplanes for the first time since the October war on Saturday. It said air strikes were ordered after the Syrians attacked an Israeli position on 9,000-foot Mt. Hermon, on the northern tip of the heights.

In Damascus, informed sources said Syrian delegates will leave for Washington within the next 48 hours for talks with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger on disengagement with Israel on the heights.

They said the Syrian team will be headed by Brig. Gen. Hikmak Chehabi, chief of Syrian army intelligence, and will include a few military and Foreign Ministry experts.

In Jerusalem, Premier Golda Meir spent the day consulting with her Labor party on whether to get rid of Defense Minister Moshe Dayan, whose departure from the cabinet could bring down the government.

But she was unable to pull her bickering party together, postponed a key meeting of the party leadership set for Monday night, and left the crisis unresolved.

The crisis focused on the report of a government-appointed commission investigating Israel's lack of preparations for the October war. The commission blamed the chief of staff, Lt. Gen. David Elazar, and his intelligence director—who both resigned—but cleared Dayan's name.

General Assembly to study '4th world'

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. AP

The planet's poorest nations, newly dubbed the "Fourth World," get a chance to portray their plight at a special economic session of the United Nations General Assembly which opens today.

U.S. and the world

The session, costing about $300,000 and expected to last three weeks, will seek guidelines for coping with energy shortages aad price explosions that are rejiggering world economies. Most drastically affected are the poor countries in Asia, Africa and Latin America.

Economists have labeled this group the Fourth World to distinguish them from Third World countries which are developing but which are also rich or potentially rich in raw materials. The two industrially developed "worlds" are usually referred to simply as East and West.

United States Ambassador John A. Scali, in an assembly preview, told reporters the price increase in oil alone had added $12 billion annually to expenses of developing countries.

Noting that the United States has poured billions into foreign economic aid, Scali said "we would welcome all of the assistance that is available for this goal, particularly from any nation which finds that it has excess funds available now."

Oil exporting countries decided Sunday in Geneva to create a special fund to help developing countries, but did not agree on its size.

A British diplomat said the Soviet bloc nations in the past have "hidden behind the rather flimsy argument that aid is the responsibility of the rich Western countries. That doesn't hold water any longer. They'll have to get involved and they'll have to say where they stand."

KING MARCH — Nearly 4,000 persons retraced the final march of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. in observance Thursday in Memphis of the sixth anniversary of his slaying. King was in Memphis to help city sanitation workers in their 65-day strike at the time of his death and many persons in the march Thursday were unionized city employes.

Government will ban fifth of whiskey, and pint, too, in metrication plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — First the bad news: the government wants to do away with the fifth of whiskey.

Also the quart, the pint and the half-pint.

Now the good: you'll be able to buy a three-fourths instead. Or a half, or three eighths or a one-four.

Liters, that is.

Drinkers of America, you'll be in the forefront of the metric revolution, if the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms has its way.

And they want you to know what it is you're drinking. The proposals will require labeling: corn, barley, yeast and enzymes or whatever. And, possibly d-Limonene, Neobee and Citric Acid, if that's the case.

That'll give you something to read while you're trying to figure out how many ounces were in the shot you just had.

If all that new government intrusion drives you to drink, you might consider that it's being done for your own good.

At least that's what ATF director Rex D. Davis told a liquor industry meeting in Miami Beach, Fla. yesterday.

"There are several good reasons to change to metric sizes," he said. "For one thing, it will mean a substantial reduction in the number of bottle sizes. This should be an aid to the consumer."

AIM judge subpoenas Justice officials

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — A high Justice Department official is expected to testify tomorrow about a reported statement that a telephone at Wounded Knee, S.D., may have been illegally tapped.

Assistant Atty. Gen. Henry Petersen and four other Justice or FBI officials were subpoenaed by U. S. District Judge Fred J. Nichol at the request of defense counsel.

What prodded the latest defense maneuver was a letter from FBI agent Mark Felt to Petersen dated March 20, 1973.

It read in part: "You're feeling that our Title III application in the Wounded Knee case was based on information from an illegal wiretap concerned me greatly."

The reference concerned a proposal that a court order be sought to tap the telephone at the trading post in Wounded Knee, where some 200 or more insurgents — many of them armed — occupied the village for 71 days. The Justice Department dropped the proposal for a court ordered wiretap.

On trial in a 10-count federal grand jury indictment are two American Indian Movement leaders, Russell Means and Dennis Banks. Defense attorneys seek dismissal of burglary, theft and other crimes for alleged illegal wiretapping and other misconduct.

In addition to Petersen and Felt, those subpoenaed are Carl Belcher, chief of the general crimes section of the Justice Department's Criminal Division; Roy Moore and Joseph Trimbach, who are in charge respectively of FBI offices at Jackson, Miss., and Minneapolis.

Rock festival draws 200,000 on coast

ONTARIO, Calif. (AP) — Some 200,000 music fans thronged to the "California Jam" rock festival during the weekend for a concert that police said "went off very well."

For the promoters, ABC Entertainment, the extravaganza may gross more money than any other concert of its kind.

Similar events at Woodstock in 1969 and Watkins Glen last year, both in New York, drew larger crowds. However, gate-crashing at Ontario Motor Speedway wasn't as much of a problem as it had been elsewhere, authorities said.

At $10 a ticket, the advance price paid by more than 167,000 concert-goers, and $15 paid at the gate by the rest, "California Jam" should gross about $2 million grossed by promoters of the Watkins Glen festival.

Spokesmen for ABC Entertainment deferred comment on the financial success until later in the week.

Meanwhile today, police in this city 40 miles east of Los Angeles said they were still trying to match up the last of the young concert-goers with parents and the older fans with their automobiles.

The concert started Saturday morning and wailed on into the night, but when it finally ended hundreds of fans found they couldn't leave. Their cars, parked illegally on the shoulder of Interstate 10 leading to the speedway, had been towed away.

The preconcert traffic jam — a monumental one stretching 13 miles at one point — was the biggest problem of the event, which was generally peaceful.

ROCK MUSIC FANS LISTEN TO THEIR FAVORITE BANDS — Here is a portion of the crowd, estimated by the promoters at 200,000 people, as they listened to their favorite groups at a day long concert. The young people are gathered in the infield of the Ontario Race Track. The different groups took turns performing from the huge towers erected in the background.

AP news roundup

Simon in Treasury

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon is expected to announce today his nomination of energy chief William E. Simon as the new secretary of the treasury, Treasury Department sources said yesterday.

The appointment of the 46-year-old Simon has been expected since incumbent Secretary George P. Shultz announced on March 14 he was resigning about May 1.

Simon would be the fourth treasury secretary since Nixon became President. The others were David M. Kennedy, January 1969 to February 1971; John B. Connally, February 1971 to June 1972; and Shultz, from June of 1972.

The delay in announcing Simon's appointment was believed partly due to concern over the energy crisis and who would replace Simon at the Federal Energy Office, which he has headed since December.

Butz on wheat sales

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Despite some resistance to high American farm commodity prices in Asia, Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz said yesterday he expected greater than ever sales in the region, even in China which is complaining about fungus in United States wheat.

Arriving here for a five-day visit to the Philippines, Butz said the Chinese purchased $1.2 billion in American farm products last year and he expected them to increase their sales next year.

Ohio college fire

WILBERFORCE, Ohio (AP) — Fire raced through a floor of the student union building at tornado-torn Central State University here yesterday before being extinguished, the Ohio National Guard reported.

A guard spokesman said no injuries were reported from the blaze, which raged for about 40 minutes.

The spokesman said the fire began about 10 a.m. and the 25—30 persons in the building were immediately evacuated.

Firemen at the scene said the blze was touched off by a malfunctioning heater and was confined to the second floor.

Non white blood

LONDON (AP) — A row has broken out over the refusal of the director of one of Britain's biggest blood collection centers to supply the blood of non-white donors for transfusions.

Dr. Dhani Prem, president of the Standing Committee of Asian Organizations in the United Kingdom, called for a government inquiry into the ban, imposed by Dr. Thomas Cleghorn, medical director of the center in north London.

Cleghorn, whose center is the only one of 14 in the country with the ban, denied that it was racist. He said his tests have shown that non-white donors are more likely to be carriers of hepatitis, a disease with a high mortality rate if transmitted through blood transfusion.

Mass murder trial

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (AP) — A district court judge heard arguments yesterday on the admissibility of oral and written statements accused mass murder Elmer Wayne Henley gave police last August in Houston.

IRS audits fishy returns and is likely to collect

BOSTON (AP) — There's less than a 2 per cent chance that the Internal Revenue Service will audit your income taxes this year, but if the taxman does come, you'll probably end up paying more money.

A computer weeds out the returns that look fishy. And it does it so efficiently that the IRS says its agents find something wrong in the government's favor in 71 per cent of the returns they check.

"Our principal source for deciding who we will audit this year is our computer," said John E. Foristall, head of the IRS office in Boston.

It's a matter of playing the electronic odds. A giant computer in Martinsburg, W. Va., and six regional computers check every tax return filed in this country in a search for anything peculiar, such as big business expenses or large charitable contributions.

Then it gives each return a score. The higher the number, the better the chances of being audited.

Foristall said in 1973 the IRS checked 1.4 million of the 80.4 million personal tax returns filed. He said the government claimed extra taxes were owed it in one million cases and agents found 58,000 persons in that group had paid too much tax.

Having large deductions will earn a high computer number for your tax return. But it will also get one if it includes complicated forms or shows a large income.

"The more complicated the return is, the more liklihood there is for a mistake," said Foristall. "We also look at the income. If somebody is in six figures, we'll take a pretty good look at that."

Just because the giant IRS computer might find something different about your return does not necessarily mean there will be an audit.

Witness tells jury that firm considered dropping Vesco

NEW YORK (AP) -- A defense witness told the Mitchell-Stans jury yesterday that a Washington law firm considered dropping financier Robert L. Vesco as a client because New Jersey Republican politician Harry Sears was involved in Vesco's legal maneuvers.

The witness, Sherwin Markman of the Washington firm of Hogan & Hartson, testified at the trial of former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell and ex-Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans.

They are charged with impeding a Securities and Exchange Commission investigation of Vesco in return for Vesco's secret $200,000 cash contribution to President Nixon's re-election campaign.

Markman testified he did not know of many of Sears' contacts with Mitchell on Vesco's behalf.

Sears, a former majority leader of the Jersey State Senate, who went on Vesco's payroll for $60,000 a year, was indicted along with Mitchell, Stans and Vesco. Vesco has fled the country and is a fugitive. Sears was granted immunity from prosecution and testified as a government witness.

Sears has said he and another Vesco aide delivered the $200,000 to Stans on April 1, 1972 three days after a new law required reporting such contributions.

He said that Stans sent him to Mitchell, who arranged an immediate interview for Sears with William CAsey, then chairman of the SEC.

Under cross-examination by Asst. United States Atty. John Wing, Markman said that his law firm had frequently discussed withdrawing from the Vesco case because of Sears' involvement.

He said the firm did not withdraw until late 1972, after the SEC had filed a complaint charging Vesco and his associates with looting $224 million from mutual funds they controlled.

Markman said that on Nov. 8, 1972, Sears phoned him and reported he had just met with G. Bradford Cook, then general counsel of the SEC. He said Cook had told Sears the SEC was interested only in the source of Vesco's $200,000, not in its purpose or destination.

Other witnesses have testified that Vesco tried to work through Mitchell and Stans to prevent the SEC investigation from revealing Vesco's campaign contribution immediately prior to the election.

Markman said Sears told him that Cook said if he was satisfied as to the source of the money, Sears would not have to testify before the SEC about it.

He said Cook wanted Markman to deliver some bank memos that showed the money was transferred from two Vesco banks to Barclay's Bank in New York.

Markman said he became "deeply upset and indeed angered" at this request and refused to turn over the papers.

White House offers answer -but not tape

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House has promised an answer to the House Judiciary Committee's request for presidential tapes by today — the deadline set by the committee — but not the tapes themselves.

White House lawyer James St. Clair, in a preliminary letter made public by the committee yesterday, said he thought continued negotiations were necessary to settle the issues raised by the committee's request.

Chairman Peter Rodino, D-N.J., indicating he did not expect St. Clair's formal reply today to comply with the request, scheduled a committee meeting for Wednesday or Thursday to deal with it.

He said he may ask the committee for authority to issue a subpoena for the tapes before the House recesses Thursday afternoon for a 10-day Easter holiday.

"I hope this will not be the case," Rodino said, "but there is a contradiction when efforts to determine whether the office of the President is being faithfully executed are met with the claim that the faithful execution of the office precludes disclosure of the relevant facts. If such be the claim, then we will have to subpoena the material necessary to meet our constitutional responsibilities."

In his letter dated April 4, St. Clair said he was pleased at the progress made between him and committee counsels John Doar and Albert Jenner over the past few weeks.

"I am hopeful that continued joint efforts will result in a solution of the complex and time-consuming problems inherent in this matter," St. Clair said.

He also noted that President Nixon's absence from the White House to attend the funeral of French President Georges Pompidou had delayed efforts to discuss the matter with the President.

The committee last week requested a reply by Tuesday to a request made Feb. 25 for tapes of 42 presidential conversations.

Rep. Edward Hutchinson, R-Mich., the senior committee Republican, who has joint authority with Rodino to issue subpoenas, said he would not exercise that authority against the President but would insist on the full committee making such a decision.

"I sincerely hope it will not be necessary to issue a subpoena during the recess," Hutchinson said.

Weicker probes investigations by Ulasewicz

HADLEY, N.Y. (AP) — Anthony Ulasewicz, the former New York City policeman and one-time White House private eye, says his political investigations were based solely on public information.

Sen. Lowell R. Weicker, R-Conn., said yesterday that Ulasewicz conducted investigations into the private lives of more than 50 persons, including at least a dozen senators.

Ulasewicz said that some of Weicker's information was correct and that some was erroneous. The former New York City detective said he had told investigating committees the extent of his probes "in strict confidence" during hearings last summer.

The 55-year-old Ulasewicz came to the public's attention during last summer's televised Senate Watergate committee hearings. His testimony often sparked laughter. He said that convicted Watergate burglar James McCord Jr. erred in taking an "army" to break into the Democratic party's national headquarters.

Weicker has said that Ulasewicz probed the lives of such people as Sens. John Tunney, D-Calif.; Edmund Muskie, D-Maine; Edward Kennedy, D-Mass.; and Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., as well as Alabama Gov. George W. Wallace and former New York City Mayor John Lindsay.

Is Nixon crucial in foreign affairs?

WASHINGTON (AP) -- The Nixon administration has elevated foreign policy into a major part of its Watergate defense, maintaining that Nixon's continuation in office is considered essential by most world leaders.

The crucial role played by Nixon in insuring international progress was protrayed by high officials following the President's return from Paris Sunday.

Alexander M. Haig Jr., Nixon's chief of staff, said the weekend in Paris for a memorial service honoring the late French President Georges Pompidou was encouraging in several ways.

"It was very evident that European leaders and world leaders with whom the President met continued to look to the U.S. and the President as an essential factor in . . . efforts to develop a structure for a stable international environment," he said.

Other officials told reporters on Nixon's plane during the return from Paris that the world leaders clearly want the President to stay in office because they feel in rapport with him.

These officials said many other international leaders also have domestic problems although of a different character.

Because of this empathy, Nixon is admired for what they believe is his courage, and is deeply respected because they say he continues to function effectively in world matters.

The meetings described by Haig involved the chiefs of the states of Japan, France, the Soviet Union, West Germany, Great Britain, Denmark and Italy.

Before returning to the United States and an overnight stay at his Camp David, Md., retreat, Nixon held two important meetings Sunday in Paris.

The first was a two-hour breakfast with Soviet President Nikolai Podgorny, at which Nixon's June trip to Moscow was discussed.

Haig said the meeting "confirmed that both sides have set the preliminary stages for finite and real accomplishments," during the June summit.

Both sides, he said, "are very optimistic . . .there will be positive results in the areas of trade, technological exchanges, and certainly" in nuclear arms limitation.

Murder chances higher in 50 U.S. cities

CAMBRIDGE (AP) — The chances of being murdered in one of America's 50 largest cities are much higher than previously believed, according to a Massachusetts Institute of Technology mathematician.

Dr. Arnold Barnett, an instructor in applied mathematics, told a seminar Monday that he studied homicide rates and applied them to mathematical models which projected the "disturbing" results.

"At current murder levels, a typical baby born in a large American city has almost a two per cent chance of dying by homicide; among males, the figure is three per cent," Barnett said in a report just released.

"Thus, an American boy born in 1974 is more likely die by murder than an American soldier in World War II was to die in combat," he continued.

"With the reduction in automobile fatalities because of lower speed limits and new safety devices, it is plausible that murder might soon surpass auto accidents as a cuae of death in America," he added. Barnett said traditional homicide statistics compiled by the FBI, which showed about 20 thousand murders last year, are "misleading and unsatisfactory" as indicators of risk of murder.

Looking at a math model that projects into the future current murder rates per 100 thousand persons, Barnett said, for example, that the 250 people killed in Atlanta last year initially seems a small number compared with the 500,000 residents not murdered.

"However, few people realize that if this rate continues, homicide will be the cause of death of roughly one of every 27 Atlantans born this year," Barnett said.

Using the same model, Barnett said projecting current homicide rates for those born this year in other cities-as-suming they stay in that city for life-indicate that one in 79 in Boston could be murdered; one in 67 in New York; one in 60 in Chicago; one in 82 in Los Angeles; one in 40 in Washington; and one in 51 in Miami.

Mass gets less interest than Conn. money in same bank

BOSTON (AP) -- Massachusetts was receiving only 7.5 per cent interest on its deposits at the State Street Bank and Trust Co. of Boston at the same time Connecticut was getting an 8.1 per cent return on its money at the same bank.

The nature of the accounts is different. But the Massachusetts money has been on deposit at the bank long enough to indicate that the Bay State could have enjoyed the same interest rates as Connecticut.

Deputy Massachusetts Treasurer Patrick Sullivan said the difference is a matter of philosophy.

Sullivan said the Massachusetts treasurer's office considers "community service" in making bank deposits. He said that means the treasury is willing to sacrifice some of the potential return state money in order to make more money available through the banks for low interest loans to students, small businessmen and low-income homeowners.

Connecticut, on the other hand, seeks the highest return available on the open market for its money, Deputy Connecticut Treasurer Donald Y. Goss said in a telephone interview.

Thus, through a broker, Connecticut bought a $7 million one year State Street Bank certificate of deposit last November at the prevailing 8.1 per cent rate of interest, Goss said.

Massachusetts, meanwhile, was receiving only 7.5 per cent on $1.8 million which had been sitting in a 30-day time account at the bank since February 1970.

Maine sets up ethnic center

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) -- A mixed bag of Maine ethnic groups is setting up a statewide ethnic studies center to jump out of a melting pot that has never worked.

"Some of our major aims are to change school curriculums to recognize ethnic diversity, enhance ethnic pride and stimulate language training in Maine schools," said Prof. A.A. Lacognata, one of the prime movers in the effort to establish the Maine Center for Ethnic Studies.

The Italian sociologist at the University of Maine at Proland-Gorham was one of six representatives of different nationalities who meet recently to make plans for the center.

Besides Lacognata, there were Greek, Slavic, Irish, German and French representatives at the meeting.

To finance the ethnic studies center, the group is applying for federal funds under the Ethnic Heritage Studies Program Act of 1965.

The act pledges financial aid tto those groups recognizing "the heterogeneous composition of the nation and the fact that in a multi-ethnic society, a greater understanding of the contributions of one's fellow citizens can contribute to a more harmonious, patriotic and committed populace..."

Lacognata said ththe Maine center will be located at the University of Maine at Augusta and act as a clearing house for information among the member ethnic groups.

Media and the Third World

By ROBIN RICH

This is a long overdue letter of support to the third world community in its courageous efforts to awaken the university community to the racism and irresponsibility of the mass media on this campus and also in support of their excellent achievements in developing the Black Mass Communications Project. As co-coordinator of the WMUA Women's Show and as an MUA listener I have found the disc jockeying and news stories done by Black Mass to be just about the most exciting and competent work at the station. I wish to support Johnetta Bagby's letter of March 7 and Michael Weir's letter of last Friday but first I must speak of the outrageous and unbelievably horrifying statement in a Collegian Editorial this week, written by none other than ex-editor in Chief Steve Tripoli. I am appaled that such a statement could have appeared at all and I am once more pained at our social system's ability to create such a deep sense of powerlessness on indifference among us that we did not all respond immediately.

Tripoli states: "Let's assume for the purposes of this argument that Don's cartoon was willfully and maliciously racist. The answer to that, in truly responsible journalistic (and moral) terms is simply so What? Anyone has the right to advocate anything in what they write (or draw) as opinion. That can run the spectrum from the legalization of marijuana to the liquidation of a race...No one anywhere has a snowball's chance in hell to be truly free if anyone else is shut off." (my underline)

What Tripoli is saying is rather than make an editorial judgement and curtail someone's so called "freedom" he would permit them to call for genocide. He would have said "So what?" to a Hitler speech and then he would have denied responsibility for the growth of Nazism and the death of 6 million Jews (and millions of others).

Tripoli calls this the heart of his argument against the Corp. confrontation and indeed this indifference toward the very lives of people, never mind their struggles for justice and dignity, is also at the heart (if you can call it a heart) of the non-policies of both WMUA and the Collegian whose biggest concerns this year have been sports and streaking and the troubles of Solzhenitsyn.

J. B. and Michael Weir were correct in their statements about WMUA although I think the radio and press staff are not organized enough to form a conscious conspiracy. Understanding nothing of the nature of oppression, they just serve the same interests, those of the ruling class (even if hip and "liberal") so they work very well together. Instead of responding directly to J.B.'s letter the MUA staff had an Off the Hook Show where they chalked it all up to a personal problem and spoke glowingly of their progressiveness. No women or Black Mass people were on the show. Soon afterward The Collegian had a similar style 2 page spread on MUA. And a number of Off the Hook shows have featured Don McGilvray and other Collegian staff members, without including people with opposing views except on telephone. What about featuring J.B. or Corp. leaders or Denny Matteau or Chancellor Bromery? It's clear which side MUA is on.

WMUA and the Collegian do not have the excuse of being business enterprises. They are controlled by students and if students are interested in creating a new society and new people then they will be interested in struggling for mass media which helps move us all forward. And let's not kid ourselves. The mass media is not just a means for self expression. Media plays a vital role in the slant of its news, editorials and cartoons and in the lyrics of its songs, in determining how we view ourselves, the world, each other. It can make us feel like powerless isolated individuals or it can make us feel a part of an exciting international process toward social change. It can make us feel overwhelmed and-or passively entertained or it can help to give us the knowledge and spirit we need to fight the destructiveness within us, among our friends, and in the local and world community.

Small changes, however token, have been made and will continue to be made. But until enough people dedicated to media as a tool for change have the skill, confidence and consciousness to work together to really control the Collegian and MUA. I will support the actions of Corp. and anyone who has the courage to push us forward faster.

Centralism: a solution

By BOB FOSTER

Change. It's a word that brings forth both good and evil connotations to many minds. Indeed, change is what creates progress and "progress is our most important product" as energy firms such as General Electric used to tell us. To the environmentalist, change often bears a hidden meaning, an undercurrent of destruction. And, to the Maoist, change is the basis of life, revolution of thought, constant re-evaluation towards the perfection of Maoism, the ultimate goal. Yet, change can strike much closer to home than one might expect. The University and change walk hand in hand in a marriage of mutually exclusive goals.

At this moment, restructuring or reorganization (both conservative terms for a mild form of revolutionary evolution) is occurring upon this campus. The wrath of the organizational gods is being turned upon us. Yet, for what purpose? What are the reasons supporting this attempt to step back from the University and re-examine its goals, its lifestyles? One may rightly ponder these issues.

It is a cruel and massive monster that has devoured Thomas Campion and Joel Stoneham. One must remember that Mr. Campion was the David who slew the contemporary Goliath, the New York Times, for so many years. Yet, when forced to confront the most ravenous of state institutions, he fell before its powerful, political jaws and was instantly consumed. Alas, this is not a criticism of the victims, for both had rightly proved themselves equal to the task before they undertook it. Instead, this is an analysis of the monster, a creature who may easily devour the most qualified of men in the future.

The problem becomes maintaining efficiency and continuity within an organism that is inherently inefficient and noncontinuous. The fact that it is a state institution is immediately one strike against it. States are notorious for cost overruns in most any field. Further, the fact that this is an institution that supports a very dynamic population is also its downfall. Few remain here for more than a mere four years. Most are crying to be released.

Thus, the administration must incorporate change into its pattern of operations. It must become more flexible in its dealings with the student, the staff, and the faculty. The administration then has the unenviable task of inculcating sanity into a system that sees a large turnover of the majority of its population. Take the Orchard Hill complex as, perhaps, a representative sample. Of four dormitories, three will have new Heads of Residence next semester. Greater than fifty per cent of the counseling staffs of each house will not be returning. And as is normal for any semester, there will be a large percentage of non-returning students. Thus, the organism is constantly undergoing transfusions of its lifeblood. The students constantly move in and out of the creature while an institutional skeleton, the staff, tries to maintain some semblance of continuity.

How does the administration plan to deal with this? Any ancient Civil War general worth his stars could state the philosophy: "Retreat and regroup!" Centralization seems to be the answer. Business offices have seemingly been dissolved. Thus, in a situation that requires more flexibility, a concept often excluded in centralism, we find an inflexible solution. Let us hope that the famished monster does not devour any more good men due to an improper solution at an improper time.

Change in South Africa

To The Editors:

While

While reading last Wednesday's and Thursday's Collegians I noticed that there still exists a well developed mythology about the present political situation in South Africa. Having just returned from two years in the neighboring Republic of Botswana I would like to present some first hand views.

1) Not all white South Africans are racist, or support their government's policies. It is largely due to political manuvering, media control, and police intimidation that the Nationalist Party has remained in power.

2) Any attempt to change the political system in South Africa by an international war would only result in the destruction of all parties involved; no one would win. Any militant uprising inside South Africa itself would just bring about the deaths of a lot of blacks (and a really oppressive white blacklash). Political change in South Africa must come from the blacks and liberal whites living there and it cannot come about by violent means.

3) The most likely starting place for reform lies in the realm of economics. By this I don't mean embargos, as these also hurt those counnries like Botswana, Lesotho, and Swaziland that are economically tied to South Africa. Rather, we should support those American (and other) companies that are bringing economic and racial reform to their South African operations. Industries like IBM and General Motors in South Africa have adopted policies of equal pay and job status for all employees, regardless of color. The government cannot do anything about this as it desperately needs to keep these companies happy. Indeed, the South African government is realizing just how important the black population is to the economy and the labor market. Labor reform legislation is just now getting a start and will continue to increase. Support of enlightened American - South African businesses and condemnation of those that are not is bound to have an effect on the speed with which reform takes place. Similar economic pressure by other governments would also be beneficial.

..Violence shouldn't always be sought as the answer to problems and hatred should be reasoned, not blind.

Letter: half-truth, smear job

To The Editor:

Usually I don't do this but I feel that I must answer the letter written about me in Monday's Collegian.

First off, I have been asked by both Karen Lynch and Dean Tucker to check out what I wrote last Friday. My position still stands. Second, all you did was accuse me of lying. You did not attempt to show it, you just think that because you said it, it's true. If you're gonna say such things, prove them! All you wrote was a stupid smear job with half-truths and inuendos.

As a personal policy, I check out my facts before placing them in any column that goes under my name. I feel it would be downright stupidity on my part to do anything else but.

And if the Collegian, as you said, produces hate in you, I feel sorry for you. But yet people like you thrive on hate, don't they?

Vet purpose was for benefits

To The Editors:

I'm writing this concerning the article that appeared in the Collegian on April 1st concerning the trip to Washington by the Veterans Club.

First, the caption beneath the picture on the first page is not quite accurate in that the vote was not for or against amnesty. The purpose for going to Washington was to lobby for benefits that would be the equal of benefits received by vets at the end of World War Two. Amnesty was not part of the original program. When we got there, the issue was brought up by a group of vets who requested that it be part of Project Apple. The question was should we now incorporate this issue into Project Apple, or should it be presented independently by this group. Although there were about 70 or 80 people there, only club members voted and the vote was 23 to 6. The next morning, the issue was rought up again, and it passed again on a vote of 12 to 11.

On the matter of transportation, the club did arrange it. The contract was broken by the company because drivers must have an 8 hour rest period between trips, which they would not have had if we had stuck to the original program. I don't know if this is a law or a company rule, but we found out about it the night before Apple.

Finally, during Apple itself, most of the quotes at the end of the article were mistakingly attributed to me. I did say that the distribution had broken down, but I was not in Lafayette Park and I wasn't hasseled by the police.

You asked for it

I have come to the conclusion that if you really want something in life, it's not just going to fall into your lap thinking about it.

You have to ask for it.

Sometimes it's just that simple.

I remember wanting to hear some music one afternoon. I can remember asking a friend to go with me.

"Where do you want to go?" he asked.

"The Jazz Workshop in Boston," said I, not really expecting to go.

"O.K. let's go," he said.

So we went. If I hadn't asked, I never would have gone to see Herbie Hancock that night.

I wanted to a writer. So I asked the Executive Editor of the Collegian if I could become a columnist.

"Can you write a weekly column?" he asked.

"It'll be weakly at times," said I.

So I started spilling my collinear collucutations upon these pages of opinions ever since.

Sometimes you get more than you ask for.

When a friend of mine was getting married I asked her if I could design the invitations. Sure, she said.

Not only did I design the invitations but I wound up addressing the 146 envelopes as well. I guess you can't win them all.

Then I asked someone if he needed any help in his jewelry store. Not only did I get the job, but I wound up as Asst. Manager and got to make my own hours.

An old dorm friend's father owns a restaurant in New York. She asked me to get a dozen bagels from him while I was there. After introducing myself as Gail's friend, he gave me the bagels and a half dozen knishes, for myself.

And sometimes it's just a matter of being in the right place at the right time.

Ever since I discovered that I had curly hair and that I could tap dance, I've wanted to be in the movies. Last week I met a film director. So I asked him if he needed any talent.

"Why, do you have any?" he asked.

"Not really," said I. "But I do a great Shirley Temple routine."

And then he told me to come back for an audition.

I admit, that at times you have to be a little bold. But if you really want something, you've got to ask for it. I may never become the new Barbra Streisand, but I may be in a movie. I never really expect to get all the things that I ask for, and the worst thing that could happen is that the person says no.

And then there are times that you might want something from me.

All you have to do is ask for it.

Spring is sprung

The brisk breezes blow swiftly through your hair. Warm sunshine, undiluted, crawls down through the few clouds that crown, rather than cover, the sun. With the shedding of winter apparel, more people seem to shed their defenses as well. It is April. It is springtime. More people seem to be smiling now. It makes me feel good.

You can see it as you walk through the campus. The frisbees take on new dimensions; they glide on air currents and become a vehicle of self-expression. Walking to the Student Union building people stop by the lake near the library ("You call that little pond a lake?" a fine friend asked, and I responded , "In spring it is a lake!"). Combat to the end starts between dreamers and doers. For those of us who are both, the battle is a painful pleasure.

For in the spring reading assignments go undone. Papers get postponed. Everyone becomes a philosopher, and more people fall in love. Infatuation. It grows, and it is not always clear whether or not you are in love with an individual or a concept.

The smell of spring. It seems to bring out the best in individuals. The budding of the leaves seems to signal to us all that life is starting again. People seem to look at each other more. The glances are of casual intensity; the eyes seem softer. Perhaps you wonder why you have not seen this or that person before. "All these beautiful woman, where have they been this whole year" one guy groans in mock frustration near the pond. They have been here all along. Their beauty has been hidden under layers of physical and mental protection. And young men too seem to be friendlier. Spring brings boldness: for when the beauty of nature seems most obvious, people seem to learn most easily the importance of following one's heart.

Where months ago a layer of ice stood firmly in the pond, tempting hockey players to test their talents on its foreboding surface, now the spring has turned the icy pond into a graceful lake welcoming small wooden boats and dreamy stares from the surrounding shore.

The "gym rats" are deserting the security of the wooden courts at Boyden, and taking their chances on the cracked and less than steady blacktops both in Southwest and Central. The game of basketball is tougher, with rims that are twisted out of shape by awkward egoists trying to "stuff" them continuously. Yet B-ball is a whole different type of game when the movement of warm air, lifts the sweat of your brow and back. The footballs are put away, and the hockey pucks are saved; baseball gloves are greased and teams are started. Softball was made for the spring.

So teachers be generous. Tolerate the dreamer in us all. Consciences be lenient - don't harp against the procastinator. Faculty members and students have more in common that is obvious, and the spring should bring these things out. At this time things should not go on, "business as usual".

So enjoy the days by the lake; soak in the sunshine; try and appreciate each group's "song of spring": The fraternities and their booming stereos, which all too often blurt out the singing of the birds; More watch as riders are getting on their cycles and bikes; watch out for loose softballs; and reach back into your soul for that favorite song that you like to whistle.

Keep smiling (or try to start to). Don't be afraid to tell people how you feel, for boldness is only evil when it is cruel. Enjoy the setting of the sun... if possible from the top of a mountain. And if you fall in love; if infatuation strikes...if someone captures your imagination...don't fight it. Use Spring for an excuse, (even though such feelings need none anyway) and just enjoy. And if you are reading this...I hope that it is near the lake ... or beside a tree.

Vets school needed

Members of the UMass pre-veterinary club are meeting today with state legislators with the hopes they will realize how badly a veterinarion school is needed in our state.

The Collegian unequivocally agrees with the students. It is a major shame that a student studying such courses as organic chemistry, physics, and anatomy, while maintaining a 3.5 or above cululative average, can not be realistically hopeful of admission to a vet school.

Largely due to the amount of publicity the club has recently stirred, many state residents now know that there is not one vet school in New England. Since most schools accept the great majority of applying students from their own state, it's easy to see the frustrating situation pre-vet students face here.

The Collegian realizes that state budgets are often tight, but if the staff can spend money to build more roads, for example, then it can certainly spend money to establish a vet school.

The Collegian also regrets that the UMass Board of Trustees recently voted not to support a resolution calling for a vet school to be constructed on the present site of Grafton State Hospital. Support from the Trustees could have bolstered the students' arguments before the legislators today.

Strait lines

Let's use mathematics to solve an irritating problem on this campus. Grass, which now is so valuable because of the precious small amount of it that remains is getting walked over and destroyed every day.

This problem could be solved quite easily. Why not install walkways where the bulk of the people walk.

It has been proven that the shortest distance between two points is a straight line. Now if one is situated in one place and has to travel to another place, one will take the shortest possible route, grass or no grass (especially if the weather is inclement). A simple solution to this hairy problem would be to install cement walkways, which, if located in straight lines from one main spot on the campus to another would be used instead of stepping on our greens.

Save grass now, so it will be around when you may want to sit on it come summer.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed, and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

Part two

Felony conviction: two strikes before you start

Employment is not the only area in which the person with an arrest record faces discrimination. The man with the record is often the focal point of continued police harassment — the first to be questioned and the last to be eliminated as a suspect in an investigation. "Reputation" is a probable cause for arrest. In recent years it has become commonplace for courts to review "presentence reports" prepared by court police, or probation authorities before pronouncing sentence. In many jurisdictions, the presentence report contains the offender's "rap sheet" which contains not only prior convictions but all previous arrests. Again, the presumption of innocence is eroded because the individual with an arrest record can expect to receive a heavier sentence than the man whose previous record is "clean."

Arrest records have a further discriminatory effect when they are considered in passing upon applications for professional, occupational, or other licenses. Numerous states and a few federal statutes require the submission of fingerprints when applying for specified licenses. The fingerprints are then compared with criminal records, to determine whether the applicant is an entry. Although such statutes do not specify an arrest record as grounds for denial of a license they do often invest administrative officials or regulatory agencies with broad power to determine such intangibles as "fitness" and "character." While there is little case law on arrests alone as criterion for the denial of a license, the courts have generally held that such administrative determinations — even as to "character" — should not be overturned absent or clear showing of arbitrariness, capriciousness, or fraud. The person who has been arrested but not convicted may also be discriminated against by lending institutions and credit agencies. If rearrested, such individuals may have a much more difficult time in securing release on their own recognizance, or in obtaining a bail bondsman. There are other more remote problems such as the handicap a record imposes upon the individual who chooses to run for office.

The innocent or rehabilitated persons remain among the condemned of our society. Whatever they do or wherever they go, they are held, both formally and informally, to repetitions and humiliating accounting for their records. Although the law does not permit double jeopardy for a single crime, it ironically fosters a multiple social jeopardy by allowing the permanent criminal record. Persons with an undeserved or irrelevant record are the forgotten of our society in being bypassed by every liberal and progressive movement in the realm of criminal law. Under Pennsylvania law, which is typical of most states, criminal arrests and charges must be docketed in a permanent public record in the office of the clerk of courts in the country where the arrests or charges are made. Records of all arrests, charges and convictions must be permanently retained, and as they are public records, anyone may see them. With microfilming and reproduction, immortality is guaranteed for past offenses. The harsh and injurious stigma resulting from permanent records of past criminal proceedings has prevented many qualified and law-abiding citizens from serving in the Armed Forces, from pursuing occupations commensurate with their skills, from seeking public office and government service, from contributing as a constructive member of their society and even from enjoying many rights of citizenship available to the others in our society.

Over half of the employers interviewed answered that a criminal record is definitely a handicap. Eighty-four percent of those interviewed stated that they thought that this discrimination fostered further criminal activity.

In another interview of some 250 men with criminal records, ninety-four percent agreed with the conclusions of the majority of the employers. A survey of forty-four business and professional employers revealed that not one of them would place a person with a criminal record in a position of trust. That is, as an accountant, cashier, or executive.

Practically every military, governmental or school questionnaire and employment application asks the following question: "Were you ever convicted or arrested for a criminal offense other than for a minor traffic violation? If so, explain in detail." The person branded with a record has a well-founded reluctance about taking part in community or public affairs for fear that his record will come to light and become a public issue. It would be the rare political campaign that would not publicize the word-for-word record of arrest or conviction of the opposing candidate. Little consideration would be given to the possibility that the offense was maliciously charged or occurred during teen-age or college years.

Done with the business and the other aspects, only one is left: the Army and other branches of the service. Conviction of a felony will not automatically end your chances for acceptance into Air Force ROTC. Most likely though it would keep you out. The specific felony would have to be examined by the admittance personnel. Most likely a felony would end all chances for Air Force ROTC. Similar situations are presented by the enlistment into the Air Force. There would most likely be a better chance of getting in. Again it depends upon the crime. Every run-in with the law from speeding tickets on up are examined. No one is admitted if any drugs are known to have been used illegally by the individual. For admittance to the Navy Aviation, similar situations arise. It would be very difficult if not impossible. Also the similar situation arises for Army ROTC acceptance. The standard statement of personal history is required for enlistment in the Armed Forces. It asks if the applicant was ever "detained, held, arrested, indicted, or summoned into court as a defendant in a criminal proceeding." If he answers affirmatively, the applicant will be accepted only after special inquiry by the Director of Personnel of the respective service.

Thus, in the previous paper I have given the grim outlook for a prosperous future if one has a felony conviction on his record.

"What's the story?"

Grievance Committee listens to academic gripes

By EDIE WIEDER

WHAT'S THE STORY? is a regular feature in the Collegian designed to answer your questions, respond to your gripes, and ease your confusion or desperation.

If there's something bugging you lately and the cause of the problem is even remotely related to the University system, I can help you. Just record your question or gripe on the back of a Bazooka bubble gum comic or any other available piece of scrap paper and drop it in the WHAT'S THE STORY? wall box located at the entrance to the University Store or just deliver it to the Ombudsman's Office (919 Campus Center).

Please use this column to your advantage. I need your questions to make it work so flood the box with queries—then I won't have to invent them myself.

Last week I discussed Incomplete grades and broached the subject of academic appeals; in other words, hassles with profs over unfair grades or grading policies. Although no comprehensive Academic Appeals Board exists at the University at present, it has been brought to my attention that there is such a committee available for all students who are taking or have taken a course in the English Department. It's called the Grievance Committee and was originally formed in 1969 by a group of concerned students who felt it necessary that students be provided with an outlet for their complaints as well as a say in the decisions usually made by the faculty and administration.

I spoke to Mr. Jim Leheny, Director of Undergraduate Studies of the English Department, about the function and relative success of the Committee. The make-up of the Committee itself consists of a group of about four students, usually juniors or seniors who are sufficiently familiar with the Department and its course offerings and have demonstrated the capacity to evaluate their peers as well as their profs in an equitable, fairly objective manner. These students volunteer to meet as a group with the student harboring the complaint, question all aspects of his story, then confer with the prof and hear his-her version. The Committee then reconvenes, discusses the merits of both arguments, and makes a recommendation to the "person in the wrong." The Committee's strongest power lies in its recommendations; it has no authority to change a grade or force an instructor to change a grade. It is conceivable, however, that a serious misunderstanding between prof and student may result in the Committee's making a formal grievance about the Professor's action to the Department Head and the Chairman of the Department's Personnel Committee.

heard by the Grievance Committee concern charges of unfair grading policies, although it is equipped to handle most any other academic problem relating to the English Department. Mr. Leheny commented upon the apparent satisfaction and cooperative attitude with which the students and faculty alike have responded to the Committee's decisions and actions.

I suspect that the Grievance Committee has not been adequately publicized since the number of students who have sought this route in the past has been pitifully small. To my knowledge, the English Department is the only department in the University (please correct me if I'm wrong!) which provides the opportunity for a student to be given a second hearing by a gathering of his-her peers on an issue of importance (grades?).

POLICE COMMUNITY SERVICE OFFICER

Amherst, Massachusetts

The Town of Amherst, Massachusetts has eight (8) vacancies for part-time Police Community Service Officers. The Community Service Officer will work a basic 20-25 hour week, and perform a variety of police community functions. The program is intended for individuals who have a desire to work in the police field, and are enrolled, or intend to enroll, in a law enforcement related curriculum at an accredited two or four year college or university. Applicants must be high school graduates or equivalent, and be at least 18 years of age on June 2, 1974.

The selection procedure will include a written examination, oral interviews, background investigation, medical examination, and may include a physical agility test or psychological examination. Send or call for approved application form and complete announcement to Amherst Police Department, Town Hall, Amherst, Mass. 01002. Phone 1-413-253-3211. All applications must be received in the Amherst Police Department by 5:00 p.m. E.D.S.T., April 29, 2974.

Amherst is an equal opportunity employer and encourages all qualified applicants to apply regardless of age, race, creed, color, sex or national origin.

You're serious about photography. So is the Canon F-1.

To you, photography is more than a hobby. You may never want to become a professional. Yet, your photography is as important a means of self-expression to you as your speech. You demand the same excellence in your photographic equipment as you do of your photographic skills.

The Canon F-1 is the camera that can fulfill any photographic task to which you put it. It can stand up to your ability in any situation.

Naturally, a great camera like the F-1 won't ensure great results. That's up to you. Yet—it's nice to know that your camera can grow with you as a photographer.

Part of the reason for this is the F-1 system. Since it was designed in totality, it offers total performance. There is nothing "added on" in the F-1 system. Everything works as it was designed to, and integrates superbly with everything else. You'll spend less time worrying about operating the camera than in shooting. And that's what creative photography is really all about.

Controls fall into place under each finger. It's no accident. Professionals who depend on a camera for their livelihood have a deep regard for the F-1's handling. It's amazing how much a comfortable camera can improve your work.

Sharing these lenses and many of these accessories are the new Electronic Canon EF, with fully automatic exposure control, the FTb, now improved with all exposure information visible in the finder, and the TLb, great for a second camera body or for getting started in Canon photography. Canon. For serious applications. For serious photographers.

Isn't it time you got serious?

DEAR AGGY: The epic of puckered up

Dear Aggie,

I have a problem that has been disturbing me for some time. I've been going with a wonderful guy for three and a half years and I seem to have a kissing fettish! I'm obsessed with kissing him. As you can probably guess, it's annoying to him sometimes, especially when I can't turn it off in public. Could I possibly have an oral fixation? I notice that if I try very hard and restrain myself for a few days, he starts to get more affectionate towards me. There doesn't seem to be a happy medium. Is there any cure for my behavior? I enjoy sex very much but it doesn't seem to deter my constant kissing habit at all. Please Help!

Puckered Up

The second:

Dear Aggie,

I would like to know when you are going to publish your next column. I've been writing to you for help and I'd appreciate an answer to my inquiries. Thank you.

Puckered Up

After this letter, I figured I better get started. So just to let PU know I was working on it, I put a not in my last to hold on and suck her thumb in the meantime.

The last:

Dear Aggie,

Thanks for the note in today's Collegian. I'm glad you haven't forgotten about me. I appreciate your suggestion but I really don't get much satisfaction or appeasement from sucking my thumb. My pillow has been taking quite a workout though. Thanx again, Aggie! Looking forward to your valued advice!

Puckered Up

The first answer:

Dear PU,

I don't know too much about kissing fettishes, myself, seeing as how I never had one, but I am looking into the matter. As far as I can tell, using just my instinct and experience, it seems to me that the answer is in your own letter. If you try very hard not to kiss you boyfriend, he becomes more affectionate towards you. But there does seem to be a happy medium. Why not try to refrain yourself, little by little, improving your own self-discipline? First start out by holding yourself back only in public, You should be able to master that. To help, try not seeing your boyfriend as much in public. That sounds rather crazy, but if you're not around him, maybe it'll help. You've obviously been able to refrain yourself before, only this time, don't make it an all or nothing thing. Remember, WILL POWER, that's the answer! Of course it will be hard at first, but after a while, it'll become second nature to you. And hopefully, your whole sexlife will benefit. At least, give it a try. In the meantime I will be researching the subject. If anyone in the reading audience has anything to add that may help, just write in.

(Got a problem? Tell it to Aggie, the Collegian's exclusive advice columnist. Send or bring letters to The Collegian, Student Union Bldg, UMass-Amherst.)

IMPORTANT

Adult day center

Volunteers Wanted

The Amherst Nursing Home, Inc., has received permission to innovate the first adult day care program in the Commonwealth. Approval for this new project, titled the Amherst Adult Day Center, was recently granted by the Massachusetts Department of Public Health. The center is looking for highly motivated individuals who would be interested in working with a small group of senior adults. The program will be held Monday through Friday, approximately 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

Weekly programs will require a minimum of 1½ hours per activity, and may include: music appreciation, physical fitness, art, crafts, poetry, singing (musical accompaniment desirable), current events discussion, bowling, and indoor and outdoor gardening. Monthly or one-time special programs may include: lectures, workshops, performances dramatic, musical— bluegrass to classical, dance, etcetera), outings, and newsletter publications.

Applicants interested in regularly scheduled volunteer service must complete a volunteer information form. Two references are required; for students it is desirable that one be a faculty member or advisor. For more information please contact Ms. Diana L. Peters, Coordinator, 256-8185.

UMass. Symphony

The University of Massachusetts Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Fussell, will feature works by Igor Stravinsky in a concert tomorrow at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

The complete Act 1, Scene 2 of the Stravinsky opera "The Rake's Progress" will be performed, as will his "Circus Polka." Both are examples of Stravinsky's unique style of combining musical shapes and textures.

Vocal soloists in the "Rake's Progress" will be Calliope Shenas, Rod Gisick, Jon Humphrey and Dorothy Ornest.

The Orchestra will also perform Busoni's "Rondo Arlecchinesco," and Haydn's "Concertante Symphony" (first movement).

Also on the program will be a performance by the UMass Chamber Group for New Music of Stephan Albert's "Concerto for Four Quartets."

The concert is sponsored by the Department of Music and is open to the public without charge.

The Division of Continuing Education will be featured on an interview show tonight broadcasted from WFCR (88.5FM). The show moderated by Len Mailloux, will be aired at 10:30 p.m.

Representing the Division of Continuing Education will be Fran Koster, Director of "Toward Tommorrow: A Symposium of Alternatives" and Draper Kaufman, one of the instructors for this program.

Malcolm X Room jobs

For all Third World persons returning to the Southwest area next year: there are job positions open in the Malcolm XX Room. The positions available will be advisor, student coordinator, black caucus and staff positions. Applications are available in the Malcolm XX Room. The deadline is tomorrow 12:00 midnight.

School of Ed. offers "flexible curriculum"

The School of Education is currently operating under a curriculum process called Flexible Curriculum whereby learning experiences do not necessarily conform to the three hour a week semester long University standard.

Below are listed these learning experiences which are starting within the next two weeks (Apr. 9-Apr. 20) and which still have space available for additional enrollment. Students desiring to sign up for those learning experiences or get more information about them should contact the School of Education Registration Office (Flexible Curriculum), 151 Hills House South. Phone 545-1557.

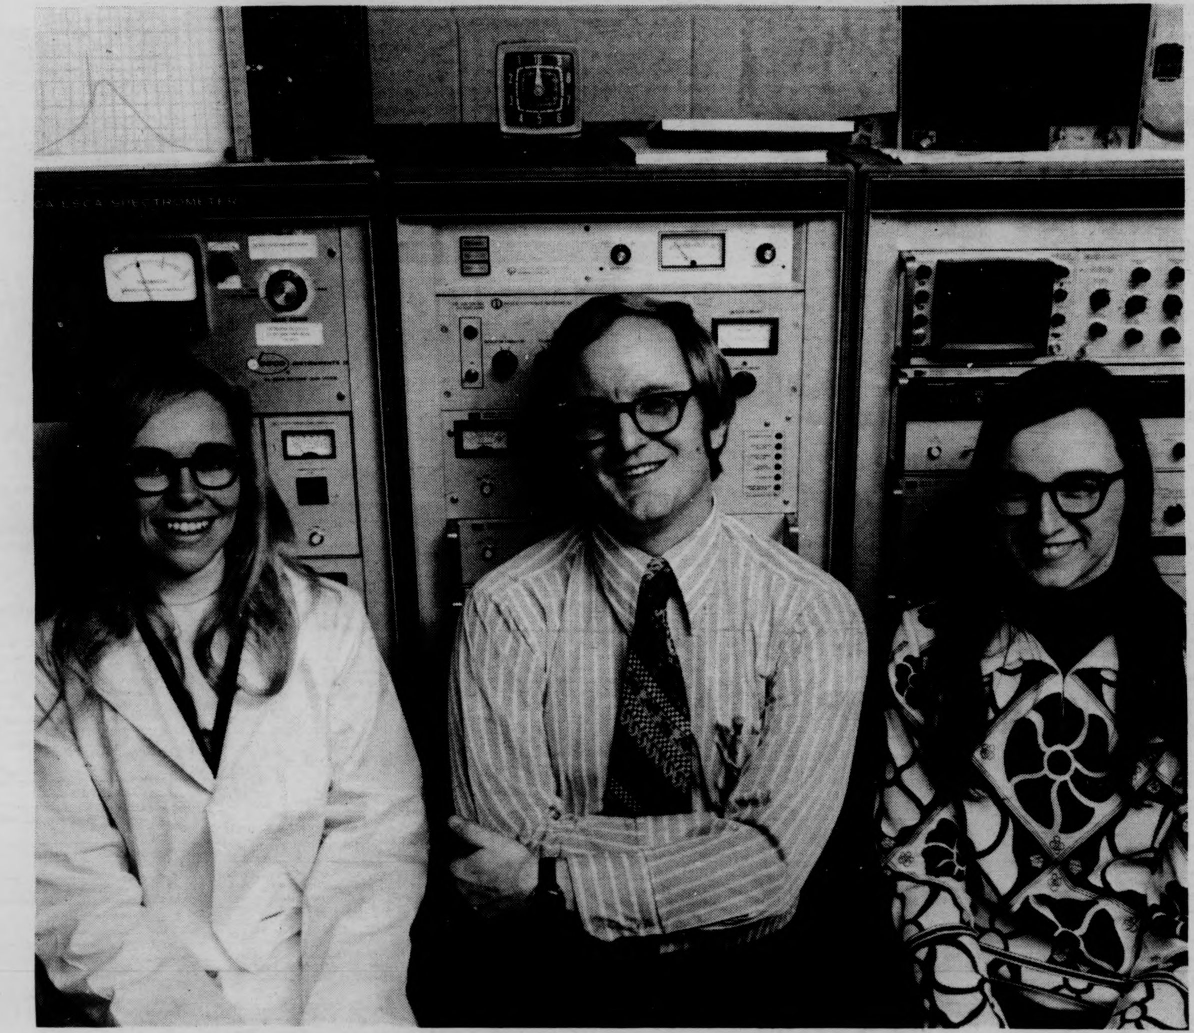
When we hired these researchers, we invited them to raise more questions than they answered.



Making your mark in business used to mean carving a comfortable niche for yourself and staying there. Promotion was simply a matter of time, provided you could spend 20 years in the process. But, today, business depends on technology. Technology that can't wait a moment if it's going to keep pace with what's happening.

That's why, at Kodak, our basic reliance on scientific research makes the need for creative young minds more demanding than ever. We must have people with drive and ambition, impatient to put what they've learned into practice. People who get all the freedom and responsibility they can handle, and tackle our problems with their ideas.

Which, we're happy to say, has helped many of our scientists yield important discoveries. For example:

The woman on the left has devised new and improved photographic materials for specialized scientific applications in fields such as astronomy and holography. The young man is an expert on surface analysis. His work in photoelectron spectroscopy helps to identify unknown substances. The woman on the right has a dual background in gas chromatography and trace metal analysis, which she's applied to analyzing pollution in rivers and streams.

They came up with new problems while solving some of our old ones. But they've uncovered some promising answers, too. As they continue their research, you may read about them again. The oldest is just over 30.

Why do we give young men and women so much room to test their ideas? Because good ideas often lead to better products. Which are good for business. And we're in business to make a profit. But in furthering our own business interests, we also further society's interests. Which makes good sense.

After all, our business depends on society. So we care what happens to it.

Students for Dukakis

Students for Dukakis will hold their first organizational meeting tonight in Room 903 of the Campus Center. The group, whose purpose is to help elect Michael Dukakis as Governor of Massachusetts, will consist of students representing a large number of the schools across Western Massachusetts.

The candidate, Mike Dukakis, ran for Lieutenant Governor in 1970 after serving for a number of years on the State Legislature. He is running on the issues of more social reform and improved mass transportation, among others.

Students for Dukakis invite anyone who is interested in helping or learning about Mike Dukakis to attend the meeting tonight at 9:00 p.m.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Forecast

Add Friends of Astrology: Phyllis Diller. Her wild, crotchety comedy antics and word pictures of dishelvement, leaky faucets, overflowing pots and grease-laden kitchen pans have earned her headline status. "Astrology works," she says. "My humor is an example. I get laughs by stories which center around home, family and cooking—those are classical areas of interest to my zodiacal sign, which is Cancer."

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Decisions are made regarding finances, inventories, purchases and sales. Older individual will lend benefit of experience. Be receptive. Capricorn, Cancer persons could figure prominently. Contract settlement is due.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Study Aries message for valid hint. Legal matters may dominate. Projects can be completed. Associate who is aggressive may be shooting from the hip. Know it and heed your own counsel. Get rid of losing proposition.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Way is cleared for employment advance, opportunity. Leo, Aquarius persons are in picture. Personal services are featured. Highlight new procedures. You need not hang on to past. You have right to live your own life.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): What you took for granted turns out to be of great advantage. You are praised, rewarded for utilizing natural talents. Sense of security is heightened. You are pleased and for good reason. Aquarian could play feature role.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): More fun occurs at home base than in recent past. Know it and don't wander to far afield. Grass is not greener elsewhere. Be willing to experiment. Shake off tendency to be too set in your ways. Being determined does not mean you also have to be stubborn.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Ideas need further development. Plans, calls, messages could be confused. Know it and double-check. Relative in transit could make special request. Your schedule may need readjusting. Be prepared. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio persons could be involved.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Questions arise concerning money, where to put it and where it goes. Key now is to be analytical. Take nothing for granted. Seek more information. Find reasons—one who is active, personable may also be somewhat of schemer. Be aware, alert.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You will be more confortable. Domestic atmosphere will be harmonious. Cycle is such that you get what you want—you can safely take initiative. Taurus, Libra persons could figure prominently. New contact should be encouraged.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Intrigue, mystery, behind-the-scenes activity—these set tone of day for you. Cooperate with groups, clubs, hospitals, institutions. You can make significant advances with aid of those who share your interests. Pisces figures prominently.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Experiences occur which leave deep impression. You can feel and learn. You can make friends, influence people. Conversely, you also will be swayed. One who seemed indifferent is very interested, more so than you might imagine.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Opposition now is healthy, although you may be annoyed by it. Strive for realistic attitude. Nothing is being handed you on proverbial silver platter. You can come up with right answers—if you permit creative force to flow. You will comprehend.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Higher education, outlet for talents—these now are spotlighted. You could be considering new location, perhaps study of a new language, technique or method. Leo, Aquarius persons figure in prominent ways. Think about—and do something about—your potential.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are independent, fiery—you seldom start something that you don't finish. October could be one of your most important months of 1974. Aries, Libra persons play key roles in your life. You are dramatic, a natural fighter for justice, concerned with the healing arts and willing to make sacrifices for loved ones.

Ricci grabbing votes from Sarge

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

A UMass professor may be Gov. Francis W. Sargent's biggest barrier to votes in the Five-College area—and possibly Western Massachusetts this Fall.

Dr. Benjamin Ricci, president of the Belchertown State School Friends Association, launched another attack on the Governor's re-election bid this morning when he and over 25 students left for Boston to express their resentment of Sargent's treatment of an unusual murder case.

Over the past two years Ricci led a successful court battle against the state for negligence in treating the mentally retarded, at Belchertown State School, winning several million dollars for reforms at the institution.

This afternoon Ricci and the UMass group planned to meet with the Governor and legislators in an attempt to reopen the case of a former state school inmate now serving a life sentence at Norfolk Prison which Ricci and others believe was "set up".

A signed confession was the main evidence brought against 28-year-old Russell Daniels—who has been labeled by mental health authorities to "have the mind of a 9-year-old in a 28-year-old body."

Ricci has accused the Governor of "sitting idly by and doing absolutely nothing to prevent the greatest miscarriage of justice the Commonwealth has ever witnessed."

"As chief executive the Governor should have stepped in to correct the matter. Instead he left the responsibility in the hands of bureaucrats with a known disregard and record of failure in the treatment of the mentally retarded."

Gov. Sargent has labeled the Russell Daniels story "a tragic thing." According to Ricci, "this is the only point upon which I and the Governor agree."

Sargent told the Collegian that Daniels was released from Belchertown "at a time when we didn't have adequate halfway houses or community based centers."

"So he went out and performed a murder and was sent to Walpole. We immediately intervened to see that he was not kept in a maximum security center."

Ricci has charged Sargent with a "gross distortion of the facts" of the Daniels case.

"The Governor ought to be careful of the statements he has made. They reflect the ignorance the Governor has of the transcripts of this case," he said.

"Even the jurrors now have misgivings about Daniels guilt and recent newspaper stories are beginning to confirm doubts in the socalled evidence used against him."

"Change has come for the retarded in this state, not because of the Sargent administration—but because of a law suit."

Tornado aftermath

Individual crop losses high state yields little affected

Farmers said yesterday they lost several million dollars worth of animals, crops and supplies in last week's tornadoes, but all agree that the storm damage wasn't nearly so severe as it could have been.

An Associated Press survey of damage showed most spring crops had not been planted when the tornadoes struck 11 states and Canada, killing more than 300 persons and leaving thousands homeless. Federal officials estimate demage to all kinds of insured property is over half a billion dollars.

Throughout the affected areas, cleanup operations continued yesterday and funerals were held for some of the dead. Disaster relief agencies offered aid to the thousands of victims of the tornadoes.

The United States Department of Agriculture has announced plans for emergency loans to farmers in 57 counties in five states. John F. Bradley, the department's disaster coordinator, said yesterday he had no dollar estimate of farm losses, but he noted that corn and soybean crops haven't been planted yet. Other crops, he said, were too immature to suffer much damage from the storm.

Because the tornadoes were erratic, nearly destroying some areas and leaving other nearby sections practically untouched, the farm losses varied widely.

The Indiana Poultry Association reported that about 500,000 birds were lost -- nearly 5 per cent of the state's total. Danny Thomas of Borden, Ind., was wiped out, losing $60,000.

Earl Park, an agricultural statistician for Purdue University, said the tornado damage won't have much impact on the state's over-all agricultural totals. "But for individuals, of course, the losses are real serious," he added.

Kentucky Agricultural Commissioner Wendell Butler said 3,000 head of livestock, including beef and dairy cows, were destroyed by the tornadoes. He estimated the loss at $1.2 million. The state has nearly 1.8 million hogs and more than 3.2 million cattle. Many farmers said they couldn't replace their lost cattle because of today's high market prices.

Butler also said as many as 2,000 tobacco curing barns, some worth up to $10,000 each, were destroyed and will result in a shortage of space at curing time.

The Virginia Department of Agriculture was still tallying storm reports yesterday, but an insurance company spokesman in Augusta County estimated damage at between $200,000 and $300,000. The county agricultural agent said "quite a number" of farm buildings were damaged, with roofs paratially blown off. He had no specific figures.

Bob Hobson of the Tennessee Crop Reporting Service, a joint operation of the federal and state agriculture departments and the University of Tennessee, said, "damange to crops was quite limited. Except for some isolated areas in north-centeral Tennessee the saml grains came through OK . . . There was considerable erosion in some of the plowed fields and that will have to be done again."

Hobson said fruit trees had been damaged by a freeze earlier and most had already lost their blooms by the time the tornadoes hit.

The Georgia Crop Reporting Service said some of the winter grains like wheat and oats may even have benefited from the rains that accompanied the tornadoes. But the Georgia Agricultural Department said other farmers weren't so lucky. They estimated that 80 to 90 broiler houses with a capacity of 950,000 birds were destroyed in the state, the nation's major producer of poultry products.

Trackmen Learn

The score at the track meet was Northeastern 90-UMass 87, and with two events to go. Bill Gillin sucked in a deep breath and patted teammate Randy Thomas on the back. "It looks like it's up to us again," he murmured.

Gillin couldn't have relished the thought of running in the deciding event, because a year earlier in exactly the same situation the failure of both he and Thomas in the two mile had let the defended New England champions escape from Amherst with a victory.

But there was no way Coach Ken O'Brien was going to let the situation repeat itself. He had decided that about five minutes after last year's defeat.

"We had planned a long time ago to have Billy and Randy fresh for this event," said O'Brien, because this is the biggest dual meet of the year for us."

Even though Northeastern was missing several of their top athletes, O'Brien called the meet "an important psychological victory" for his track men. "Any time you beat the New England champions, it's got to give the squad a lot of confidence," he said. Because many of the athletes on both teams have competed against each other since high school, the rivalry has always been an intense one and O'Brien was willing to risk a loss to BC to win the meet.

"We plan our meets in relation to the end of the season," O'Brien said, "and this planning involves two facets."

"The first approach involves the kids we know have the best chance of scoring in the New Englands. They are scheduled for separate competition programs that ignore all dual meets except Northeastern."

"Then we have the kids who are close but not outstanding. We try to run them where they can help us and themselves best."

"For this strategy to work," O'Brien continued, "we need depth. It looks real easy on paper, but it isn't. Without the Tom Wilsons and Mike Gillens it wouldn't work."

Against the Eagles, O'Brien figured his team would win even without the services of many of its top competitors. He miscalculated, and his team lost by nine points.

His strategy was vindicated Saturday, however when the quartet of Randy Thomas, Bill Gillen, John Malone, and Devin Croft, who had been rested against CBC grabbed a first and three seconds. Come New England time, BC will have been long forgotten, but the Northeastern win will be remembered for years.

The two-mile race climaxed a UMass comeback from 32 points down after five events to 11 points down after fifteen. Thomas ran a fast relaxed pace that carried him to a new UMass record of 8:57.3 while Gillin hung back about ten yards, holding off Mike Buckley in a strategy that seemed pre-planned.

Gillin's pace was fast but cautious: in the fifth and sixth laps he moved on Buckley but did not pull away until the eighth.

"I felt good out there," Gillin said, "But I wanted to be sure I was ready when I made my move. I tried to get a big lead against Dartmouth last year in the mile and got blown off at the end."

Gillin, the defending New England steeplechase champion, knew Buckley was tired and could afford to stay with him. While Thomas was running unchallenged at the front, Gillin kept testing Buckley with short bursts of speed. When the last burst was unanswered in the eighth lap, the meet was over. A Northeastern victory on the mile relay at the end was meaningless after UMass had clinched the meet.

Northeastern players dismissed the loss as insignificant because of the depleted condition of the team and the fact that the meet was held early in the season. Even Gillen and Thomas called the meet a "good workout" but far from their best possible effort. (Despite the fact that both turned in the fastest times of their careers.) The vaunted rivalry between the teams seemed one-sided if it existed at all. Even O'Brien admitted that the meet "probably meant more to UMass than Northeastern."

Athletes who "like" to lose don't last long in collegiate competition, however, and Huskie Coach Irwin Cohen wasn't brooding Saturday about cool windy weather. He was brooding about his first dual meet loss in nearly ten years to a UMass team that did its homework. In track, as in every endeavor, it pays to learn your lessons.

Celts Key: rebounding

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Celtics are looking to improve rebounding in their efforts to go one game up on the Buffalo Braves Tuesday night in the National Basketball Association playoff semifinals.

The Eastern Conference series was knotted 2-2 when the Braves downed the Celtics 104-102 at Buffalo Saturday. Tuesday's game is at Boston Garden.

"They outrebounded us, and that was where the whole game was," said Tom Heinsohn, Celtics coach, of Saturday's contest.

"The rebounding was the one area where they had the big advantage," said John Havlicek, captain of the Celts.

At least one Buffalo player agreed. Former Columbia star Jim McMillan, who topped a Braves' rally with a last-second tap-in, said, "our youth pays off," but he also gave rebounding as a reason for the win.

The Braves outrebounded the Celtics 62-38, holding Boston to three offensive rebounds while getting 20.

McMillan, who had 11 of the offensive rebounds, said they were "a matter of concentration."

"If it was just a matter of leaping ability, I sure wouldn't have gotten that many," he said. "It's positioning and keeping the opponent out of range."

"We wouldn't be here if it weren't for his play all season," Ernie DiGregorio of the Braves said of McMillan. "He added maturity to this team, and it was typical that he'd get that hoop."

After Tuesday's contest, the series will switch to Buffalo for the sixth game Friday night.

Aaron Slams Number 715

By ED SHEARER

ATLANTA (AP) -- Henry Aaron, undaunted by the swirl of controversy surrounding his quest for baseball immortality, became the game's all-time home run king last night when he smashed the 715th of his illustrious carreer.

The 40-year-old Atlantia Braves superstar left behind the ghost of legendary Babe Ruth when he connected for the historic clout in the fourth inning off left-hander Al Downing of the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Aaron hammered a 1-0 pitch over the left field fence just to the right of the 385-foot marker and circled the bases for the 715th time accompanied by a massive fireworks display.

A sellout crowd of 52,870 rose as one for a standing ovation and Aaron's Atlanta teammates poured out of the dugout and out of the left field bullpen to greet the 40-year-old superstar.

After Aaron touched home plate, teammates lifted him and carried him a few steps before the slugger broke away and trotted to a special box adjacent to the Atlanta dugout where he embraced his wife, Billye, and his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Aaron of Mobile, Ala.

He stayed with his family about two minutes before returning to the field and holding aloft the historic ball.

The ball carried about 400 feet and did not get into the seats. It was brought back to Aaron by Atlanta relief pitcher Tom House.

The state had been set in dramatic fashion with a special 30-minute pregame show honoring Aaron.

The Atlanta star received a two-minute standing ovation during those ceremonies when he told the crowd: "Hope this thing gets over with tonight."

Aaron's homer gave the Brave's a 3-3 tie with Los Angeles in the fourth inning. It came after Darrell Evans had reached on an error by Dodget shortstop Bill Russell.

Aaron then hit his home run at 9:07 EDT, and the game was halted for 11 minutes before play resumed.

Downing then walked the next two batters, and was removed from the game by Dodger manager Walt Alston. The 5-foot-10 182-pound pitcher then strolled, his head erect, to the Dodgers' dugout to the applause of the Atlanta crowd.

Aaron thus ended in a hurry the controversy that had swirled around him ever since the Braves announced before spring training they would not use him until last night's home opener.

Commissioner Bowie Kunn suggested that Atlanta use Aaron as it had last year, playing roughly two of every three games.

The Braves started him in the season opener last Thursday, but Manager Eddie Mathews announced he would play no more in Cincinnati because "Atlanta fans deserve 715." Kuhn stepped into the controversy again. He ordered Mathews to play Aaron in Sunday's series finale at Cincinnati.

Aaron played, but went hitless in three trips, striking out twice. Atlanta officials had expected Kuhn to attend the special tribute to Aaron here, but the commissioner was attending a dinner in Celveland.

"I had no commitment to be there," Kuhn said in Cleveland. "I was invited both to Atlanta and Cleveland, and I decided to accept the invitation here since I was in Cincinnati and fortunate to participate on the day AAron hit his 714th home run."

Some writers had questioned whether Aaron was really trying in Sunday's game.

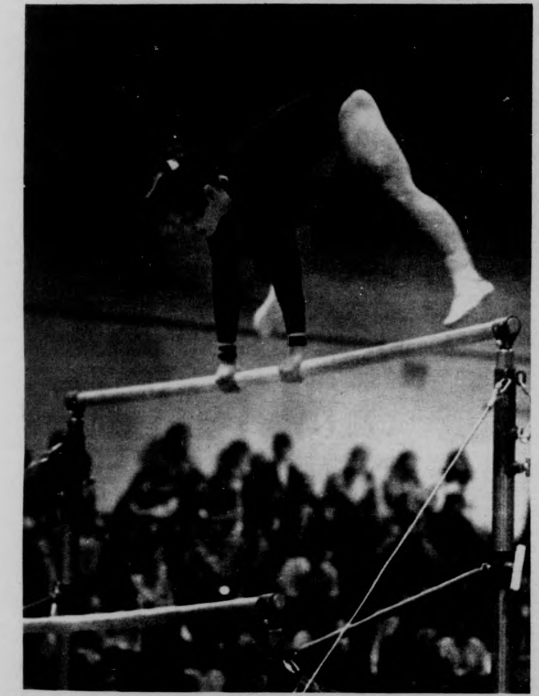
"I had perfect confidence in Hank Aaron," Kunh said. "He always has and always will give all he' got."

The home run was Aaron's 93rd against the Dodgers, his 75th since the team moved to Los Angeles from Brooklyn.

It was his 180th home run in Atlanta Stadium since the Braves moved here from Milwaukee in 1966. Aaron's 715 home runs break down to 508 off right-had pitchers and 207 off left-handers.

Chub Feeney, president of the National League, said, "It was a great thrill for me, but I am now happy for Hank. He can relax and have fun playing baseball."

Among other dignitaries at the game were entertainers Sammy Davis Jr. and Pearl Bailey, who sang the National Anthem, Georgia Gov. Jimmy Carter, and Mayor Maynard Jackson of Atlanta, the city's first black chief executive.



UMass junior, Jeannine Burger, in part of her uneven bars routine, 'hit' for a score of 9.10, to place fourth in the AIAW National Gymnastics Championships.

Baseball team hopes for win on road vs AIC in Springfield

by MIKE BROPHY

The UMass baseball team hopes to get back on the winning track this afternoon. The Minutemen stand 3-3 at this point after a disappointing loss to Boston College Sunday.

Today they are to travel to Springfield to take on the Yellowjackets of AIC.

Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Under their first year coach, Amherst-grad Rich Bedard, the Yellowjackets have become a respectable ball club as they proved on their spring trip to Florida, finishing 4-2. The pitching is somewhat improved with two freshmen added to last year's squad that surrendered 23 runs to the Minutement in eight innings.

For the Minutemen Craig Allegrezza is slated to start with John Olson waiting in the wings if needed. Olson was ready to throw Sunday but coach Bergquist wanted to give him those extra days of rest as he felt thhey could not hurt him.

The plan calls for Allegrezza to go as far as he can and to let Olson finish up if needed. "He should be strong enough to go three or four innings if Craig Runs into any trouble," noted Bergquist, "but let's hope that doesn't happen."

The pitching had been a big question mark for the Minutemen and the feared loss of Olson to a bad shoulder sent shivers down the spine of Bergquist. His return should make things a bit brighter for UMass baseball.

Other changes in the line-up, as Bergquist had indicated, are not yet set and probably will not be determined until immediately before the coaches and umpires meet at home plate.

John Healy sprained his thumb on the last play of the game Sunday and is sure to miss the game. Jim Black is slated to catch for UMass with Neal DesMarais in the wings.

Changes are most certain to come about in the outfield after the recent performance, but no one is yet sure what they will be. The only apparent mainstay is Peter Backstrom who has proven himself to be one of the finest outfielders to play for UMass.

UMass will have to get untracked and launch a substantial hitting attack if they are to compete againsst some of the schools in New England. Today could provide them with their opportunity if they contest is anything close to a repeat of last season.

Bruins to cap cup

By BILL BALLOU

The Boston Bruins will win the Stanley Cup this season, though not without a great deal of difficulty, and they'll do it by beating the Montreal Canadians in the finals.

This is not gospel, though it may border on epistle, truth, and past predictions have been suspected of being "dirty tricks" planted by the opposition camp.

Nevertheless, here's how things should go, series-by-series:

BOSTON over TORONTO in FIVE — The goaltending battle should be about even, since Gilles Gilbert is a playoff question mark, but that's where it ends. Boston has a better defense, and will score more goals, as well as the home-ice advantage. The B's have had a good deal of trouble with the Maple Leafs in the regular season, but it shouldn't carry over into this series.

MONTREAL over NEW YORK in SIX — The Rangers are notoriously bad against traditionally good playoff teams, of which Montreal is the best. New York has better goaltending, and has played better over the latter part of the season, but the intangibles that usually decide close playoff series' are all on the side of the Canadians, as well as home ice. If their goaltending holds up (which is questionable) then Montreal will win. I think they will.

PHILADELPHIA over ATLANTA in FIVE — The Flames have had a great season, proving that properly-coached mediocrity can go somewhere in today's NHL. But they just aren't close to Philadelphia in raw talent, and won't come close to beating them in this series. Philly's much better in goal, up front, and on defense, and has home ice. Atlanta will go as far as pure guts will take them, but in this case it won't be far.

CHICAGO over LOS ANGELES in SIX 8 My two choices for "sleeper" team of the playoffs play in the first round, so one will have to go. Chicago's lost fewer games than anyone else in the league during the regular season, but "tied" themselves to death. There aren't any ties in the playoffs. LA has some good talent, and are well-coached, a combination lacking for years in LA. But the key to the Kings lies in goal with Rogatien Vachon, who's one of the best playoff goalies in the league. If he's really hot, they'll be tough. But not tough enough.

Semi-finals:

BOSTON over CHICAGO in SEVEN — The Hawks didn't lose to Boston during the regular season, but don't extrapolate that into the playoffs. My choice is Boston mainly because they're more experienced and because Tony Esposito has not been a particularly good playoff goalie over the years. What it will boil down to is Boston offense vs. Chicago defense. I think the Bruins will be just a bit too strong.

MONTREAL over PHILADELPHIA in SIX — When "the Big, Bad Bruins" were in their prime around the late sixties, Montreal took care of them in two consecutive playoff series. Even with their talent depleted some, I think the Canadians will do the same with Philly. Again, much hinges on the goaling situation. But the Flyers' game is hitting and intimidation, and I don't think it'll work against Canadiens.

BOSTON over MONTREAL in SIX —Boston is simply a better hockey team, and they have a few things to prove, as well as not having to overcome their Ken Dryden mental block. Canadiens will be tough, as they always are in the Cup finals, but you can expect Phil Esposito and Bobby Orr to play out of their minds. The goaltending match-up will be interesting, putting inexperience against inexperience, but I suspect Gilbert will hold up. And, as has happened on every even-numbered year in the seventies, the Bruins will be Stanley Cup champions.

Two Hamp students win

By SHERMAN BOYSON
MDC Staff

Students running for seats in the Amherst Town Elections had a 50 per cent winning record yesterday. Hampshire students Scott Blau and Richard Sclove were elected to the Town Meeting in Precinct Six, while Jean Murray and Gen Garfield were defeated in their bids for election.

Garfield, a third year student at Hampshire College, was severely defeated at all seven precincts. The two incumbents, Nancy Eddy and Michael Sullivan, easily retained their seats.

Both Eddy and Sullivan are associated with UMass. Eddy is a staff assistant, and Sullivan is an assistant to the Controller.

Garfield aimed his campaign towards the student voters and this was cited by Eddy as his reason for losing. "The students are simply not that large of a voting block," she said.

Garfield, although he received support from the college media, did not have the support of the town. An editorial in the April 7th issue of the Amherst Record said "there is no reason in God's green earth why Garfield should be on the Amherst Board of Selectmen."

Jean Murray, a UMass graduate student in psychiatric nursing, lost her bid for one of the seats at the Town Meeting for Precinct Seven, which includes the Sylvan area dormitories, North Village, and Puffton Village. Thirteen candidates were running for 10 seats in that election.

Murray was running on the Human Rights Party platform. The Human Rights Party is the product of a revision of the Tea Party, a former radical Amherst political party. The platform included such liberal planks as legalized nudity, lessening the penalties for possession of marijuana, and public funding of alternative schools.

The Human Rights party also endorsed two other candidates in the election. Scott Blau and Richard Sclove, both Hampshire students, were victorious in their efforts to gain seats at the Town Meeting for Precinct Six. Their victory was attributed to the block of 200 votes that Hampshire College provided them. Both won with a little over 200 votes each, which indicates that only the college students voted for them.

Whether the liberal platform had an adverse or favorable effect on the election cannot be determined. The platform was only released last week, and probably was not in public view long enough to make an effect on the election.

William Field, the incumbent running for Town Moderator, had an easy time in retaining his seat in light of the fact that he had no opposition. Field is the Dean of Students at UMass.

In the race for school committee, Fred Cheyette, a UMass professor, defeated Gladys Parker. Parker was thought to be the favorite in the election, but was upset by a close margin.

Except for the block of votes from Hampshire College, student participation in the election was at a minimum. UMass and Amherst College students were rare sights at the polls. This was cited as a reason why Murray and Garfield lost their bids.

Trustees say 'not interested' to Grafton vet school site

BOSTON (AP) — UMass trustees do not want the old Grafton State Hospital for a future veterinary school, they said yesterday.

Rep. John J. Long, D-Fall River, read a statement of the trustees at a hearing of the legislature's State Administration Committee, of which he is House chairman. The statement said the trustees thought it "premature to assign us a mandate or a site" for a veterinary school.

Long asked Sen. John J. Conte, D-Worcester, what he thought of the statement. Conte is sponsor of a bill transferring the closed hospital and its 1,100 acres to the trustees.

"That's the same rhetoric we heard when it was a question of establishing the medical school at Worcester. Most of the trustees were against it at first," Conte said.

Conte said he did not foresee UMass running a veterinary school in the end, since under his bill at least three other states would have to participate in one.

"To get the cooperation of other states, we've got to make some commitments," he said.

"Why should it be that any qualified individual who wants to train himself as a veterinarian doesn't have that opportunity in the land of opportunity." he asked.

Several UMass students later told the committee of being shut out of veterinary schools in other states.

Alan Ferguson, executive director of the New England Board of High Education, called the need for veterinarians in New England critical. According to the estimate of the National Academy of Sciences of 1617 per veterinarians per 100,000 population, Massachusetts is short 600 and New England is short 1,100 Ferguson said.

Sargent doesn't listen

By KEN MOSAKOWSKI

A delegation of some 30 UMass students and faculty traveled to the State House in Boston yesterday to lobby in support of the mentally retarded and to publicize the Russell Daniels case.

One of the group's objectives was to meet with Governor Francis Sargent and urge him to form a citizens' review commission to reopen the case of Russell Daniels, a 29-year-old black man who was convicted a year ago of murdering an 89-year-old Springfield woman, and sentenced to life imprisonment in Norfolk State Prison.

Members of Daniels' support group maintain that Daniels is innocent and that he was "set up" as a convenient scapegoat by the Springfield police, who, the supporters say, wanted to find a quick solution to the murder. Daniels, a patient at Belchertown State School for 13 years before his release in 1970, has a mental capacity of a nine-year-old. He could neither read nor understand the murder confession which the Springfield police forced him to sign.

For three hours yesterday afternoon, the group waited patiently in the Executive Office reception room in the State House, while UMass students Susan Sherry and Lynn Nichols and UMass professor Dr. Benjamin Ricci, president of the Friends of Belchertown State School, pleaded with Sargent's aides for an audience with the governor.

The group was asking Sargent to skt up a citizens' commission to investigate the Springfield Police Department and to hold "accountable" the Department of Mental Health for an alleged failure to follow up on released patients. They were informed repeatedly that it would be impossible for the governor to meet with the group on such short notice, without an appointment.

Ms. Sherry said, however, that earlier attempts to set up an appointment had received little cooperation from the governor's staff. Emotional appeals by members of Daniels' family, who had traveled to Boston with the group, and a quick meeting set up between Al Kramer, the governor's chief aide, and State Representatives James Collins (D-Amherst;, Doris Bunte (D-Boston), and Mel King (D-Boston), all failed to produce an audience with the governor.

The support group presented a suitcase-full of more than 700 letters to the governor's receptionist, Eileen Ventresco, requesting action on behalf of the mentally retarded, and Russell Daniels in particular. The letters remained piled on her desk for more than two hours while the petitioners sat or walked around the reception lounge talking with the governor's aides, interested legislators, and members of the press.

In addition to Collins and representatives of the Black Caucus, a number of concerned legislators came to speak with members of the Daniels support group. They included State Senator John Olver (D-Amherst), House Sppaker David BArtley (D-Holyoke), and State Representatives Al Lolas (D-Monson) and Edward Connelly (R-Agawam).

Before the Daniels support group left the State House late yesterday afternoon, Ms. Nichols said that she would continue to seek an appointment with the governor for the purpose of getting the Daniels case re-opened.

SW Center busy place

By CHRIS WALTER
MDC Staff

"How can people collectively and profitably contribute to a community?" This is a question which Bob Antil faces every day as part of his job, as the Student Coordinator for Southwest. As he describes it, his job is to "coordinate, inspire and give advice to groups, dorms and individuals who are planning activities in Southwest."

Much of his activity centers around the use of the Southwest Student Center, located in Hampden dining common. Since the Fall, when Antil took the job of Student Co-ordinator, the Student Center has seen a wide variety of uses. These have included; a children's film presentation, various lectures and meetings, and demonstrations of Sims Yoga and Hypnotism.

One very prominent use of the center has been for parties. "The parties started with JQA lower, and that one was so successful that there has been one almost every weekend since," said Antil. "Except for some occasional rowdiness, which you expect at parties, there haven't been any really serious problems," he went on.

Antil doesn't see parties as being the primary activity taking place within the Student Center, however. "I'd like to see it evolve into a full-fledged student center", he said, "with music rooms, study rooms, theater and anything in between. Anything the Student Union and Campus Center are used for can also be done here."

Other enterprises which Antil mentioned include an exercise room, a television room, copying machines, an "ongoing" crafts center, and a "mini Distinguished Speaker program."

Upcoming activities which are planned for this semester include; a concert by black musician-poets, a week of theater, a "Gay Nineties" Choral performance, and a Southwest Fair.

A "Cabaret" coffee house is also being planned. It will include films, skits, and "multi-media activities." It is hoped that the "Cabaret" will capitalize on Southwest talent. "These coffee houses will be run bi-weekly next semester" said Antil.

Antil's main concern now is that of "fostering a community spirit.' It is hoped by Antil that "ongoing activities in the Student Center will tend to bring people together." A "Rathskeller" is especially prominent in Antil's plans to "foster community spirit." "With just a food store and a snack bar it's hard to bring people together there. We'd like to make the center a meeting place for Southwest. The Rathskeller is at an impasse with food services at the moment, but we're hoping to open it next semester," he said, "We don't want another Blue Wall here, we'd prefer more of a club atmosphere."

The major problem to all of this is money. "We only have a six-hundred dollar budget," he said, "Though we're applying for more this year."

Antil is also taking a new approach to his job. "In the past," he said, "This job was mainly administrative. This was good in a way since it worked to legitimize the job. I want to be more aggressive and start things going." His criteria for use of the Student Center is "if Southwest will benefit."

"Rather than sticking with old fashioned, time honored activities, we want to reach out and draw on the input of the students. One problem we haven't had is a lack of ideas."

Town selectmen create nuke advice committee

By MIDE ALLAIN
MDC Staff

The Amherst Board of Selectmen voted unanimously at their meeting on Monday night to approve the creation of a Nuclear Advisory Committee which will prepare an information paper on nuclear power and evaluate ways for public participation in nuclear power dicisions.

The Board acted on the request of Chairman Michael Sullivan who presented to them a one page memo calling for the formation of a seven person committee representing both "pro and con viewpoints."

According to the memo, the committee will be formed to:

1—"Prepare an information paper with a Selectman and Citizens of Amherst about the benefits and dangers of nuclear power and language that is not Madison avenue propaganda of the utility companies or obscure technical jargon of concerned scientists.

2—"Evaluate ways for public participation in nuclear power decisions by Atomic Energy Commission for licensing, construction and operation of facilities.

3—"Evaluate ways for public approval or disapproval at the local, regional and state level.

4—"Evaluate the establishment of a legal system that will guarantee compensation for injury caused by nuclear radiation.

5—"Evaluate the dangers to life and health of transportation and storage of radioactive materials and waste.

6—"Assess ways to fully legislate monitoring of nuclear power plant.

7—"Assess the possibilities of nuclear accident by political sabotage or insane acts.

8—"Assess the possibility of nuclear accident by human error or technical failure.

9—"Provide us with any other information, that we are not now getting, that we should have to properly evaluate nuclear power."

Assistant Town Manager Stephen Schaefer said yesterday that anyone interested in applying for a position on the NAC is invited to fill out an application, which are available in Town Hall.

Selectmen have not yet announced when committee members will be chosen.

In a separate action at last night's meeting, Selectmen unanimously passed a motion to prohibit all dogs from "running at large" between May 1 and September 30, 1974.

Two UMass debaters westward bound

By PAUL BRADLEY
MDC Staff

In addition to the basketball and gymnastics team, there is another team on this campus receiving national recognition. The UMass debate team, which has received little campus attention, is sending two representatives to the National Debate Competition in Colorado.

John Cross, a freshman from Barnstable, will be one of two debators representing UMass at the national competition. This is a significant achievement since few freshman have recently gone to the nationals.

John Adams, a Plattsburg, N.Y. native, will be the other University representative. This too is quite an accomplishment since Adams, a sophomore, had no previous debating experience.

"He probably has improved the most of any debator on our team," says Tim Hynes, a graduate student who serves as the team coach. Hynes will accompany the two participants to the competition, to be held at the Air Force Academy in Colorado from April 19-22.

Hynes said there are 9 geographic regions which include more than 1200 schools who have active debating teams. From each of these regions, two to five teams qualify for tie nationals.

UMass is a member of the region that includes all of the schools in New England and New York. The fact that UMass qualified is particularly impressive when one considers that interest in debating here is not very strong.

"We really don't have that many people with high school experience," says Hynes, "while a lot of other schools that we compete against have extensive recruiting programs."

Hynes, himself a former debator, points out that successful debaters spend from two to three hours each night in researching their topic. A dedicated debater, he does as much work as a "doctoral candidate, or maybe more," he says. He adds that each debater has in his head up to 6,000 individual pieces of information.

Hynes explained that the topic to be debated is decided upon by a vote during the summer prior to the season. This year the topic is the Energy Crisis.

Each debater must discuss both sides of an issue. In the eight rounds, each contestant speaks four times for, and four times against a particular position. "A person's value judgements may not be infused onto the debate itself," says Hynes.

There are presently 25-30 active debaters at UMass, and their level of involvement "really depends on the desire of the student. Some debate as often as every other week," says Hynes.

"There are any number of things that debating can help with," he said. "It's an opportunity for the debater to present himself in an organized fashion. Everybody should be able to do this."

AHORA presents Cultural Week

By LUIS MANUEL MEDINA

Composers featured at 2nd 'Purple Moon'

By GARY GOMES
MDC Staff

This past Saturday, April 6, the second annual Black Musicians Conference took place, featuring composers Richard Abrams and Marion Brown.

The Conference, sponsored by Harambee and other campus organizations, was called "The Second Night of the Purple Moon", as a follow-up to the "First Night of the Purple Moon," which took place in New Jersey this summer.

Divided into two main sections, the Conference started in a workshop in the Commonwealth Room from 1-5 p.m. The musicians discussed the state of Black Music, and came to the conclusion that it was in a better position than it had been for quite a few years, due to the strength of the music and the fact that it had remained true to itself and the country for the many years it has existed. The musicians felt a need to stress the importance of the history of the music, and to avoid the "sweet", gutless sounds that are currently permeating the airwaves. The important thing that was dealt with, according to Bill Hassan, who helped co-ordinate the conference, is to keep on stressing and promoting this music which exists as America's strongest art form.

The strength of the music was amply demonstrated in the performance of both Marion Brown and Muhal Richard Abrams.

Brown, who has performed with Sun Ra, Ornette Coleman and John Coltrane, and is currently teaching music at Bowdoin College in Maine, showed himself to be firmly rooted in a wildly imaginative range of historically important saxophone stylings. His scholarly manner, combined with the guts he wrenched from the saxophone, blended easily, a feat rarely accomplished.

The Sextet of Muhal Richard Abrams, co-founder of the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians of Chicago, was truly astounding. Abrams started the set with a piano solo, full of imagination, and was soon joined by the amazing Steve McCall, fellow co-founder of the AACM, and percussionist supreme. The group made its way through a startling array of material, all the way from "free" playing to a Souza-like march to a beautiful flute ensemble passage, which staggered the Student Union Ballroom.

Poets Tony McNeill, Robert Ruff, and Amus Moor took the stage in between the purely musical sets, and proved that poetry readings do not have to be dry and tired affairs, and that poetry can be a song of many people.

"The Second Night of the Purple Moon" although not having the length of last year's one week affair, provided almost as much in ways of intensity and education on a unique Afro-American art form.

Newman Center expands Holy Week schedule

By PATRICIA M. KELLY

Under the leadership of Msgr. David J. Power and Rev. J. Joseph Quigley, a committee of students and faculty are offering an expanded schedule of Holy Week Services at the Newman Center. The program is twofold: the traditional liturgical services and supplementary educational and devotional offerings.

The traditional services are on Holy Thursday with Mass at 8:00 a.m. and the Celebration of the Lord's Supper at 5:00 p.m. The reading of the Lord's Passion and meditation will be held on Good Friday at 2:30 p.m. The Easter Vigil and Celebration of the Lord's Resurrection from the dead will be on Holy Saturday at 7:30 p.m. On Easter Sunday the triumph over death will be celebrated at all the Masses. The Mass schedule is 8:00, 9:15, 10:30 a.m., 12:00 noon, 7:00 p.m.

The supplementary educational and devotional offerings begin Wednesday with an open discussion on God, Christ, and the Church. This is a great opportunity to raise questions concerning the Catholic faith at 8:00 p.m. in the Chapel. Reflection on the Holy Eucharist and the Mass tradition will be on Holy Thursday at 8:00 p.m. under the guidance of Rev. Edward Boyle and Rev. Adian McCall. On Good Friday at 7:30 p.m., the Penitential Rite will be celebrated. An explanation of recent instruction on the Sacrament of Penance and confession will follow.

The goal of the supplementary offerings is to give everyone a solid theological grounding to the traditional Holy Week liturgical services. The committee hopes that students and faculty will come and re-examine their Catholic heritage with others. The activities begin on Wednesday to use the last three days of Lent (Triduum) so everyone can share more fully in the Easter Triumph here or at home since it is the long weekend.

The Holy Week Committee includes Dan Callahan (Ugrad), Cindi Charpentier (Ugrad), John Conlon (Business), Edward Connors (Math), Sr. Denise Roche (Grad), Tom Schneider (Grad) and Marty Seiler (Ugrad).

CEQ petitions oppose nukes

by DON ROBADUE, JR.

The Coalition for Environmental Quality presented petitions bearing 1400 signatures against the proposed Montague twin nuclear power plants to the Government Regulations Committee yesterday. Ranan Cohen, outreach co-ordinator for C.E.Q., spoke in support of two bills which would involve the Commonwealth in nuclear power plant decisions.

One bill, H. 2373, was submitted by Rep. James Collins of Amherst. It proposed that legislative authorization be required for the construction of any nuclear fission power plant in Massachusetts. The other bill, S.1497, endorsed by Sen. Olver and Rep. Collins, would establish a commission to study health and safety issues of nuclear power plants.

Cohen informed the committee of the strong local concern over the dangers of the proposed Montague plant. Questions over the safety of the plants are a hotly debated issue in the scientific community, he said, and this scientific uncertainty alone makes public review of nuclear power plants vital in the interest of public health and safety.

Earlier testimony by Harvard economist Daniel Ford, a prominent critic of current nuclear power plants, provided substantial background to Cohen's concerns. Ford quoted a Wall Street Journal report that the unreliability of nuclear power plants, in terms of low safety and inability to be in proper condition for operation at designed efficiency, was their most reliable feature.

Ford cited an Atomic Energy Commission task force report that had been suppressed until recently, which documented over 1000 cases of safety problems, including water leakage into control equipment, ruptured pipes, and near disasters in American nuclear power plants in the past two years. He further stated that there are few safety inspections by the A.E.C. of the manufacture, construction, and operation of nuclear power plants.

St. Clair may be at House probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — A proposal to let President Nixon's lawyer attend closed sessions of the House Judiciary Committee when it receives evidence in its impeachment inquiry won general support yesterday among committee Democrats.

If actually written into the committee's rules of procedure, the arrangement would go a long way toward healing a partisan split that has developed over the issue.

The development came as the committee waited for a promised reply from the White House to a request for tapes of 42 presidential conversations.

The committee had set a deadline today for the reply and Chairman Peter W. Rodino, D-N.J., scheduled a committee meeting for Wednesday or Thursday to deal with the question of a subpoena if the reply was unsatisfactory.

Republican members have been insisting James St. Clair, Nixon's chief impeachment lawyer, be allowed to participate in the committee's activities, while Democrats generally have said that would turn what is essentially an investigation into a trial.

It has been suggested by Rodino, D-N.J., that the question of St. Clair's participation be dealt with after the committee receives a presentation of the facts developed by the committee staff.

But at an informal meeting of committee Democrats, there was widespread agreement to let St. Clair be present when John Doar, chief committee counsel, starts laying out the case.

In another apparent concessions to Republican critics, Doar said he would be able to present an overview of the case in about seven days, rather than take five to six weeks in a detailed presentation, as he had proposed earlier.

The Democrats are still proposing to delay any decisions on whether to call witnesses or receive additional evidence until the initial presentation is completed.

That is another area of disagreement with at least some Republican members, who want assurances that important witnesses will be brought before the committee for cross-examination by St. Clair.

The main Republican goal, however, is to establish at the outset the right of St. Clair to be present when evidence is put before the committee. With that apparently attained, they would probably be willing to wait until Doar presents his facts before pressing the issue of calling witnesses.

Stone testifies that Vesco was not purposely avoided

NEW YORK (AP) — Insurance tycoon W. Clement Stone cast doubt yesterday on government claims that former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell warned a Republican presidential campaign aide to "stay away" from financier Robert L. Vesco and his $200,000 campaign contribution.

Vesco's secret cash contribution, the government charges, was the reason for the charges of conspiracy, obstruction of justice and perjury of which Mitchell and former Commerce Secretary Maurice Stans are accused.

The testimony about the warning had come earlier in the trial from Daniel Hofgren, a government witness at the criminal conspiracy trial of Mitchell and Stans.

Hofgren testified he talked to Mitchell at a reception that preceded a March 8, 1972, fund-raising dinner at the Washington Hilton hotel, and that Mitchell made the "stay away" remark on that occasion.

Stone, however, testified for the defense that Mitchell was his guest at the $1,000-a-plate dinner; didn't make the reception, and arrived late for the dinner itself.

That left it up to the jury to decide whether Mitchell had the opportunity to talk with Hofgren that night.

In an attempt to counter the testimony, the government, on cross-examination, drew from Stone testimony that there were a number of other receptions at the hotel that night at which Hofgren might have encountered Mitchell.

Stone, 71, a Chicago multimillionaire, was the largest single contributor to President Nixon's 1972 campaign, donating more than $2 million. He picked up a $10,000 tab for a table for 10 at the dinner.

Stans and Mitchell are accused of obstructing a massive Securities and Exchange Commission investigation of Vesco's financial empire, in return for Vesco's $200,000 contribution to the Nixon re-election campaign.

Robert Finch, Nixon's secretary of Health, Education and Welfare and later counselor to the President also testified for the defense yesterday.

Finch, who now practices law in California, told about a campaign finance meeting he attended on March 13, 1972.

Nixon pledges rapid storm victims aid

XENIA, Ohio (AP) — President Nixon inspected the scene of what he called "the most devastating disaster I've ever seen" yesterday and ordered expedited help for its victims.

The President's plane flew over the area first. Then Nixon walked and drove slowly through this southwestern Ohio town of 25,000 population where some 32 persons were killed and a thousand left homeless by a tornado six days ago.

The Xenia tornado was one of more than 100 twisters which ravaged a region from Georgia to the Canadian border last week, killing more than 300 and prompting massive federal assistance efforts.

After his helicopter landed in a muddy, debris-strewn schoolyard, the President greeted service station owner Te Crutchfield in the backyard of his storm-damaged home.

"The people here need all the help they can get," Crutchfield told Nixon.

"You'll get it," the President responded.

In one conversation after another with storm victims, local and state officials and volunteer workers, Noxon vowed red tape would be cut to accelerate federal aid for housing, schools and jobs.

En route back to Washington, he told federal disaster officials aboard the presidential aircraft that he wanted top priority given to getting people out of evacuation centers in Xenia and other storm-hit cities by Sunday.

Housing Secretary James T. Lynn said Nixon gave these orders:

"Get on with it. Expedite it. Cut red tape to the bare bone. Be as flexible as the law allows in helping these people."

The President's blue sedan, American flags fluttering from its fenders, moved slowly through devastated sections Xenia.

"The destruction, the total devastation is the worst I've ever seen... It is the most devastating disaster I've ever seen" Nixon told city officials and newsmen.

Easter weekend approaches

Uneasy Ulster peace threatened

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Bombing, sniping and rioting erupted in Belfast and other Northern Irish cities yesterday, leaving nine persons injured and a trail of smoldering ruins. The violence was believed part of a spring offensive by the outlawed Irish Republican Army.

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Britian's fragile peace plan for Northern Ireland is in trouble from restive Roman Catholics and Protestant hardliners.

Protestant leaders themselves are divided and militants among them are already talking of civil war.

Nearly 1,000 persons have died in more than 4½ years of violence. There are fears that Easter weekend, a traditional time for demonstrations by the province's Roman Catholic minority, may bring a fresh surge of violence.

Brian Faulkner, chief executive of the province's domestic government, has repeatedly stressed his misgivings about the British peace plan.

Faulkner, the leader of an administration situated between the warring religious factions, controls only one part of what was for half a century the dominant voice in northern politics — the Protestant-based Unionist party.

He now faces restlessness among those Unionists who have gone along with him in accepting the premise that the Catholic minority should have a real voice in government.

In a meeting on Monday, Faulkner reportedly told Merlyn Rees, British cabinet member in charge of Northern Ireland affairs, that his party was uneasy at London's plans to release an unspecified number of suspected republican terrorists from internment.

The released men will have to find "sponsors" from their locality to give a so-far-undefined guarantee of good behavior.

Belfast newspapers have derided the scheme as naive, dubbing it the "take home a terrorist" plan.

The release scheme is intended to appease Roman Catholics in Faulkner's administration, represented by the Social Democratic and Labor party led by Gerry Fitt. The party's militants want to pull out of government unless internment is drastically reduced.

Faulkner, according to informed sources, told Rees his party is unhappy with the legalizing of two long-outlawed groups, the Protestant-based Ulster Volunteer Force and the Provisional Sinn Fein, political front of the Irish Republican Army guerrillas who want to get Northern Ireland out of the United Kingdom.

He faces the threat of defections to hardline elements opposed to power-sharing, and thus a further erosion of his political base.

AP News Roundup

Bangladesh progress

NEW DELHI, India (AP) - India, Pakistan and Bangladesh agreed yesterday on the release of 195 Pakistani war prisoners, lowering the last major barrier to friendly relations on the sub-continent.

The accord was signed in a brief ceremony capping five days of tough negotiations by foreign ministers of the three countries.

Earlier, diplomatic sources said the foreign ministers had reached a broad consensus on solutions to two issues hanging over from the 1971 India-Pakistan war: the fate of the war prisoners and the Bangladesh demand that Pakistan accept more Biharis, the non-Bengalis in Bangladesh.

The war created the new state of Bangladesh out of what had been East Pakistan.

Although the agreement reached was signed today by Foreign Ministers Swaran Singh of India, Aziz Ahmed of Pakistan and Kamal Hossein of Bangladesh, the accord still had to be formally ratified by their prime ministers.

Campaign reform

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate voted yesterday to limit further debate on a controversial campaign reform bill, clearing the way for its passage.

The vote on putting the Senate's antifilibuster rule into effect was 64 to 30, or one more than the required two-thirds majority of senators voting.

Each senator's speaking time from now on will be limited to one hour on the bill and all amendments.

Majority leader Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., said he hoped this would make it possible for the Senate to complete action on the bill today.

However, more than 60 amendments are still pending and could be called up for a vote despite the limitation on debate.

Mideast fighting

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Syrian command claimed yesterday it had beaten back Israeli forces with ground-to-ground missiles in escalated fighting on the Golan Heights.

The battle on the 29th straight day of fighting was reported in the northern sector of the 1973 cease-fire line near Biblical Mt. Hermon. Israel denied Syrian claims to have inflicted heavy losses.

"Our guns and antitank system scored direct hits on an enemy tank formation that was rushing toward the frontline edge of the northern sector and inflicted heavy losses," a Syrian military communique said.

But the Israeli command reported, "Our forces suffered no casualties." It gave no further details.

The northern sector is the 300-square-mile salient on the Kunaitra-Damascus road which Israel captured in the October war.

Cancer 'shield'

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) - A Texas scientist yesterday reported evidence suggesting cancers may have a special "biological shield" that enables them to thwart the body's chief natural defenses against foreign invaders.

Dr. W. T. Kniker, in reporting this, said that if the concept is confirmed, the protective shield itself might prove vulnerable to some especially designed chemical counterattack - thus providing a new approach to cancer treatment.

But Kniker stressed that while the research results to date suggest a possible new lead toward aiding the battle against cancer, important questions remain to be answered before final assessment can be made of the work's importance, if any.

Union head says taxpayers can be victimized by IRS

WASHINGTON (AP) - Taxpayers can be victimized by an Internal Revenue Service quota system that rewards agents for harshness and penalizes them for leniency, the head of the IRS employes union said yesterday.

Vincent L. Connery, president of the National Treasury Employes Union, also told a Senate appropriations subcommittee that many IRS shortcomings stem from inadequate pay and training plus "extreme production pressure."

He said initiatives to meet taxpayer needs and ease discontent have been announced by IRS but "no matter how highly they may trumpet these initiatives, they are no more than cosmetic reforms."

Connery said revenue officers often are forced by management to initiate levy or seizure proceedings against a taxpayer rather than permit him to enter into an installment payment arrangement because of the time-consuming paperwork and legwork involved in administering part-payment plans.

"No matter what anyone may say or how many directives are issued by the commissioner, production goals and quotas are the name of the game," Connery said.

"Employes who fail to meet management's performance expectations are either denied promotions or, in all too many instances, faced with disciplinary proceedings," he said.

Connery quoted from a memo he said was written by Robert J. Mailly, an IRS group manager, dated Jan. 11, in which Mailly told his agents that:

"Enforcement activity was light during the month of December - due to leave and the charitable inclinations of most of us during the holiday season. The holiday season is past, it's a new year - firm enforcement must replace acts of charity."

Connery said that the most important thing to the collection division of IRS is the number of cases closed "with little or no regard to the effects of their orders on the individual taxpayer.

"Revenue officers are oftentimes rewarded for seizing a taxpayer's assets and severely disciplined if they permit him to remain in business and repay his debt to the federal government: part-payment plans do not close cases," Connery said.

Sargent's fiscal budget cut in committee

BOSTON (AP) - The House Ways and Means Committee cut Gov. Francis W. Sargent's fiscal 1976 state budget requests by some $48 million before reporting the bill to the House floor yesterday.

Committee Chairman Anthony M. Scibelli, D-Springfield, and Vice Chairman Joseph D. Early, D-Worcester, said new taxes could be avoided during fiscal 1975 only if the administration keeps a tight rein on spending.

At the same time, they said they were "pessimistic" about the prospects of avoiding tax increases through fiscal 1975.

Fiscal 1975 runs from July 1, 1974 through June 30, 1975.

Sargent had submitted a $2.788 billion budget. The committee's version totals some $2.74 billion.

Scibelli said at a news conference that some $30 million had been cut from the Human Services Secretariat, mostly welfare money, and another $30 million had been cut from the executive office of administration and finance.

Money was added to the budget for community colleges and implementation of the Special Education Act of 1972, Scibelli said. That law requires communiteis to set up programs for children with special educational needs.

Sargent's version of the budget would require new taxes, Scibelli said. The Ways and Means version requires "strict budgetary compliance and control" to avoid tax increases, he said.

Sargent's bill was up about 10 per cent over this year's spending.

After filing the fiscal 1975 budget, however, the governor submitted legislation proposing some $60 million in increases for this fiscal year and $18 million worth of amendments to next year's budget.

The governor proposed to finance much of the new spending requests by cutting back 6.5 per cent in most categories of the fiscal 1975 budget.

Around New England

No shared rides in car pool business

DANBURY, Conn. (AP) - The operators of a new car pool business think there's money to be made in car pooling, but in their first two weeks of operation not a ride has been shared.

"I think the energy crisis is off for now and the pressure is off and they may not be thinking of car-pooling at this time," said Charles Wittman, secretary of Car Pool Inc. in a telephone interview yesterday.

"But even if there are no more long lines, I think car pooling is here to stay," he said.

The company's newspaper advertising boasts its "plan to stop gas lines forever...while we save you plenty of hard cash, enough for a new car."

Despite early disappointment, Wittman thinks drivers who have to commute from the Danbury-Brewster, N.Y. to New York and elsewhere will turn to car pooling because of the long tiring drive and the costs of maintaining an automobile.

He noted there are free state parking lots available along highways for car poolers. But he said his company can offer more.

For $1 per day his firm serves morning coffee at its parking lot. It guards the cars, cleans them and changes tires. It offers to match car poolers and drive customers to big airports.

Collins in Conn. governor race

HARTFORD (AP) - Embracing the policies of Gov. Thomas J. Meskill and shunning campaign help from President Nixon, House Speaker Francis J. Collins began his quest yesterday for the Republican gubernatorial nomination.

Collins, a 40-year-old Brookfield attorney, joined U.S. Rep. Robert H. Steele and Bridgeport Mayor Nicholas A. Panuzio in the fight to lead the GOP ticket in November. Panuzio is the reported favorite of the party leaders.

The Democrats have three candidates vying for their nomination, Congresswoman Ella T. Grasso Atty. Gen. Robert K. Killian and former Norwalk Mayor Frank Zullo.

Collins said the Meskill administration's ability to cut taxes and control state spending would be the major issue of the 1974 campaign.

He added he would not welcome help from President Nixon.

Impeachment call

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - Harvard Professor George Wald, a Nobel Prize winner, has joined other speakers at a special town meeting forum in calling for the impeachment of President Nixon.

Wald told the group gathered Monday night at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology that impeachment would be a first step in solving the problem of "unrestrained executive power."

The New England Committee for Impeachment Action, a recently formed group, said they plan to send a tape recording of the meeting to John Doar, chief counsel for the House Judiciary Committee, which is considering impeachment proceedings.

Other speakers were Alnita Bond, field organizer for Local 1199 of the Massachusetts Hospital Workers Union; Hubert Jones, assistant professor of urban planning at MIT; and Richard Barnet, co-director of the Insitute for Policy Studies in Washington.

Barnet said the President's biggest offense "is the pattern of conduct which he accepted and ordered, a pattern of systematic violations of personal liberties in the name of national security."

Timberlane strike

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) - Striking teachers in the Timberlane Regional School District won an injunction yesterday barring the state Board of Education from holding a hearing on a petition to decertify them.

Following a 1½-hour hearing in Merrimack County Superior Court, Judge William R. Johnson issued the order to stop the hearing scheduled for today in Exeter.

He ordered the question of the constitutionality of the board's policy of decertifying striking teachers to be transfered to the state Supreme Court.

Today's hearing had been requested by the Timberlane School Board, but the board, which covers Atkinson, Danville, Sandown and Plaistow along the Massachusetts border, withdrew its petition after an emergency meeting Sunday.

The state board, which had already postponed the hearing twice, planned to vote at 2 p.m. on whether to go on with the hearing because of potential statewide implications.

A board spokesman said the board had already sent out registered letters to inform the striking teachers of the hearing and that there wasn't time to inform them it had been called off.

The court injunction was the latest in a series of legal victories for the teachers. About 100 of the district's 150 teachers have been on strike for six weeks in a contract dispute over grievance procedure.

Lifeline proposal would give moderate power users relief

—Last week: MassPIRG reports explained how the PIRG is attempting to coordinate concerned citizen input into the implementation of the Federal Pollution Control Act of 1972.—

During the past year, American fuel companies have managed to substantially increase the cost of all types of fuel by successfully creating and manipulating an 'energy crisis'. The cost of home-heating fuels has risen sharply over the winter. Gasoline is no longer very difficult to get but it now costs close to sixty cents a gallon. The question is no longer whether there is enough fuel to go around, but whether everyone will be able to afford it or not.

Mass PIRG reports

The electrical companies have been able to pass on their higher costs for fuel to the consumer by means of the fuel adjustment charge. The companies now claim that this is not enough and the Department of Public Utilities is presently considering petitions for basic rate increases from six different Massachusetts companies. If the petitions are acted on favorably, it would involve additional costs of some 56 million dollars to the consumer.

In the middle of the 'energy crisis' last winter, the electric companies enclosed short booklets with each monthly bill that gave helpful hints on how the consumer could cut down on his consumption of electricity. WMECO's service vehicles displayed 'Conserve Energy' stickers on their doors and bumpers. Now the electric companies claim that the rates must go up because the consumers' efforts to conserve electricity have cut too deeply into their revenues.

While the DPU is considering the petitions for rate increases, the Massachusetts legislature is reviewing MassPIRG's Lifeline proposal (Senate Bill No. 156) — a modest rate-reform proposal designed to give the small and moderate user of electricity some relief from the rapidly-rising cost of electricity. The bill was drawn up under the assumption that a minimal amount of electricity is no longer a luxury but a necessity to the American public. Therefore, the rate for such a minimum level consumption should be held at a set rate and any needed increases should be absorbed by the larger user.

MassPIRG is one of a number of student PIRGs in the country that is pushing for the Lifeline reform. It presented the proposal in December of last year during a national PIRG conference held in Washington D.C. In March of this year it printed a preliminary statement on the Senate bill and, on April 2, Martin Puterman, a MassPIRG staff consultant, gave testimony in support of Lifeline before the Governmental Regulations Committee in Boston.

During the last forty years, when energy resources were considered abundant, the utility companies offered low 'promotional' rates to large consumers (such as industries) to encourage consumption and thereby keep the rates down, (large corporations often pay one-third to one-thirtieth as much per kilowatt-hour (kwh) as a residential consumer). Today, however, it seems absurd that the utilities directly encourage large-scale and often wasteful consumption of electricity when energy resources are seen to be in short supply.

The Lifeline bill, if passed by the legislature, would set the cost for the first 300 kwh at 3 cents per kwh for the supply of electrical power to the principal dwelling of a residential customer. This rate would not be effected by any minimum charge, service charge, or other periodic charges to the customer excluding the fuel adjustment charge.

The figure of 300 kwh was determined as the average electrical consumption rate needed by a family of 2-4 persons to run a refrigerator, water pump, furnace blower, radio, black and white television set, and to use minimal lighting. The average consumption in Massachusetts for a residential dwelling, by comparison, is 520 kwh per month. The figures rom the rate departments of the three largest Mass. utility companies, however, show that 50 per cent of the current residential bills are for less than 300 kwh per month. Using these figures again, MassPIRG has estimated that 80 per cent of all residential users in Mass. would receive reduced bills under the Lifeline proposal.

A WMECO customer, for example, now pays $11.71 for 300 kwh a month. Under Lifeline, he would pay $9.00 a month and thereby save a total of $32.50 a year. Further estimates show that residential customers under this system would have lower bills up to 1600 kwh a month.

The utility companies would not lose money under this plan since the larger consumers would make up the additional cost by paying a slightly higher rate for each kwh consumed after the first 300. This is in direct contrast with the current declining block rate structure which causes smaller users to subsidize the larger users by paying a higher rate.

The Boston Edison system, for example, requires a user of 100 kwh per month to pay an average of 5.6 cents per kwh; a user of 300 kwh per month an average of 3.9 cents per kwh; and a user of 1700 kwh per month an average of 1.9 cents per kwh. This certainly seems to discourage the larger consumers of electricity from conserving energy.

Large consumers of electricity have a much greater opportunity to cut down on their consumption while the small user has a set minimum required for day-to-day living. The Federal Energy Office has estimated that industrial users could cut their consumption by 30 per cent without effecting their operations. A marginal price increase to these large users would act as an incentive for them to modify their consumption and employ alternative forms of energy in order to avoid the extra cost.

The Lifeline proposal would shift the burden of higher rates from those least able to afford them to those most able to afford an increase and conserve energy in an effort to avoid one. Rapidly-escalating rates are falling most heavily on low-income consumers with fixed or marginal incomes, forcing them to choose between the basic necessities of life — food or rent or fuel.

It seems that at no other point in the history of the United States is the saying 'the rich get richer and the poor get poorer' more true than today. The passage of Senate Bill No. 156 would be a small but important step toward reversing this trend.

McGilvray misunderstands police

To The Editor:

As persons involved with several youth programs on campus, we have had occasion to become involved with both the Amherst and Campus Police. The interactions in the majority of cases focused on youth in crisis. The occasions have been many and the incidents have often involved youth from the community as well as from all parts of the Commonwealth and New -- not only youth on campus for program purposes. The assistance these men and women have provided our programs and these youth, who think UMass is a playground, has been a major contributing factor in not only establishing within this state a firm foothold for community-based treatment for so-called delinquent youth, but has also helped many a youth who thought being on his or her own was what he or she wanted and was capable of handling.

We therefore take extreme exception to McGilvray's recent cartoon depicting the Campus Police and those who think it appropriately humorous. It perpetuates the form of useless commentary imbedded in a stereotype that lacks even a basic understanding of law enforcement problems. In fact, the cartoon, as presented, may even perpetuate the misconception held by many lay and professional people that UMass is a haven for sex, drugs and extended adolescent behavior. Ironically, in this respect, the Campus Police perform a more useful and progressive function than McGilvray himself.

McGilvray ought to take stock in these words: "I was so much older then; I'm younger now than then." In doing so, perhaps he can generate a new insight into the University community that does more than give lip service to not only our juvenile and adult criminal justice systems, but other problems that plague our society as well.

Otherwise, the "eminent" cartoonist under discussion will soon discover that his occasional pieces of graphic misrepresentations of humor will outweigh his otherwise decent efforts. He should keep in mind that he is drawing for the Collegian and the University community, and that in this case the cartoon in question inappropriately depicts the Campus Police and is offensive to us. The Collegian is not a forum for carte blanche and mindless accusations in the form of humor, but one that from time to time struggles with realities. It is our opinion that McGilvray should become aware of that fact and make an attempt to join this community in the solution of its problems, as are the Campus Police. If he and we don't, the police remain isolated and alien through no fault of their own -- but through the fault of those who find the word "pig" humorous.

McGilvray does a good job, but...

To the Editor:

Well Donald, you've done it.

I'm not usually bothered by your cartoons. In fact, I rather like most of them, and am at least momentarily amused by them.

Anyway, your cartoon of April 4th struck a sour note. Personally, I don't think the UMass Campus Police hassle anybody unduly. Most of the people I mentioned it to agreed with me in that they, the police, seem pretty mellow about most things on campus. Considering the area to cover, the number of people here, and the flagrancy of certain violations, I think the police are indeed easy to get along with.

Please, I don't advocate a police state. You usually do a good job with your cartoons. But, in the future be more charitable with your humor.

Ballou lacks raison d'etre

To The Editor:

Mr. Ballou, I am not at all surprised by your reaction to my letter concerning the 5-cent charge for the Collegian. Since you obviously lack a fundamental understanding of the* raison d'etre of college newspapers, I feel compelled to set you straight.

May I remind you that the primary purposes of a college daily like the Collegian are to provide students an opportunity to learn to be journalists, and the campus community an information service -- not to make money. If you want to turn the Collegian into a money-making proposition, then I suggest you start paying your Federal taxes on it. Obviously, the operation has failed as a training ground for future journalists; you are a case in point. Your lack of professionalism is only outdone by your inarticulate attempts at self-expression. "More nerve than an abcessed (sic) molar"? "Grad leeches"? You "hope someone will write nasty graffiti all over the Grad Research Towers"? Really, Mr. Ballou, the next time you submit a column for publication, try to leave out the childish hyperhole.

Credits at Falmouth

To The Editor:

The Omnibus Alternative Education Program in Falmouth, Mass., is looking for some very special people. Is it possible you might qualify? You need to care a lot about kids. You need to have a love of life, to know well and to be excited about at least one subject; to share with us your expertise, caring, creativity and energy. We need you to share a commitment to the continued successful development of our program.

You'll need stamina! You'll experience failures and live to learn from it. You'll have spectacular success and love it. You'll use every resource you think you have and find you have more.

You'll be involved in developing your own teacher training program, as well creating the learning program of your students. Further, you will receive the necessary credits for a year's work, plus teacher certification if you wish it. All of this, in a supportive and challenging atmosphere.

Any students wishing to accept this challenge and to spend the school year (Sept.-June) on the Cape, call the NASP office (545-0941), ask for Gretchen, and get an appointment for an interview. (April 11-12)

See you then.

OHAG elections April 10

To The Editor:

Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG) is holding elections for the positions of President and Vice-President this Wednesday, April 10. We would like to urge all members of the Orchard Hill Community to vote for LARRY ZELNER, PRESIDENT and JIM FEENEY, VICE-PRESIDENT. We personally know Larry and Jim, and feel that they can provide the effective leadership that our area government requires. We also thing that OHAG deserves the qualities that Larry and Jim have to offer. Thank you for considering this matter.

Vietnam War: forgotten not erased

To The Editor:

Many Americans have been relieved somewhat since the signing of the Paris agreement that resulted in the withdrawal of American troops and the return of prisoners from Vietnam. Attention has now been focused upon recent domestic happenings within our own Administration. I feel that some of our attention should still be on Vietnam, where about three billion dollars of taxpayers' money will be spent to encourage the continuation of a bloody war in violation of the Paris agreement.

My main concern is for the thousands of helpless children being persecuted by the corrupt Thieu government. These orphans are locked up in concentration camps and left unaided to die of disease or starvation. They need immediate and adequate financial assistance for medicine, food, and improved living conditions. Red tape also makes it almost impossible for anyone to adopt one of these neglected youngsters. This brutal treatment of such young children, many of whom were fathered by American G.I.'s, is nothing but encouraged by the United States. No? Then why is 76 per cent or more of the three billion dollars in aid used for military purposes? The other 24 per cent is scattered in several different areas, none of which aid the poor orphan whose life will be snuffed out unless something is done.

This week in the Campus Center there will be a table set up with more information, as well as letters to be signed and addressed to your congressman in support of legislation to help, not hinder, the growth of thousands of Vietnamese youngsters. We have to do it well if we're going to do it at all, so please lend your support.

Mileage, pollution not really a problem

To The Editor:

AN OPEN LETTER TO ALL GOVERNORS AND STATE LEGISLATORS:

In view of the present energy crisis, pollution, and gasoline prices, a solution has been found which we feel would help to alleviate the problem, thereby benefitting the entire American People. Subsequently, your attention to this matter is respectfully requested.

We have developed a process, DNG74, by which the average AMERICAN AUTOMOBILE CAN ATTAIN DOUBLE THE GASOLINE MILEAGE WITH ONLY HALF THE POLLUTION.

This DNG74 process in no way infringes upon, restricts, or disrupts the present Emission Control Devices required by law. Thus we are prepared to organize and perform this service immediately and inexpensively, hiring thousands of presently unemployed Americans in the process.

However, because our process is so basic, and cannot be patented, we are thereby left unprotected. As a result, no manufacturing company will mass produce the necessary parts without some sort of guarantee. Therefore, any assistance by you in procuring an exclusive state license or permit would not only be gratefully appreciated, but would also initiate an immediate response on our part to bring this all about.

Realizing the tremendous effect this solution will have in lessening the problem, we are confident the right steps will be taken by you.

Please direct all replies in care of our agent by May 1, 1974.

Yippie extension

During this era of Ruby Vine and rampant unemployment, many students are faced with a grueling predicament — Graduation. No one sane, outside of the Area Governments, wants to get their sheepskins yet. And its not that UMass is True Bliss or other Maharaj Ji induced Karmas. We are a student body whose only common quality other than apathy is PROCRASTINATION. The motto of our lost generation seems to be Why do today what You can put off till Tomorrow. But honestly who can blame us, what with the job market the way it is. Why there are UMass Graduates of the Class of Ought Nine (09) who are still walking the bistros and alleys of major cities looking for work, or a piece of bread (whichever comes first).

One of the most intriguing of all possibilities that awaits those poor souls whose end is imminent is that of Mail Order Extension Schools. These Extension Schools mock us as to the fact that we wasted four years and countless dollars pursuing a mystical vagueness that some call Education, when they say we could have easily acquired it for much less in our spare time and at home. Why, they cry, we could in the space of several measly minutes a month learn to be International Experts in such complex endeavors as Diesel Machanics, Air Conditioner Repairmen, Weedkillers, Window Washers for the Graduate Research Center Towers, and Assorted Gophers for Law Offices. Undoubtedly, many with degrees in Psych or Education will take their diplomas and 10 cents and buy enough postage to enroll in these schools. And so in five years when you need the air in your tires changed, the friendly grin from ear to ear gas station attendent will probably be your ex roommate, a former Magna Cum Laude, Phi Betta Kappa, Eat a Pizza Pie Math Major, with a Yippee Extension School Button on his greased lapel.

The most outrageous Program engineered by the Yippee Extension School (YES) is that described by a brochure that I and several and several of my friends friends received last week. It was entitled "Medical School By Mail". And it read something like this:

"Friends, remember the last time you had a nosebleed or a hemorrhoidal attack? And you couldn't get to a doctor's office in time. Well you can become a member of this fast growing field — Sickness. Remember people are getting sick all the time. The World is full of sick people. And the healthy ones are really sick too! Yes you too friend ———— can become a doctor thru the Yippee Extension School. Why in your own spare time at home you can train for Brain Surgery, Pediatrics, Orthopedics and my personal favorite Abortionist. Yes Only ten minutes a day for 82 years and you'll earn yourself a degree (provided you can swim the English Channel). Yes friends, send in your money today. Be the first on your block to become a doctor thru Yippee. Send in as much money as you can. The more money you send, the happier we'll be. And the happier that we'll be the sicker our competitors will be, and if they get sick, you can treat them and make big bucks. Yes friends, our qualified staff of expert instructors — two paramedics and a retired orderly will take you thru the ropes on your bout with medicine. They'll send you the required lessons each week. You will of course have to provide the specimen. This can range anywhere from your dog or cat to boa constrictors, lemmings, your next door neighbor or even a Barbie doll. What the Hell anatomies are all the same. So don't delay, send in your application and a check or cash today, and friend, you're on your way to a new life. signed, Warren Fudgeskull, President (YES)."

After this succinct exhortation from the boss, there are two letters written in by successful graduates of (YES) urging to send in today. I am told the first fifty applicants receive a secret decoder fan ring in the mail with the first lessn.

"Hi! My name is Joe Dildonski and I run the Do it Yourself Happy Days Abortion Service here in Tijuana Mexico. Before I enrolled in (YES), I was a down and out meat cutter at an old A&P in Pubis, Ohio making small shavings. Now thanks to (YES), I am a high priced butcher and I'm really enjoying life. WWEEEOOO!!! You will too. Just send in the loot today and look me up next time you're in town. Tijuana. Come for a divoce, stay for an abortion."

"Hi my name is Carla Klepper and I am a Neurosurgeon at the UMass Infirmary. I also do warts. Before I became a Yippee Student, I searched the country over for Railroad Salvage looking for fires, catastrophes and disaster areas to get the merchandise. Then I decided I wanted more gore so I traded in Ruby for a scalpel and I signed up for surgery and warts. While in (YES) I practiced on School of Ed Majors and Dining Commons Personnel. They never knew the difference. So if you like blood and if you have the guts, send in today."

Which reminds me of an old Mark Twain Classic: School, it gets in the way of your education. OH! THE PAIN OF IT ALL!!!

Cross country

Over intersession I had the privilege of crossing the United States in a VW squareback. While I admit that the view from a squareback may be a little distorted it is worth noting.

The first thing that strikes one about the USA is its size; driving straight with only a few breaks it took over sixty-six hours to reach Santa Barbara from Boston. Yet the differences in landscape are not as impressive as they might at first seem. One reason was the weather, it rained from Boston Saint Louis and then crossing the same area on the way back we hit a giant fog patch. More important than that however was the fact that after you've the red soil of Oklahoma or the hills of West Virginia for an hour or so they're just not interesting any more. There are of course some natural features that are extremely interesting. The desert areas of Texas, New Mexico and Arizona were so much different from New England it was almost impossible to believe that we were in the same country. The Grand Canyon in the early morning before all the tourists get there is perhaps one of the most beautiful sights in the world. The redwoods of northern California can hold a visitor in amazement for hours.

The people we met crossing the country detracted a little from the physical surrounding. I don't know if that's because they all had a bad day or there's just a general hatred of college students and tourists in this country. For instance on the way out a gas station attendant in Ohio was so worried about being ripped-off that he followed us whereever we went. In Indiana it was snowing and we offered to help push somebody's car out of a ditch. He turned out to be a serviceman returning to his base in Texas when he couldn't get the car out of the ditch we offered to call for help at the next service station. Unfortunately the owner of the next service station not only refused to let us use the phone he refused to speak to us. This custom is not unique to the mid-west however as it has happened to me in such liberal areas of the country as New London, Conn. For all I know that poor guy is still in the ditch.

Our next contact with creatures that presented themselves as homo sapiens was in Oklahoma. Okies just didn't seem too friendly towards us. On the way out and back we were waited on first and served last at two different restaurants and subject to insane remarks from cashiers, waitresses and busboys. My advice to anyone crossing that state is don't stop for anything and if possible bring a bag lunch. Even more amazing than the folks from Oklahoma were Texans. In the western part of that state we actually saw people wearing cowboy hats and talking like the movies say they do. But that simply was not the amazing part about Texans; although we only met about ten or twelve of them they were all extremely friendly. People in New Mexico and Arizona are of course few and far between. We had the unique opportunity of stopping in Truth or Consequences New Mexico (it's named after the show).

California should by right be divided into two states, the southern bizarre people and the northern folks. In the southern part of the state there are no drainage systems in cities like Lompoc where they have tremendous rain storms. People build their homes on the sides of hills that turn into mud slides every couple of years. Others construct homes right on the seashore so that high tides come up into their patios. The north resembles Boston.

I don't want to sound like a flag waver because there were many things wrong with America that could even be seen from the interstates. The rural poverty that exist in Oklahoma, Texas and New Mexico is devastating. The smog of Los Angeles is as bad as people have told you. But still the United States is worth seeing especially before you go abroad.

Richard the rude

Last weekend President Nixon asserted himself awkwardly upon the people of Paris by breaking solemn national mourning and turning the Pompidou funeral into a combination publicity campaign and summit conference.

Three times on Saturday Nixon cut through police barriers seeking the affection which he does not receive at home. He smiled and joked as he plunged through the crowd, he even asked one of the officers holding him back from the friendly people "How do you like your job?"

Nixon also had meetings with Prime Minister Wilson of Britain, President Pordgorny of the Soviet Union, Premier Tanaka of Japan and other European leaders who had come to pay homage to Pompidou. During these meetings the President stressed Atlantic cooperation and closer ties between the United States and Europe. Ironically, these are the very policies that Pompidou himself rejected.

Despite the friendliness of the crowds, the French could not help but notice Mr. Nixon's lack of manners. A high official in the French ministry put it best in a letter when he said that the President "had shamelessly substituted a publicity campaign for the mourning of an entire nation, introducing an atmosphere of loud feverishness, the discourtesy of which is equaled only by its clumsiness".

Both Le Monde and Le Figaro, popular French newspapers attacked Nixon's behavior in editorials entitled "The Nixon Festival" and the sovereign of the Western World.

The actions taken by Nixon were political. They served nothing but the wounded Nixon ego. The President only relieved himself by meeting people who were not there to heckle him or call for his impeachment. No, the French were not in the streets of Paris Saturday to bring political judgement upon Richard Nixon, they were there in mourning.

Whether Mr. Nixon realizes it or not the French are very aware of the impeachment proceedings and as French columnist Jean Francois Revel points out they feel the "impeachment of President Nixon would be felt everywhere as an irrefutable demonstration and almost supreme proof of the validity of democracy in the United States."

The President again has shown himself clumsy and inept; this time by his tasteless behavior at the funeral of a foreign dignitary. But the French were polite to Nixon and perhaps now understand some of the feelings of the American public.

Maybe they now know why we want to say au revoir to him.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed, and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

Media meet to discuss interaction of races

Black and white Spanish-American interaction in the campus media, the lack of it and the problems involved in creating access conceived as equitable by all parties will be discussed next Wednesday at a meeting between members of the campus media.

The agenda for the meeting includes the organization of the different media, the attitudes and conceptions of their staffs, the dynamics of past black and white relations and what can be expected, or created, for the future.

Also, a planned conference between the black and white campus media and black reporters and editors from national publications and broadcast media will be discussed.

According to the organizers of the Wednesday meeting the conference would bring the journalists onto campus to confer with black and white students in the media.

While the agenda and form of the conference is as yet undecided, a forum on the problems confronting blacks and whites in the campus media is probable, along with a discussion on the impact and duty of the established media in reporting Black and Third World news. Other suggestions will be discussed Wednesday.

Watch your step

Over the past year the increased popularity of shoes that elevate the wearer 3 to 7 inches off the ground has been paralleled by a dramatic increase in the number of women seeking footcare for traumatic injuries (30 per cent rise in one Chicago clinic alone). The platform, clog and wedgies fad - a revival of forties fashions - has led to a growing number of sprains, strains, and breaks in feet, ankles and legs. As more men follow a similar fashion trend, the incidence of men reporting foot accident injuries increases.

The problems of these shoe styles stem from the inherent danger in the height of the platform combined with a rigid construction which doesn't allow the foot to adapt itself to the surface below. With the foot thrown off balance, the legs and knees are forced to accomodate. This results not only in breaks and sprains but also leg pain, backache, fatigue and headache.

Other problems occur in the forefoot. The foot is often jammed into the available space in the front part of the shoe. Add to this the raised heel - which puts more strain and weight on the already traumatized forefoot - and corn, calluses, bunions, in-grown toenails and hammer toe result.

Different styles of shoes have different degrees of risk. A pair of sling back platform shoes are much safer than the same style without a strap in the back (mule). Not only does this design elevate the heel and prevent the foot from adapting to the ground below but it also lacks any support for the ankle.

Some types of clogs can also lead to problems - particularly the rigid, towering, airless styles. The feet are not allowed to function in a normal gait. Instead of the loose adaptive foot movement found in the first stages of the walking gait, the foot is confined to up and down movements only. The foot functions on the shoe and cannot adapt to the real surface below.

Clogs that are designed to fit the contours of the foot and are made of leather or of synthetics which "breathe" do not cause problems and are, in some instances, beneficial to the foot.

A word of caution for those who decide to wear platforms despite the risk: walk carefully and take your time. Most falls occur when the wearer is in a hurry and becomes careless. Running up and down stairways and curbs and across streets is asking for trouble.

'Alcohol Team' provides line

The "Alcohol Team" is providing a phone line tc give people an opportunity to discuss personal patterns of alcohol use. The contact will be totally anonymous. Someone will be available 24-hours a day at 545-0400.

The aim is to offer a channel for understanding individual needs, personal pressures and other issues that are involved with drinking and college life. Call anytime to discuss these or any hassles with drinking.

'Music by Four' at 8

MUSIC BY FOUR, a quartet of young artists featuring pianist Ursula Oppens; Hiroko Yagima, violinist; Marcus Thompson, viola, and cellist Fred Sherry, will appear in concert at UMass tomorrow evening, in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. Each member of MUSIC BY FOUR achieved critical acclaim at a very early age and each has been performing individually in engagements in London, Amsterdam, Munich, Berlin, Greece and Japan, as well as offering concerts in the leading concert halls of the United States.

Messrs. Thompson and Sherry and Ms. Oppens studied at the Juilliard School, while Ms. Yajima graduated from the famed Toho School of Music in her native Tokyo. These splendid young musicians will combine their individual artistry and talents to bring to a close the University's Fine Arts Chamber Music Series for this season.

Tickets for this event are now on sale at the Fine Arts Council's Box Office, 125 Herter Hall, and are priced at $1.50 for UMass-Amherst Students; $3.00 for others. Special group rates may be arranged by calling the Fine Arts Council Office.

Robeson series continues

Miss Elma Lewis, founder and director of the National Center for Afro-American Artists, will give the third lecture in the Paul Robeson Series tonight.

The talk, "Mr. Robeson, a Humanist and Inspiration to the Black Community," will be at 8 p.m. in School of Business Administration Room 120. It is presented by the UMass Institute for Pan-African Culture and is open to the public without charge.

Guess what? It snowed

Mother Nature caught many New Englanders by surprise Tuesday with an April snowstorm that carried more than 18 inches of snow to some areas.

"It looks like Mother Nature was busy hustling margarine, rather than keeping track of the seasons," one radio disc jockey observed after a Boston traffic report said cars were snarled along metorpolitan arteries.

Heavy snow watches were in effect most of Tuesday for the three northern New England states and travelers advisories were posted in the southern tier.

The National Weather Service said snow was expected to continue until early Wednesday morning in the north before tapering off to flurries. Rain, high winds, and sleet were predicted for southern regions.

Vermont had more than 18 inches of snow in some regions although the weather service had predicted only 9 to 12.

At the stratton Mountain ski area in southern Vermont, where 18 inches fell Tuesday, the board of directors had voted the day before to have snow-making machines installed because they weren't getting enough of the white stuff. A record for April snow was broken in Burlington, Vt.

Notes and quotes

TJ, Kaven here

T.J. and Karen, a husband and wife singing duo, will be appearing on campus this week in a series of concerts.

Sponsored by Campus Crusade for Christ, the couple have been touring the U.S. Their songs, a combination of popular and original musical compositions, are meant to offer a solution to the problems pressuring mankind today. They share the relevance and practicality of Jesus Christ in today's world.

Their concerts will be held tomorrow at 9:00 p.m. in the Cance lounge in Southwest, and on Friday at 8:00 p.m. in the Colonial lounge of the Student Union. Each of the programs is free, and all are invited to attend.

Pre-Med club

Tomorrow night at 9 p.m. in the Campus Center, rm. 174, Pre-Med students who care about how aware they are of the medical field will form a long awaited Pre-Med Club at UMass. Presently the club is in its infant stage, and can use any help offered. This first meeting will be organizational. The Pre-Med Advisory Board has been invited to attend, and the club will apply for RSO recognition.

Hopefully many events will be planned such as bringing surgeons, G.P.'s, specialists and the like to speak, showing films, taking trips to medical schools and hospitals, asking accepted Umies to talk of their med. schools and give some helpful hints, creating some sort of pre-med. reading list, trying to find summer jobs, and a whole range of happenings! So if you're interested in any field of medicine and want to meet people the UMass. Pre-Med Club is for you, and the place to be is in the C.C. tonite.

Boycott debate

'Should We Support The Farm Workers' Boycott?'' is the title of a debate set for tomorrow from 12:15 to 11:15 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

The "Yes!" position will be taken by Bernie Lougee, UMass student who is a member of the local Juan De La Cruz Boycott Committee and former New England Coordinator for the Student Mobilization Movement.

"Defending the "NO!" position will be Matt Tackeff: Daily Collegian columnist who has recently criticized the boycott committee in his columns.

The debate is one in a series of public issues programs entitled "The First Amendment," utilizing First Amendment rights of free speech and assembly. The series is sponsored by the United Christian Foundation, a Protestant ecumenical ministry at the university.

Harvey here

Dr. Stewart Harvey, a practicing veterinarian, will speak tonight at 8 p.m. in Campus Center room 917. The subject will be large animal practice. He will be presented as part of a series of speakers sponsored by the UMass Pre-Vet Club.

Dr. W. Jean Dodds, a female veterinarian from the New York State Department of Agriculture, will speak April 18 on hemolytic diseases.

Dr. Lamar Soutter, Chancellor of UMass-Worcester and Dean of the Medical School will speak May 1. Dr. Soutter is in favor of building a veterinary college on his campus in conjunction with the Medical School there.

Ghana native to speak on black men and women

A talk on "The Gap between Black Men and Women" will be given by Dr. Sibil Appiah of Boston tomorrow night at 9 p.m. in the lobby of Brett House.

Dr. Appiah has had direct experience with cultural and psychological problems between black men and women both in Africa and in this country. He has participated in psychological research studies at Harvard and Columbia on issues concerning the Black situation in America.

He has also proposed some solutions to the many problems and barriers that stand in the way of Black progress, and he will discuss these in his talk.

Dr. Appiah, who is a native of Ghana, is a former UMass graduate student in Engineering, and is currently involved in research in that field.

All members of the University community are welcome to attend the talk, which is sponsored by the Central Area Third World Center.

Memorial Lecture Series

TUESDAY, APRIL 9

Film: "From Montgomery to Memphis"
7:30 p.m. Campus Center Auditorium

The film, much of it videotape, presents the public life of Dr. Martin Luther King: his actions, philosophy, principles and followers. Montgomery to Memphis is a record of recent history, when millions of Black Americans took to the streets to proclaim their right to equality, justice and freedom. These events begin with the 1955 Montgomery bus boycott, when Dr. King was 17 years old, and they end shortly after his march in Memphis in April, 1968.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 10

Lecture: Lerone Bennett, Jr.

CE Plans night of song

Continuing Education, the University's passport to higher education for part-time students, is sponsoring an evening of free musical entertainment for all of its students, faculty, and staff, today at 5:30 p.m. in Hill's House Lobby.

"An Evening of Music and Sharing" features a picnic style supper at which there will be live folk-blues music, followed by group attendance at an open rehearsal performance of the University Symphony Orchestra.

One need only bring a brown-bag supper or some food to pass around; beverages and dessert will be provided. Families and friends are welcome. The purpose of this evening is twofold; culturally, it provides the people in CE with a chance to hear the University symphony Orchestra for free. Secondly, as non-traditional, and part-time students there often exists a real difference in the lives students lead as parents, businessmen and women, homemakers or policemen, and as students. Hence, another and perhaps most important purpose, is to provide a setting for supportive encounters amongst students and their families and between students and faculty and staff.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Parrots talk for Gemini and Virgo persons. Aries, Taurus and Capricorn individuals seem to have a difficult time when it comes to getting birds to vocalize. Leo and Sagittarius seem to inspire mynahs, parakeets and parrots to run through their vocabularies. As for Pisces persons, they generally have more luck with fish than they do with birds. Scorpio can stare a bird down, while Aquarians have birds which are stone silent or talk up a storm with little or no in between. Birds are funny but, when all is said and done, people do the most squawking.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Overall view now is most important. Look beyond the immediate—perceive potential. Another Aries and a Libra could play significant roles. It is better to finish than to attempt new projects. Gain shown through writing, reading.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): One who makes numerous promises may have nothing else to offer. Some of your hopes, wishes have to be revised. New deal is in offering. Leo, Aquarius individuals could figure prominently. Wishful thinking is your staunch adversary.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Lie low. Play waiting game. Check for legal loopholes. One in position of authority is indecisive. You do best by following through on hunch. Share knowledge. Teach and learn. Be co-operative without abandoning personal principles.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be wary where diet is concerned. You could be especially susceptible to drugs. Nourishment and proper rest become more important than usual. Gemini, Sagittarius persons are featured in key roles. Don't promise more than can be delivered.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Emotions dominate. Actions seem now to be dictated by impulse. Key is to make room for logic. Study details. Member of opposite sex whisphers sweet nothings. You will do some tearing down for purpose of rebuilding.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Contractual obligations command attention. Sense of security is highlighted. What should be readily available seems now to be elusive. Another Virgo and a Gemini individual play significant roles. Don't give up something for nothing.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Low-key approach brings most constructive results. Relative complains of "psychic" problems. Short journey may have to be postponed. Check appointments, calls and messages. Someone may be trying to tell you something in cryptic fashion.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Avoid extravagance. Young person could be making unreasonable demands. Welcome chance for change, travel and variety. Pisces, Virgo persons could be involved. Guard valuables. Steer clear of schemes which promise something for nothing.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Build on solid base. Details are more important than usual. Personal contacts bring needed information. Take initiative. Be a self-starter. You have more allies now than might be apparent on surface.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Brother, sister or other close relative may be temporarily confined to home, hospital. Keep promises and open lines of communication. Avoid petty bickering. Adhere to principles of Golden Rule. You gain recognition for past efforts.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb. 18): Some persons, who care for you, are puzzled about what to do for you. Key now is to share, to explain, to assert needs in direct, mature and creative manner. Leo could figure prominently. Start project. Cycle is moving toward peak.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your ability to know, to divine, to perceive is brought to forefront. Accent is on career, gaining entrance to areas previously restricted. Your own mark or style is more appreciated than in recent past. Plainly, your views are vindicated!

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are independent, creative and desirous of affection—more so than the average individual. September could be your most significant month of 1974. Persons born under Leo and Aquarius play key roles in your life. If single, marriage could be upcoming.

Football season starts now with "spring" practices

By JOAN PLANTE

The UMass football players had their first taste of mud bright and early Saturday morning. The adjective best fit to the occasion was wet. Cold, soggy grass is not so bad afterall, unless of course you have to roll in it. If anything were to deter me from trying out for the team, it would probably be practice.

As spring practice progresses, we will be better able to see who will be playing where, but for now I'd like to preview some of the outstanding returning and new candidates in their positions.

The opening where the big question mark lies is quarterback. Now that 6'5" Piel Pennington has graduated and motored off to the Detroit Wheels, our prime prospects are Mark Tripucka, 6', 175 from Bloomfield, N. J. and 6'3", 200 Fred Kelliher from Abington, Ma. Both are finishing their football college careers next fall and both have played behind Piel, but have seen enough action to prove their ability to Coach MacPherson.

While Fred may appear to have the edge in size, Mark could have an advantage in signal calling. During last season, Mark sat out with a muscle injury and operation, and Fred often backed up Piel when needed. Fred stepped in and won the Villanova game last fall, and Mark's last take-over victory was at the Boardwalk Bowl. It's a wide open competition and the Coach has made it clear that he doesn't want a two-quarterback team. The decision will hopefully be made by the end of spring practice. Sophomore QB Tommy Rohan probably will not play due to injury, and wide receiver Lee Harriman will be available as a reserve. In with the freshman, there are potential signal callers Peter Colton, Frank DiFilippo and Brian McNally.

The running backs are interchangeable right now, and the coaches are looking for speed in the halfbacks and power in the fullbacks. Returning candidates include Bob Wolfe, Jerry Mondalto, Richie Herman, Phil Roland, Jamie Torrance and promising freshmen Richard Jessemy, T.J. Edmunds, Bobby Peck and Keith Lang. Due to injuries last year, the ineffectiveness of our running game was painfully obvious, but this will hopefully be remedied.

At center is Bruce Pinto, with newcomer David Williamson pushing him for the position. Greg Butterfield, Dave's brother is also centering, and last year's ball handler Kevin Moran is assisting the coaches at practice.

When you think of receivers, you'll always remember Tim Berra, and hoping to replace him equally well this year are wide receivers Gary Mika, Lee Harriman, Steve Wood, promising freshman John Van Buren and tight ends Walter Parker and Billy Wolfe.

The offensive linemen, at guard and tackle include Ned Deane, John Santoro, Paul Lindmark, Roger Cooper, Kevin McClay, Brad Calnan, Tom Harris, Don Sokolnicki, and from the freshman squad Jim Driscoll and Russ Cooke.

The defense returns with an experienced veteran strength, and led by co-captains Ed McAleney and Dennis Kiernan, should prove to be awesome. Defensive linemen start off with Ed and his good friend Billy Cooke, his fraternity brothers Paul St. Onge and Mike Greaney and New England Wrestling Champion Dennis Fenton. Add to that Dennis Kiernan and his linebacking staff of Tom Bradshaw, Doug Adgurson, John Penny, Dave Butterfield, Paul Masi, Neal Desmarais (currently with the baseball team, as is Jerry Mondalto), and brothers Bill and John Toner.

The defensive backs size up pretty well with experience, and can point to Bob Parrot, Earl Brown, Joe Kulis, Mark Finnerty, Bob Levine, and freshman standout Ron Harris. John Healy will be missed but it's good to see him playing sports again, with the baseball team.

Specialist Greg Sprout rounds it out as the kicker and all in all, the team potentially looks really good. Wander down to the practice fields behind Alumni Stadium around four o'clock if you want to see the grueling work of a football team preparing for fall, 1974.

Don't look now but football is just around the corner. Dick MacPherson is now in the process of picking his 1974 varsity team which will hopefully improve its 6-5 '73 record.

UMass ruggers win 16-3 over Harvard

Rugby football, growing in popularity throughout the U.S., is showing, according to Sports Illustrated, its superiority as a contact sport.

The growing strength of UMass rugby was apparent early Saturday afternoon against Harvard Business School when in the first half of the B game, Bob Cabral finished some excellent handling by the UMass forward and backs with a diving try. The B's took a 9-0 lead into intermission.

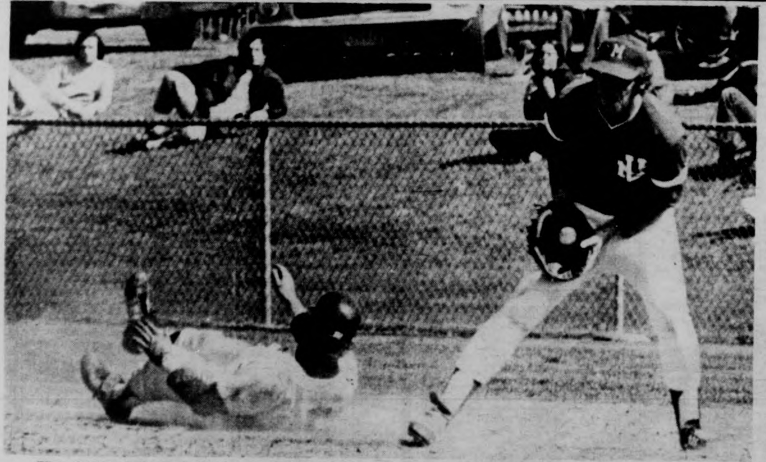
The dominance continued into the second half. Mel Butts, playing his first game at inside center made some fine breaks. After one of these breaks, Bob Eckel, at fly-half, went off the short side of the scrummage to score. The forwards were not out of the game when they managed a pushover try to Brian Skanes. This set the final score at 17-0.

UMass' first fifteen were not to be outdone as they downed Harvard Business 16-3. The early going saw an experienced Harvard side attacking. UMass did not have enough ball possession to contest the game. An offside call gave the Businessmen from Cmbridge a kick at goal; they missed. The Minutemen were not to be denied as they had much more backfield speed. From a line-out within their own 25 yd. line, UMass broke out as Walter Elsmore joined the back line from the short side. The resulting overlap allowed Jay Appleman a 70 yd. run. From the line-out, the Umass forwards hit the ruck. The UMass ball hawk, Dan Georgianna peeled from the ruck and drove the five yards for the try. Harvard came back and scored on a penalty kick. The mental errors of the UMass ruggers gave Harvard several unsuccessful attempts at goals and the half ended with UMass leading 4-3.

An invigorated UMass side took the field, began to hit and tackle fiercely. Harvard was penalized, the UMass kick was knocked on by the HBS fullback only five yards out. UMass won the hook and Brian Kain set up the quick break for Richie Lopes who waltzed in for the try. Kain converted and UMass led 10-3.

Easter weekend sees the Minutemen travelling to Cambridge to take on Harvard College. The Cantabs, as all Ivies, are particularly strong in the spring, bolstered by football players. UMass, seeking its third straight win, will have its hands full.

UMass rugby, still building, welcomes all newcomers to its practices Tu-W-Th at 4:30 on the Boyden fields.



(Staff Photo-Dan Smith)

The UMass baseball team, shown in action against Boston College last Sunday, had its game snowed out yesterday against AIC in Springfield. The Minutemen will be back in action Monday afternoon against Northeastern in Boston when they play a doubleheader.

Bruins could face difficult series with Maple Leafs

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Bruins, virtually unbeatable at home while compiling the best record during the 1973-74 National Hockey League season, are favored to get off to a fast start Wednesday night in their playoff opener with the Toronto Maple Leafs.

Despite their runaway in the NHL East, the Bruins are not taking the pesky Leafs lightly in the best-of-seven quarter-final series.

"There is no such thing as an easy series any more," warned league scoring champion Phil Esposito. "All play-off series are tough."

Under Coach Red Kelly Toronto finished fourth, a whopping 27 points behind Boston. However, the Leafs gave the Bruins trouble during the regular campaign.

Boston won four of six meetings, but managed to out score the Leafs just 22-21, with the last goal put into an empty net in a 6-4 victory Sunday night.

"They're the favorites and they should be," Kelley said. "However, our players won't scare."

In Boston, the Bruins figure to have a big edge. They had a 33-4-2 regular season record at the Garden, while on the road they were 19-13-7. They rallied to defeat Toronto in the season finale and finish with 113 points, one more than Philadelphia in the West Division. That means Boston will have home ice advantage in all playoff series.

Kelly and the Leafs, however, have more to think about than Boston ice. The Bruins scored 349 goals while allowing just 221 in 78 games. By comparison, Toronto scored 274 goals and gave up 230.

Four Boston players captured the first four places in the NHL scoring race. Esposito won his fourth consecutive title and fifth and sixth years with 68 goals and 77 assists for 145 points.

Defenseman Bobby Orr was second with 32 goals and 90 assists for 122 points. Then came Esposito's linemates, Ken Hodge with 50 goals and 55 assists for 105 points and Wayne Cashman with 30 goals and 59 assists for 89 points.

"We're going to have to contain the Esposito line and Orr," Kelly said.

Darryl Sittler was Toronto's top scorer with 38 goals and 46 assists for 84 points. Gilles Gilbert will start in goal for Boston backed up by Ross Brooks. Gilbert had a 2.95 goals against average in 54 games and Brooks, a 2.36 mark in 21 appearances this season.

Kelly has rotated three goalies most of the season and all three are ready. Doug Favell had a 2.71 average in 32 games and appears to be the likely starter. Dunc Wilson had a 2.89 mark in 24 games and former Boston favorite Eddie Johnston compiled a 3.09 average in 26 appearances.

The second game will be played in Boston Thursday night before the series moves to Toronto for two games during the weekend.

Major League Baseball

Twins - White Sox

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Rod Carew singled twice, stole two bases and scored two runs Tuesday to lead the Minnesota Twins past the Chicago White Sox 3-1 in an American League baseball game.

Carew built Minnesota runs in each of the first two innings and Larry Hisle hit his first home run of the season to lead off the sixth inning.

Carew singled his first two trips to the plate and stole second each time. He scored his first run on a sacrifice fly by Harmon Killebrew and his second on a two-out double by Bob Darwin.

Bert Blyleven, 1-0, combined with Tom Burgmeier and Bill Campbell to blank the White Sox and hand Wilbur Wood his second loss in two starts this season.

Yanks - Tigers

DETROIT (AP) - Lou Piniella singled home two runs in the first inning Tuesday to help the New York Yankees defeat former manager Ralph Houk and the Detroit Tigers 3-0 in an American League baseball game.

Houk resigned as New York's manager after last season to join the Tigers.

It was the Yanks' fourth consecutive victory, marking the first season since 1945 they have won the opening four games.

Roy White led off against Mickey Lolich, 0-2, with a walk. Thurman Munson singled two outs later, and when Detroit left fielder Willie Horton fumbled the hit, White took third and Munson moved to second. Then Piniella delivered his single to left-center field.

White's double and Elliott Maddox' single in the seventh inning accounted for the Yankees' other run.

Phils - Cubs

CHICAGO (AP) - Bill Bonham pitched a four-hitter and the Chicago Cubs took advantage of four Philadelphia errors to score a 2-0 National League baseball victory over the Phillies in the Cub's home season opener Tuesday.

Bonham struck out nine and held the Phils hitless until opposing pitcher Ron Schueler's one-out scratch single in the sixth.

Schueler's bouncer to Bill Madlock resulted in a close play at first. The Phils pitcher was credited with a hit despite a poor throw by Madlock.

Bonham was touched for a clean single to left by Bill Robinson in the eighth and two other hits in the ninth

Win...or else

The "Win At All Costs" philosophy is okay when applied to life or death struggles with three-headed aliens.

It's also acceptable in the case of professional athletes.

But if you're just a kid, the only philosophy should be, "Have Fun No Matter What".

Unfortunately, adults who think that the earlier a person is exposed to pressure, the better, have turned fun at the time of childhood into Nuremburg at the time of their trials.

For years Little League has been famous for the fool-hardiness of the people who run it. Managers, who don't know a suicide squeeze from a suicide, make like Connie Mack by senselessly bickering with volunteer umpires, playing only the top performers, and in some cases even instituting curfews.

There is even a world Little League tournament held in Williamsport, Pennsylvania each year. Imagine what the pressure of playing for a world title does to a twelve-year-old.

It must do something to someone, or why would the winners of last year's tourney have been investigated for vestiges of foul play? (Seems the team utterly destroyed every other club it played on the way to the crown and officials speculated that some of the players may not have been legit.)

And now, the organization won't let girls play on the teams. In New Jersey, the Little League announced that its 150,000 boys would not throw one ball in anger until the courts okayed their discriminatory policy.

A main excuse for the segregation is that fragile females stand a great danger of being badly hurt in such a rough sport as baseball.

Perhaps L.L. officials haven't read that studies show girls of eleven--average Little League age--are bigger than the boys.

They surely haven't read Charlie Brown, where the exploits of such female ballplayers as Lucy (CF) and Peppermint Patty (C) are depicted as commonplace.

The comic strip shows kids having fun even while losing (gadzooks!) which is not the case with the Little League. It's the other way around.

Another American institution run by the parents for (?) the children is minibike racing. Girls are allowed to compete here, but the big question is: "Why would they want to?"

With 10,000 youths already a part of this new pastime, mini-cycle racing may someday rival L.L. for the number of unhappy graduates from its ranks.

But adults think it's a great sport. What is more exciting than a two-and-a-half-year-old speeding along at 45 m.p.h. when his engine explodes? (Maybe next time Dad won't fool around with the pistons so much.)

And what's the 450 dollars Dad dishes out (200 for the bike, 250 for the sppcial crash protection gear) compared to all the enjoyment Mom gets watching little Johnny hit 65 down the straightaway in the senior division race? (Nevermind the overwrought father hitting Johnny with a wrench for only finishing third, despite being scared out of his banana.)

In fact, parents will do just about anything to give their offspring a fair chance at winning. Keep your football playing boy back an extra year in eighth-grade -- he'll be socially and, oh yeah, physically more mature for high school.

Show little Mortimer how to weigh down his soap box racer with graphite (illegal) so it'll go faster. Why, he might even win the national derby with it then. And winning, that's what life's all about, isn't it?

Heck, you never know when you'll come up against a three-headed alien, do you?

Bruins ink Vadnais

BOSTON (AP) Defenseman Carol Vadnais has signed a new three-year contract with the National Hockey League Boston Bruins.

Vadnais, 28, had the best year of seven in the NHL with the Bruins this past season. He scored 16 goals and had 43 assists for 59 points while playing in all 78 games.

In making the announcement; team managing director Harry Sinden said "Vadnais is an outstanding defenseman. His play this year was tremendous and one of the major reasons the Bruins won the Prince of Wales Trophy as champions of the East Division."

Vadnais said he is very happy with the contract, details of which were not released. "The NHL is the league in which I want to play and the Bruins, the team I want to play for," he said.

The Bruins acquired Vadnais in February, 1972, in a trade with the California Golden Seals.

Track meet with Holy Cross and Brown hinges on weather

By SCOTT HAYES

Today's weather will be a factor in deciding whether or not the track team plays host to Holy Cross and Brown at 1:00 p.m. as scheduled. Snow and wet conditions may force postponement of the meet until Thursday, but that could cause problems for the trackmen. With a tri-meet scheduled for Saturday in Springfield, the team would have only one day of rest between meets.

Even if the skies clear by afternoon and the "all-weather" track is ready, conditions will most likely be sloppy and uncomfortable for the athletes.

Whenever the meet does take place, it's sure to be another of those "down to the wire" affairs. The Minutemen lost to BC on the last event and won the Northeastern meet by taking first, second and fourth in the two-mile, the next-to-last event.

Both Brown and Holy Cross have the edge when it comes to individual excellence, but UMass hopes that depth can win the meet. Coach Ken O'Brien and his charges have been depending on depth to win, and so far, it has worked half the time.

Most of the team will be looking for individual improvement and there will be plenty of competition to spur the tracksters on to personal bests.

Marshall Pendleton and his group of sprinters will be facing a stiff test, provided by Brown's top sprinters. Brown boasts the talents of Dave Meyer, a freshman who ran 9.5 in the dash in high school. Jim Rudasill (9.6) and Hubert Morgan (9.7) pose the threat of a sweep in the 100.

Trevor Worell, last year's New England 440 champion, and John Escallier give Brown two of the top five quarter-milers in New England. Charlie McKnight leads a group of strong hurdlers who will have to conted with the likes of Curt Stegerwald and Jim Hennessy.

Brown is not extremely strong in the mile or the two-mile, and only Joe Burnow (1:54; in the 880 is a top-notch performer. Mark Ferenge, a 14' pole vaulter, is a solid competitor, but Brown is also lacking in the jumping events.

Holy Cross will be looking for Dick Audette, a third place finisher in the New England indoor 880, to pick up some points. The Saints also have Neil Coleman, a two-miler, but he should be the only threat to the distance men.

Tough competition will be the name of the game in the hammer throw. Brown's Phil Bartlett was second in the New Englands last year, and has thrown 200'. Dave Morrison of Holy Cross has tossed 196', and hopes to challenge Bartlett for first place.

There will be a number of switches in the UMass lineup. Coahc O'Brien knows enough not to break up a good thing, and will keep the swift duo of Randy Thomas and Bill Gillin together, this time in the mile.

Vets lead Celts win

BOSTON (AP) — Veterans Dave Cowens, John Havlicek and Jo Jo White scored 13 of Boston's 15 points in the last five minutes Tuesday night to lift the Celtics to a 100-97 victory over the Buffalo Braves and take a 3-2 lead in their best-of-seven National Basketball Association playoff series.

The Braves led, 89-85 with 5 minutes remaining in a sloppy game when the Celtics' veteran trio took charge.

Cowens put in two baskets but DiGregorio and McAdoo answered for Buffalo. White and Havlicek scored two quick buckets and then two more after a pair of McAdoo free-throws for a 97-95 lead.

A Havlicek free throw made it 98-95, with six seconds left, and Buffalo couldn't catch up.

Havlicek had 25 points, White, 20, and Cowens, 19, for Boston. Randy Smith tallied 25 and Jim McMillian had 18 for the Braves.

Gorillas aim for first win travel to Wesleyan today

by MIKE ELLIOTT

Garber's Gorillas, 0-2 thus far this season, will be looking for their first win of the season when they face Wesleyan of Connecticut in an away game starting at 3 p.m., today.

The Gorillas were beaten in their first two games by Hofstra and Cortland State. However, Wesleyan was beaten by UMass last year by a score of 22-7 in a game at UMass. This year though, Wesleyan beat Middlebury College, 5-4 in overtime. However, head coach Dick Garber said, "I don't believe in making comparative scores against teams. I can remember when we played UConn a few years ago, we were supposed to win (according to comparative scores) by about 20-2, but we ended up winning by only one goal."

Although UMass lost their first two games to top-ranked teams, they cannot afford to take Wesleyan lightly. Said Coach Garber. "I tell my players that they can not afford to take any team lightly. We try to put those losses in the past. We have a long schedule of 14 games and we can make up for them in other games. We have to play each game as it comes and we must play each one as an important game. UMass is the big game on the schedules of many of the teams we play and everyone of them would love to upset us."

The Gorillas must play a consistent all-around game. They must pass, run, and shoot well. The midfielders must cut and move around well - something they have not done consistently in the past two games. They have played great, off and on but they have to play sixty minutes of solid lacrosse.

UMass is in good shape after Saturday's game, except for defenseman, Billy Blaustein, who injured his ankle when he tripped over his own net while chasing a Cortland attackman. Blaustein did not practice on Monday and it is not known whether he will play today.

LACROSSE NOTES - In the latest major college lacrosse poll UMass was ranked tenth in the nation. Hofstra was ranked eighth, while Brown was placed ninth. The top three teams were Maryland, Virginia, and Johns Hopkins, respectively..UMass will play the University of Connecticut on Saturday, April 13th.

Credit is due

There's been enough said about why the UMass womens' gymnastics team placed third in the Nationals last weekend. You've heard about the subpar judging, bad organization, and the draw which hurt UMass more than anybody else.

UMass was as sharp as a razor in the Easterns. They hit their routines with computer-like accuracy, and machinegun rapidity. But the fact of the matter is that the team probably peaked at the Easterns and lost something in the Nationals. They just weren't as good. But another team was: Southern Illinois University and to SIU the credit is due.

SIU was the well-oiled machine which competed on the floor like the Miami Dolphins have competed for the past two years on the gridiron.

In a way SIU's performance was strange. Before the meet Coach Herb Vogel had said that SIU would "just be happy to get through all the events," since two of its key performers, Stephanie Stromer (strained back) and Dianne Grayson (broken leg) were recovering from injuries.

But on Friday afternoon, Stromer and Grayson shrugged off their pains in exceptional fashion as they turned in all-around scores of 36.15 and 35.40 respectively, worth second and tenth places in the all-around competition. And when you combine those two socres with Sandi Gross' 35.70 all-around score, worth sixth place, you can see how solidly SIU performed. The other two SIU competitors, Pat Hanlon and Ginger Temple, also went all-around and though they didn't perform as well as the other three, they came through when the SIU "big three" faltered.

After the victory, Vogel was as calm and expressionless as he'd been before the meet started. In describing his team's victory he said, "we knew that if we could do in the meet what we'd be doing in practise we'd be close to the top."

The SIU coach was surprised that UMass did not pose as great a threat as he'd expected. Before the meet Vogel had described UMass as being "even Better" than they were in 1973 when they won the Nationals.

"I honestly expected that UMass would do a better job than they did," he said after the meet. "When you're in the first group it is an obvious disadvantage," he said, in describing the effects of UMass having competed first, but he added, "if UMass had hit their routines it wouldn't have made that much of a difference, but when you're in the first group but don't hit it's disastrous."

"As the meet goes on the scores usually go up as the judges get tired, said Vogel, "but it's human error and nothing more."

It is anyone's guess what would have happened if Coach Virginia Evans' UMass team had been in the third group instead of the first, but ifs are only as reliable as dreams or fantasies. SIU was solid and there was no doubt about that.

Two of UMass' four graduating seniors are Anne Vexler and Margie Combs. Both of them failed to place in the Saturday finals, Anne on beam and Margie on floor. But their routines were the most difficult of those performed. Margie tried a double-twisting sommersault on floor, landed it but fell when she lost her balance. It was the first time that such a move had ever been tried in the Nationals.

Anne performed with her usual degree of difficulty on beam; in other words, an almost impossible one. Only two lapses in concentration prevented her from walking away with first-place in the event. "Ms. Vex" used several aerial walkovers plus four scissor kicks in which she was three or four feet off the beam and then landed, keeping her balance every time.

Vex and "Co" went out in the style of champions; not content with doing "safe" routines which would have earned them 9.0's, they tried routines with the highest degree of difficulty looking for the rare 9.5's. They didn't succeed, but for them credit is due. Both of them along with seniors Betsy East and Heidi Armstrong will be remembered for having raised UMass gymnastics to the level of a national power from that of a nobody. All four shall be sorely missed.

Earle Barroll

Cause for concern

Realistically, it's not all that bad to lose to a Hofstra or a Cortland State when you figure the former is eighth ranked in the country, the later defending small college champ. Yet, in the UMass lacrosse camp there is cause for some minor concerns.

A team that rampaged itself through a strenuous pre-season with boss wins over 12th-ranked Princeton, 13th-ranked Army and Nassau Community College and prompted the coach of second ranked Virginia to call head coach Dick Garber and tell him "I hear you have quite the team" finds itself plagued by the heart of its attack — execution.

"The thing that's bad about these two losses," said Garber after a team skull session on Monday, "is that we played bad, and the guys know it. Both games were our worst performances technically so far this season and it really frustrates you when you play half baked and still come that close. If we had played well and lost I would have felt the other two were excellent teams."

"If there are any problems," offered tri-captain and goalie John Rutledge, " they center around execution. I can guarantee you that everyone on the team wants to win. Maybe they're pressing too hard in the big games and this affects their play."

The team meeting in reference was not of the Al McGuire - NCAA - get - your - clothes - on - and - get - the - hell - out - of - here - if - you're - not - going - to - play variety.

"No one was called an s.o.b. or the like," related Garber. "It was strictly open forum and the thing that pleased me the most is that everyone spoke up honestly. If they felt they deserved more time they said it. Basically, what we talked about was possible personnel changes and getting the right people playing together."

"Infinitesimal" is the value Garber places on his team's mistakes. "I don't think it was the fact that we were playing a Hofstra or a Cortland that made us do some of the things we did. Maybe some of the guys did tighten up (as he grated an invisible stick). If we played the way we did in preseason we would have won both games."

And so we have exhibit A: a 7-6 loss to Hofstra in which Garber prior to game time predicts a three goal victory, the margin via three fast break goals. What happens? "We get three fast breaks after falling back 1-0," said Garber. "One shot hits the goalie in the face, the other two passes are dropped."

Against Cortland State the trench warfare is deadlocked at nine after 78 minutes when Jud Smith of State isolates one-on-one, gets a step, no UMass backup slides into position, Rutledge has little if no chance. Voila, goodnight Irene, 10-9. "If there was a backup he never would have got the shot off," explained O.J. "It was the third one-on-one they had on me in the sudden deaths. It was bound to happen after we couldn't get up their end."

At any rate, through all the apparent muck, there is still NCAA vividly in sight. The Gorillas were still no worse than tenth in the country in this week's poll. And the way it stands now the fight for the seventh and eighth slots, the final two NCAA berths, will come down to Rutgers (7th), Hofstra, Brown (9th) and UMass.

"We have to win the rest," said tri-captain Rich Lally. "The good thing about it is we still have to play Brown and if we beat them that's the New England title and that might give us the berth." And it can't hurt that Rutgers and Hofstra likewise square off in the immediate future.

But the idea of to-have-to-win is in complete contrast to Garber's iconoclastic view of sports. "I try to play the winning aspect down," he said. "They get enough of it from nine up when you're told you're a bum if you don't win. The kids are always under pressure and that's why I try to low key it."

"He cares more about the individual," amplified Rutledge, "than his own personal success. He's concerned with what playing lacrosse at UMass in 1974 can do for you as a person. You hear the cliche about building character through sports. Well, you don't get that playing big time sports. Under Dick Garber you do."

Ultimately this theory has produced almost 150 wins for Garber which places him in an elite group in collegiate lacrosse. He tells his players that if each one tries to his fullest capacity, combined the wins will come.

"I've said it many times," he demands, "that of all the teams I've had (and he's had some supers) this one has the most talent by far. We realize that we have to win, but we'll still continue with our philosophy. We just have too much talent to not be the team we're looked at across the country."

And when Virginia (as in ACC) tells you you're smooth...you're smooth.

Four to vie for senate presidency

By MIKE HENAULT
MDC Staff

Candidates for the Student Senate President were officially announced last night. The reaction was one of anticipated silence. Student Senate speaker David Booker read the names. They were Rick Savini, Chairperson of Rents and Fees, Larry Gendron, Treasurer of the Commuters Assembly, Kelly Erwin, of the Young Socialist Alliance and Henry Ragin, a former presidential candidate. The above will take effect next year. It will provide for the popular election of the Student Government President. The ill prepared motion which could have gone into practice this year was, according to its sponsor Sen. Spriggs, in the "tradition of Jeffersonian Democracy." Under the present system which will be effective for the April 22 Convention, an electoral form of representation is employed. The elector college has ninety-six votes in all. Of those, forty-eight (or half) come from the Senate and the other half from the rest of student government at the University (nine from southwest, nine from the commuters' assembly, and six each from four will be placed in nomination at the April 22 Presidential Convention.

The Senate passed an amendment to the SGA constitution which central, northeast, Orchard Hill, sylvan and the Greek council).

Candidates for Student Speaker also announced themselves at last night's senate meeting. They were Peter Birnbaum, Cindy MaGrath, Ed Faria and Tony Willig. The winner of that contest will succeed present speaker Booker.

Arthur Stroll, a member of the Campus Board of Governors, put forward an idea to have the state take over funding of the Campus Center.

He told the senate that some of his group would be collecting signatures in the Campus Center in the near future. Stroll stated his intention of personally delivering the petitions to state legislators. The Senate will consider costs.

In a revealing piece of information the Senate found it will have to cut all RSO groups budgets by 2 per cent. The reason for this move is that the Student Activities Tax was miscounted. Evidently the miscalculation will cost student organizations $12,000.

In other action's Area government head Tim O'Brien lamented the deep differences between the Senate and the Area governments. Andy Pyenson, speaking in the same vein, requested that more use of the President's Advisory Council might bridge the gap. Pyenson a former area government head, referred to part of the problem of communications which they say was caused by present President Nick Apostola's absence from participation on the advisory board. The disgust of the local government heads lead to last week's abortive impeachment attempt of Apostola.

Meir resigns

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Premier Golda Meir of Israel announced her resignation yesterday in the midst of a domestic political dispute and a month-long military conflict with Syria on the Golan Heights.

"This time my decision is irrevocable," leaders of her Labor party quoted the 75-year-old leader as saying at a closed meeting in Jerusalem. "I have reached the end of the road..."

They said she planned to submit her resignation formally at a Cabinet meeting today.

That move would mean the collapse of Israel's government that took office only last month, and new general elections. However, they probably would not be organized for several months.

The party leaders said Mrs. Meir had agreed to stay on as head of a caretaker Cabinet until the elections are held.

The major source of friction within the government since the war has been who to blame for Israel's being poorly prepared for the October Arab attack.

Both Mrs. Meir and Defense Minister Moshe Dayan threatened not to take part in the recently formed government, but after

Sarge claims Daniel's rally more ceremony than issue

By MIKE KNEELAND
MDC Staff

A spokesman for Governor Sargent told the Collegian yesterday that Russell Daniels' supporters may have been more concerned with ceremony than issues at the State House Tuesday.

Steve Teichner, special assistant to Sargent, said the Governor wants to "get to the nitty-gritty of the issue rather than getting hung-up on ceremony."

The group of 30 supporters had hoped for an interview with Sargent but they were not granted one.

"I want the group to feel sure that the Governor is fully cognizant of way the group came, why they were there," Teichner said.

Teichner said the Governor wants the group to meet with Secretary of Health Services Peter Goldmark to discuss the issue and possibly make recommendations to the governor.

He said the group not only refused to meet with Goldmark, but also refused to meet with two members of Sargent's staff.

Referring to the group's insistance that they meet with the governor himself, Teichner said, "Ceremony is nice...but it doesn't solve the issue."

Teichner said he understands why the students may have felt fairly frustrated Tuesday, but said the group was "unwilling to accept our feeling to move on this issue."

Teichner told Alto Daniels, brother of the convicted murderer and a UMass senior, that Sargent had no power to investigate the Springfield police.

Senator John Olver, D-Amherst, called the case a "clear miscarriage of justice" and said the special Legislative Commission on Belchertown Hospital and the Monson State School, which he heads, might investigate it if Sargent did nothing.

Russell Daniels is now serving a life sentence in Norfolk State Prison for last year's murder of an 89-year old woman.

His supporters say he was convicted solely on a confession he could not even read and that police interviewed no one else in the case.

Black journalist, author and historian Lerone Bennett, Jr. said last night white liberals have twisted the meaning of slain civil rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. by describing him as non-violent.

The senior editor of Ebony, a black monthly mass-circulation picture magazine, also said blacks in the U.S. must insist on the right to define for themselves the meaning of their mass movements.

The associate and biographer of the late Dr. King was speaking as part of events on campus this week "to commemorate the life and work" of the sixties black leader," who died April 4, 1968.

"If the idea's he articulated do not have meaning today it is not because of the militants; it is because white man — the liberal idealists — have failed to make the radical commitment that is necessary for change in society," Bennett said to a small but spellbound audience at UMass.

Bennett, the author of "Manner of Man" a biography of King, and "Before the Mayflower" a history of black Americans since 1619, said the southern activist preacher was moving towards "total non-violent resistance" to the government at the time of his death.

"I think the one mistake that King made was in not calling for total non-violent revolution in America," said Bennett, adding, "he never called for non-payment of taxes, and non-violent shut-down of the major cities in America.

"There is evidence that he was moving in that direction at the time of his death," he said.

He said blacks who want to see radical change in society to eliminate "racism, militarism, and unbridled capitalism" that King opposed should not be concerned with whether the process of change is non-violent or violent.

He said they should be committed to the goal of "total liberation by any means necessary."

"Blacks must make the movements for themselves and make sure that we are ready to fill the leader's role when we are called on," he said.

Lerone Bennett spoke on the meaning of Martin Luther King and how his image and memory relate to the Black struggle. The event took place at 8 p.m. last night in the Student Union Ballroom.

The occasion was the 3rd, annual Martin Luther King lecture symposium. Bennett was a guest of the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Bennett, a slight, well dressed and extremely well spoken Black man is the senior editor of Ebony Magazine. He is also the author of several books and articles, most of which deal with the Black experience in the Americas.

He is best known for his book, "Before the Mayflower." This book has been acclaimed by critics as one of the most informative accounts of Black history ever written.

He said we should remember King for a variety of reasons. He said, "The dead, as our African fathers knew also live and speak and teach." He added, "We should also remember him because he led the largest Black mass movement in the history of this country. He was the first Black leader to lead Black people into battle over a selected piece of ground. Bennett feels that we should not lose this memory or allow our progeny to forget this great man.

Bennett stated that he believed that King was for neither violence or non-violence but that he was about the business of liberation "by any means necessary."

He said, "Those who like to portray King as an advocate of non-violence are those who would like to believe that the sins America committed against Black people don't have to be paid for."

Bennett noted that many Black folks tend to put King down because so many whites build him up. He explained that this is a political error of the first magnitude because, "King came from the bone and soil of the Black people and represented that spirit of manliness that enabled us to survive in this hostile land.

He closed saying, "We should begin to translate King's ideas into action, because, "The storm clouds that King saw are still moving our way. The sound of distant thunder still reverberates in our dreams."

The Naids show off their aquatic versatility.

Naids Aquatic Club performs variety

The Naiads Aquatic Art Club presented the first of four nightly performances last evening at the WOPE pool. The hour and a half program included compositions of a wide variety of themes ranging from the humorous atmosphere of "Seaside Insanity", complete with sea monster, to the feminist statement of "Woman's Conflict", choreographed by Denise Cantin.

The music for the show included contemporary artists such as Neil Diamond, Rick Wakeman, and Joan Baez as well as classical selections by Rachmaninoff, Mussorsky, and Tchaikovsky. Pat Griffin, advisor to the club, said "This mixture of musical tastes establishes a pleasing variety of accompaniment for the nine compositions in the show."

All compositions are choreographed and performed by members of the club. "Clowns, Everyone" by Marise Bilodeau explores the frivolity of clowns and compares their use of masks and surface relationships to real life encounters. "O By The By" written by Janet Robinson and Marty Livingston combines an e.e. cummings poem and Balinese music to develop a thoughtful composition about idealism.

Sue Partridge provides a lighthearted sympathetic glimpse of Dracula in "Dracula-A Piercing Story", while "Dumbo" by Ellen Matthews adapts the traditional children's story to the water.

"The Storm" by Karen Atran is complete with wind and rain interacting in interesting floating and swimming patterns. A male-female duet, "Two Faces" by club president, Michele Theberge, explores the artificial nature of masculine and feminine social roles. The entire club participates in a two part finale contrasting the attitudes and beliefs of the 1950's with those of the 60's and 70's.

With its variety of theme and music, the Naiad '74 Spring performance promises an evening of entertainment for young and old. The show continues tonight, Friday, and Saturday at 8:00 p.m. in the WOPE pool.

Tickets are on sale today and Friday at the WOPE building and on the Campus Center. They will also be sold at the door each night. Tickets are $.50 for students with an I.D. and are $1.50 for all others.

Pre-med major requirements raised to limit applicants

By DONNA A. DIODATI
MDC Staff

"We've tried to make the Pre-Med major more difficult to attain because fewer people are being accepted to medical schools. This way, our students will have a good chance to get in," says Benjamin C. Crooker, Chairman of the Pre-Medical Advisory Committee at UMass.

Good chance or not, the fact is that, of every three students who apply to professional schools in medicine, only one will be accepted. This is the national average. And, according to Crooker, it is also the average at UMass.

Crooker, an astronomy and physics professor who has held the unsalaried chairmanship for five years, says that there are 83 students majoring in Pre-Med. In the Class of 1974, 30 per cent are majors, while the rest of the students are affiliates. So far this year, 170 juniors and 130 sophomores have expressed interest in the department.

Last year, of those students (both Pre-Med and other majors) who applied to medical, dental, or veterinary schools, 33 per cent were accepted. The Class of 1972 had a 35 per cent success rate; the Class of 1971, 40 per cent.

Of those accepted to medical schools so far this year, all but one have a cumulative average of 3.6 or more.

According to Crooker, the Association of American Medical Colleges, in its 1968-71 study, considered the UMass Pre-Medical Department to be "about average."

Asked what changes are being made to improve and update the department, Crooker said:

"Because of the tendency of medical schools to take high cums, we bring this to the student's attention...The student now takes 15 credits in junior-senior level courses. The extra courses can be electives, such as social and behavioral sciences...

"In addition, the Committee recently voted to discontinue sophomore interviews. This is an attempt to make the Committee work load more manageable."

The Pre-Medical Advisory Committee consists of 10 members, who serve voluntarily. Three of them are about to resign. Due to the increased number of Pre-Med students, a request for five new Committee members will be submitted to Dean of Natural Science and Mathematics Mac V. Edds, Jr., who is responsible for Committee appointments.

Also in response to the ever-increasing work load of the Committee, Dean Edds has proposed that a Pre-Med administrative dean be added to the College of Arts and Sciences Information and Academic Counseling (CASIAC) staff.

Mr. Crooker, when asked to explain what criteria medical schools use in their admissions procedures, said "they tend to look at averages: high academic standards, reasonably good scores on the MCAT (Medical College Admissions Test)...health-oriented experience...indication of serious interest in the profession... research experience...special problems and senior Honors programs in scientific areas..."

Recently there has been much debate about the possibility of a "doctor surplus" in the near future. Chairman Crooker thinks that such a situation is unlikely. "...Rural and inner city areas are still short of doctors...Whether there's a surplus depends on their distribution and fields of work. I frankly don't believe we're going to have a surplus."

Are more women and minority group members pursuing medical careers? On the local level, Crooker cited statistics that indicate only two minority students have applied to medical schools from UMass in the last few years. One was not accepted; the other is currently applying. Crooker added that "some minority students have started in the Pre-Med program recently."

Fourteen of last year's 89 applicants to medical schools were women. While not quoting statistics on their acceptance rate, Crooker did say that "they get accepted as men do...A qualified woman is accepted...I think there's a certain reserve feeling that they've got to give women certain consideration."

As an example, he pointed to the UMass Medical School in Worcester where the first class (1970) consisted of 16 students - all men. In 1972, the ratio was 16 men to 9 women. This is considerably higher than the 15 per cent Crooker says women usually comprise in medical schools.

The Committee Chairman added that the formal quota policy for admitting a certain percentage of minority students and women to medical schools is the exception rather than the rule, but that "all schools are trying in their own ways to equalize the situation."

Perhaps the most telling measure of an academic department's success is how the students within it feel about it. Of the Pre-Med majors queried, none would allow his name to appear. The other two requested anonymity due to their need for favorable medical school recommendations from the Pre-Med Advisory Committee.

"...If you don't have a 3.7, Crooker doesn't pay attention to you...They tell kids to lock themselves in their rooms, get a 3.9, and then they'll get in to medical school. When the students don't get in, they end up at Mental Health freaking out..." was one Pre-Med student's view.

He went on to say that, "Being from UMass is not going to be an aid in applying to medical schools....For example, a few years ago a UMass graduate dropped out of Yale Medical School and now they think twice before admitting anyone from here...And I've heard that Amherst College has a 93 per cent acceptance rate to medical schools..."

A woman in the department said: "Crooker gives me the impression he's not really interested in getting you into medical school. He never has a general meeting for students in the department...He should be replaced and his job should be made a full-time, salaried position.

"They (the Committee members) seem to believe that a woman can't be married and a doctor. Other women and I are asked questions they'd never ask a man. Questions like "How would you correlate having children and being a doctor?" They're old-fashioned. It's not right and it is resented, but it's expected."

A junior, who asked that his name not be used out of fear of retribution, commented: "Last year I went to Mr. Crooker and expressed my interest in the Pre-Med program. He knew absulutely nothing about my grades or background but, while staring out the window, he went on and on with reasons why I should forget medical school...I'm 25 years old, but if I'd been 18, that might have discouraged me forever."

Testing: 1, 2, 3

By KAREN CMAR
MDC Staff

Approximately every week during the semester, a group of people meet on the third floor of Worcester Dining Commons to test new food items that may eventually become part of the regular dining commons menu. The taste testing board is open to any student who wishes to attend.

The board tests all convenience items (prepared foods) before they are purchased for the dining commons. Seventy-five to eighty per cent of the foods are not approved.

The taste testing is designed to help the dining commons develop a menu which is better tasting and less expensive. There are also food carts that are circulated at the dining commons to test new recipes. Due to lack of interest the taste testing may have to be discontinued and the food carts used instead.

Student self-insurance in the works

By BILLY NEMITZ
MDC Staff

A Student Self-Insurance plan and a Health Maintenance Organization are the major issues presently being considered by the Student Advisory Board of University Health Services.

In a meeting yesterday, the Board voted to send two University Health Insurance (UHI) plans up for bid to interested insurance companies.

The first plan in many ways resembles the present UHI policy. However, a number of adaptions have been incorporated into the plan, among them an excess clause, which states that if a student is a beneficiary of another insurance plan, that plan must provide primary coverage, with the UHI plan making up the difference, if any.

Another modification of the present plan would include coverage of all "usual and customary" fees, including surgical fees, for example.

The second plan, a Student Self-Insurance proposal, essentially would mean that Health Services, in conjunction with the Advisory Board, would negotiate contracts with medical practitioners and institutions in the area, providing set fees for hospital and medical services. As a result, the student would be covered for all medical services.

A contract with the most desirable insurance agency would be negotiated to cover such things as various forms of consulting and promotional needs.

The Self-Insurance plan met with mixed opinions at the Board meeting yesterday, due largely to the fact that students would be "forced" to remain in the Amherst area if medical attention was necessary during vacation periods.

The Advisory Board Insurance Sub-Committee has scheduled a meeting for Tuesday to deal with these issues. Once resolved, the plans will be put up for bid, after which the sub-committee will review bidding results and come up with a final recommendation.

The other subject under consideration is the proposed Health Maintenance Organization (HMO) in the Greater Amherst area. In a Staff Report to the University Health Council, an HMO constitutes "an organization staffed by a group of health professionals which contracts with its voluntarily enrolled subscribers to provide them and their dependents with comprehensive health care services in return for payment in advance of a fixed periodic sum."

The HMO would be open to anyone in the general community. According to present plans, however, the students would not be members of the program. Even so, according to Health Services director Barry Averill, there would be three specific areas in which the students would benefit:

1) it would provide health care for the dependents of students.

2) it would provide a greater number of specialists in the area who would serve students as well as HMO members.

3) it would mean financial savings, projected as a reduction in the Student Health Fee, due to the fact that there would be more people paying for University health services.

Due to a lack of time, the Advisory Board decided to wait until next Wednesday before discussing the HMO proposal in depth.

By MARY MUIRHEAD
MDC Staff

James Ragsdale, Boston Bureau Chief of the Associated Press, spoke yesterday in the Campus Center on the newly developed photo-laser. The event was arranged by Alvin F. Oickle, Collegian adviser and UMass lecturer in journalism.

Ragsdale called the use of lasers in photo receivers and transmitters "a technological breakthrough". Within 2 years all Associated Press will have access to the new photo-laser equipment.

A 20 minute documentary film was shown to explain the process. Associated Press was dissatisfied with current methods of sending photos over wire: maintenance costs are high and the quality of photos gets poorer every year.

This dissatisfaction resulted in the development of the photo-laser process by MIT researchers: a finely focused beam of light is used to transform electronic signals into a photograph. The 3M company has developed a "dry-silver" paper which receives the picture. The end product is a photograph, not a facsimile, which can be edited by computer in an electronic dark room.

Ragsdale mentioned the possibilities of new ways of utilizing the laser in newspaper production. A future reality might be "a computerized laser type printing press". Each page would be planned and edited on a computer screen and with the push of a button sent off to the press.

Women planning to use the University Health Service Contraception Service take notice: The contraception educational session will not be offered next Wednesday nite, April 17. Next week the educational session will run on Tuesday nite at 7:00 and Thursday afternoon at 3:00.

Michigan crowds greet Nixon during special campaign

BAD AXE, Mich. (AP) — President Nixon received a friendly bipartisan welcome today as he barnstormed through the solid Republican rural areas in the Michigan district that holds a special congressional election next Tuesday.

Both the Democrats, who have attacked Nixon, and the Republicans, who have largely ignored him, said they expected the President's visit to help spur their forces.

Republican candidate James Sparling, scheduled to be at the President's side all day, insisted that Nixon was coming here to discuss issues rather than campaign for his election.

Nixon himself could be the biggest winner. Impeachment pressure among House Republicans is expected to ease if Sparling ends a string of recent Democratic congressional victories following Nixon's visit.

The President landed at Tri City Airport between the 8th District's population centers of Saginaw and Bay City.

Speaking to an estimated 5,000 persons at the airport, Nixon charged that the Democratic-controlled Congress is providing a "bottleneck" that has led to higher living costs and unemployment, especially in Michigan's auto plants.

After his airport speech, Nixon flew by helicopter to this town of about 3,000, where residents had been preparing their welcome for a week and had started lining the main street in the early morning chill more than four hours before the President's arrival.

Friendly crowds, carrying signs supporting the President, dotted the one-mile route from the airport into the center of Bad Axe, where Nixon was greeted enthusiastically as he shook hands along the edge of the crowd.

Most of the signs were friendly, expressing support for the President and urging him, "Don't quit."

There were a handful of antagonistic signs, one reading: "Watergate is not over, Resign with honor."

Speaking from a flag-draped platform in the heart of Bad Axe, Nixon said that because Sparling "who worked in the White House for a time last summer" had brought the district's fertilizer shortage to his attention, he was sending energy chief William Simon out to see if he could ease it.

Republicans need a heavy turnout in the small towns along Nixon's 57-mile route from Bad Axe to Sandusky to retain the district the GOP has held for the past 40 years.

At the airport in Saginaw, many of those in the crowd carried pro-Nixon placards and American flags, but there also were signs urging that the President be impeached.

Milk funds reportedly offered to Conally

WASHINGTON (AP) — Watergate investigators have evidence that somebody removed $10,000 from a bank safe-deposit box where a dairy cooperative's lawyer says he placed the money, offering it for use by former Treasury Secretary John B. Connally, informed sources say.

The money was replaced latter by new bills bearing serial numbers that show they were not in circulation at the time the original bills were stashed away, according to two sources familiar with the case.

Connally has said he was told the money was put away for his political use, but he has denied that he actually used it.

Meanwhile, columnist Jack Anderson reported yesterday that FBI agents working for the Watergate special prosecutor have evidence that Connally pocketed the $10,000, then hastily returned it after the dairy group came under investigation.

Texas attorney Jake Jacobsen, one-time lawyer for Associated Milk Producers Inc., has testified that he put the money in the box for Connally and that Connally refused it.

A Watergate grand jury indicted Jacobsen for perjury, saying he lied when he swore that the money remained in the safe-deposit box for nearly 2½ years until removed in the presence of an FBI agent last Nov. 27.

Jacobsen has pleaded innocent, but the banknote serial numbers make his testimony logically impossible, sources say.

Anderson reported that according to FBI sources, Connally first accepted the money, then gave back the sum in $100 bills. Later, worried that the bills could be traced, he substituted smaller bills, Anderson reported. But though the year on the bills showed they had been printed before the original payment was made, they had not been circulated until after Jacobsen said the money went into the safe-deposit box, the columnist reported.

Connally said yesterday: "I have categorically denied I received the money, and I do so today."

Jacobsen had no comment on the Anderson column.

Jacobsen's lawyer is expected to ask chief U.S. District Judge George L. Hart Jr. to throw out the indictment on the technical grounds that the Watergate special prosecution force, through a slipup in wording, failed to charge Jacobsen with an offense.

The matter of the $10,000 has been of special interest to Watergate investigators, who suspect it may have been for Connally in return for his help in getting an increase in milk price supports in 1971.

Although both Jacobsen and Connally say the money was offered for use by Connally as a campaign contribution, it was disclosed recently that the cash came from the corporate account of the milk producers coop, and not from its political trust. Federal law prohibits use of corporate money in campaigns.

Jacobsen has testified that he met twice with Connally to ask his aid in getting milk price supports increased. "He said he would do all he could to help us," Jacobsen said.

Republicans predict subpoena for tapes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republicans on the House Judiciary Committee sent word to the White House yesterday that a subpoena is virtually certain if President Nixon doesn't agree to comply immediately with the panel's request for more presidential tapes and documents.

The majority Democrats and the Republicans caucused separately yesterday to discuss a White House proposal that they wait two more weeks for a final decision on what material the President feels is relevant to the impeachment inquiry.

Chairman Peter W. Rodino Jr., D-N.J., scheduled a meeting of the full committee for today with the question of a subpoena the only item on the agenda.

But it was the Republicans who voiced the strongest reaction to the letter received late Tuesday from James D. St. Clair, the President's Watergate lawyer.

St. Clair wrote to committee counsel John Doar that he was pleased that the committee has made its original request for tapes of 42 presidential conversations more specific in subsequent correspondence.

"Although further specifications might be desirable to assist the President in determining what he should provide the committee, he has directed me to advise you that a review of the materials in question is under way," St. Clair wrote.

The White House lawyer said he hoped the review would be completed by the end of the upcoming Easter congressional recess on April 22.

Rep. Edward Hutchinson of Michigan, senior Republican on the committee, said, "I am not satisfied with the response."

He added, "I think it was offensive to the House, I'm sorry to say." Hutchinson said the 17 Republicans on the 38-member committee were divided among three positions. He described them as follows:

—Those who are ready to vote "very reluctantly" to subpoena all the material requested from the White House.

—Those who are ready to vote to subpoena the most specific items in the committee's request.

—Those who are willing to wait to see what the White House gives the committee on April 22.

Radiation leaks

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) - Health officials said yesterday a preliminary check showed that there is no danger to passengers aboard two flights where radiation leaked from improperly shielded shipments.

Workmen who may have come in contact with the shipment, however, were still being tested.

Georgia public health officials said first results of checks showed "passengers are not in any danger." They said workmen who handled equipment were being given blood tests to determine if there was any indication of exposure to radiation.

According to the Federal Aviation Agency, 32 curies of solid Iridium 192 was shipped by Value Engineering Laboratories of Alexandria, Va., to Gamma Industries in Baton Rouge, La., aboard two Delta Airline flights - Flight 311 from Washington to Atlanta on April 5 and Flight 585 from Atlanta to Baton Rouge, on April 6.

Delta said 325 persons may have been exposed to radiation, 158 of them passengers and the rest crew members and airline employes.

The Atomic Energy Commission said the material had not been shielded correctly and some radiation may have leaked from it. A spokesman for the Federal Aviation Agency said: "Preliminary investigation shows that the carrier met the requirements involved in the shipment of hazardous material."

NATO on Iceland

WASHIGNTON (AP) - The United States and Iceland have agreed to hold a new round of talks on the status of American forces stationed in Iceland under NATO auspices.

The talks will be held at Reykjavik after the U.S. studies the latest Iceland proposals, according to the State Department.

Australian election

CANBERRA, Australia (AP) - Both houses of the Australian Parliament will be dissolved to make way for a general election probably on May 11 or 18, Prime Minister Gough Whitlam announced yesterday.

He was cheered by the Labor caucus when he made his announcement in response to the opposition's declared intention to oppose appropriation bills amounting to $270 million in the Senate.

Whitlam told Parliament he had advised Gov. Gen. Sir Paul Hasluck to dissolve both houses.

Hasluck had accepted his advice, he added.

The move follows 16 months of Labor rule in the House of Representatives and frustration in the opposition-dominated Senate. On two occasions the Senate had rejected key bills on electoral legislation, health insurance and legislation on the petroleum and minerals authority bill.

Mitchell on stand

NEW YORK (AP) - Former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell took the stand in a hushed courtroom yesterday to begin testifying in his own defense against charges of conspiracy, obstruction of justice and perjury.

Mitchell and former Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans are accused of impeding a Securities and Exchange Commission investigation of financier Robert L. Vesco in return for Vesco's $200,000 cash contribution to President Nixon's re-election campaign.

Mitchell's appearance was delayed this morning while his lawyers argued for theright to read the entire grand jury testimony of the former Cabinet officer to the trial jury. Judge Lee P. Gagliardi allowed them to read only portions of the transcript.

Four former union officials absolve Boyle; defense rests

MEDIA, Pa. (AP) - The defense in the murder trial of former United Mine Workers President W.A. "Tony" Boyle rested yesterday after presenting testimony to support Boyle's claim he did not order the murder of union rival Joseph "Jock" Yablonski.

Both sides were to present summations and the case was expected to go to the jury today. Earlier, Judge Francis Catania turned down a defense motion for a directed verdict of acquittal.

Four former members of the union's International Executive Board testified yesterday that Boyle was not in the hallway where a key prosecution witness quoted him as saying: "We've got to kill Yablonski, take care of him."

That testimony had come Monday from William Turnblazer, former president of UMW district 19 in Middlesboro, Ky., who said the remark was made to him and Albert Pass, former secretary-treasurer of the district after a meeting in Washington on June 23, 1969.

Each of the four said he recalled the meeting clearly because Yablonski had brought his lawyer to protest his removal by Boyle from a UMW committee.

One of them, Henry Allai of Pittsburg, Kan., said he personally observed Boyle leave the meeting room through a side door that led to other offices and to stairs leading down to Boyle's office on the floor below. Boyle had testified he had stopped in the hallway and talked with two men, but not with Turnblazer or Pass.

The 72-year-old Boyle was a protege of the late John L. Lewis and had ruled the 200,000-member union for 10 years. He is charged with three counts of murder in the Dec. 31, 1969 slaying of Yablonski and his wife and daughter. He testified he had nothing to do with the killings.

The Yablonskis were shot by three hired gunmen as they slept in the sprawling red brick home in Clarksville, Pa., in the rich soft coal fields of southwestern Pennsylvania. The slayings occured three weeks after Boyle defeated the reform-minded Yablonski in a bitter election for the UMW presidency.

Passenger train upgrading proposed

WASHINGTON (AP) - A high-speed Interstate Railroad System linking the nation's major cities and permitting passenger trains to travel at speeds up to 100 miles per hour was proposed in the Senate yesterday.

The system would be created under a bill sponsored by Sens. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., Vance Hartke, D-Ind., and William Hathaway, D-Maine.

Federal assistance totaling $1.5 billion in grants and $1 billion in loan guarantees would be made available under the legislation for rehabilitation of roadbeds on rail lines selected for the system.

These lines would be required to maintain track to certain standards to permit fast train speeds throughout the system.

Weicker said the legislation was prompted by slow schedules and undependable performance of trains run by Amtrak, the nation's rail passenger corporation established in 1970.

He said most of these delays are due to steadily deteriorating track, which he said has also had a detrimental effect on freight service.

The bill would:

-Require the Interstate Commerce Commission to hold public hearings to determine which rail lines to include in the system.

-Establish minimum federal standards for track and provide federal grants and credit for lines unable to afford improvements to meet these standards.

-Require all main track in the system to be maintained to allow smooth and dependable operation of freight trains at speeds up to 60 miles an hour and passenger trains at speeds between 80 m.p.h. and 100 m.p.h.

Weicker said the bill also provides funds for rehabilitation of many branch lines "thus enabling continuation of rail freight service that is vital to the future of smaller communities and rural areas."

Peron moves against left

Associated Press Writer

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — President Juan D. Peron is showing signs of stepping up his war against leftists in his movement. But the 78-year-old general hasn't completely disowned them and there is no sign the leftists have given up.

The controversy came closer to the boiling point this week when Peron's six-month-old government closed down the leftists' chief press organ, the weekly magazine El Descamisado.

The publicaton bears the name of the Argentine workers — the "shirtless ones" — who were the backbone of the old Peron government from 1946 to 1955.

It was Peron's second move against the radical press in less than a month and left the 250,000 or so Peronist youth followers in a quandary about the government's next move.

Ever since his return to the presidency in October, Peron has sided increasingly with the old-line Peronist labor leaders. Their support comes from the 2.5 million-member General Labor Confederation that Peron built 25 years ago.

In mid-March, the leftist newspaper El Mundo was disbanded. Its editors were arrested and accused of spawning subversive propaganda.

The leftists found a home in the Peronist movement because they consider its basic ideals compatible with their own. El Mundo and leftist groups maintained that the old-line labor leaders were virtually imprisoning Peron through strongarm politics.

In recent weeks, Peron's government has given police an increasingly free hand in rounding up leftist Peronists and others suspected of collaborating with guerrillas.

Resignation 'irrevocable'

receiving strong support to continue, they changed their minds. Their official reason was an alleged military crisis on the Syrian front.

In recent weeks, however, the war blame issue again has put pressure on the government. Many blame Dayan for the war errors that led to heavy Israeli casualties, while others want the whole government out.

There was no immediate indication how Dayan would react to Mrs. Meir's resignation announcement.

Earlier yesterday a highranking Syrian delegation left for Washington and informed sources in Damascus said President Hafez Assad was preparing to go to Moscow today.

The seven-man delegation to Washington, led by the army intelligence chief, Maj. Gen. Hikmat Chehabi, was to hold talks with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger on the prospects for a military disengagement on the Golan Heights front.

Assad is to spend five days in Moscow talking with Kremlin leaders, sources said. Major topics of discussion were expected to include a peace settlement in the Middle East as well as military and financial aid.

The Israeli-Syrian border fighting on the Golan front continued, and Syria charged that the new commander of U.N. truce observers in the Middle East, Lt. Gen. Bengt Liljenstrand of Sweden, was nearly hit by Israeli shells.

A U.N. spokesman confirmed that the commander and several advisers had come under fire while on their way to Jerusalem after a familiarization tour of the Golan Heights.

Bank assures Soviets that trade desired

MOSCOW (AP) - The Chase Manhattan Bank's top man in Moscow says American companies still have a friend in the Soviet Union despite Russian unhappiness over the failure of Congress to lower trade and credit barriers.

In fact, he says, the Soviet Union now seems more determined than ever to see Soviet-American trade flourish.

But Albert Wentworth, a senior vice president for the bank, warned that Soviet officials aren't bluffing when they say that continued congressional opposition could eventually force Russia to turn to Western Europe and Japan for money and technology.

"There's a great risk that the United States will be left out in the cold," Wentworth says.

Chase has a three-room suite on the second floor of Moscow's old Hotel Metropol on Karl Marx Avenue, a block from the Kremlin. Thick grass-green carpeting covers the floors and paintings from the bank's art collection hang on the wall. The office was opened last May, making Chase Manhattan the first American bank to open an office in Moscow. Bank of America and First National City Bank have followed suit.

So far, Chase has made loans totalling $153.5 million to the Soviet government to finance equipment for the Kama River truck factory.

Wentworth says he still sees a spirit of detente here.

"Detente may be unraveling in the United States - I don't know. But it's not unraveling on this side. In fact, there's a greater impetus to speed up trade, to accelerate.

Wentworth said he believes the recent talks between Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and Communist party head Leonid I. Brezhnev may ease the way for passage of the trade bill giving the Soviet Union Credits and most-favored-nation status.

The bill has been blocked by Congress, which has linked the benefits to freer emigration of Soviet citizens, particularly Soviet Jews.

"The Soviets are not going to grant full freedom of emigration. Nor will they grant freedom of the press," Wentworth said. "But if Kissinger's requests were anywhere near reasonable, I think he may have got them."

"The Russians will do everything they can to ease trade. Their desire to trade with the West is a deep conviction, not a surface thing."

Tests needed at power plant

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) Vermont Environmental Conservation secretary Martin Johnson says more information is needed before a decision can be made on the need for water cooling towers at the Vermont Yankee Nuclear Power Plant at Vernon.

Tests are being conducted at the Vernon plant to determine the effects on the Connecticut River of running the plant without the cooling towers in operation.

Part of the plant's generation operation requires that water be taken from the river. That water is then recycled and returned to the Connecticut River when the towers are not in operation.

Environmentalists have been concerned about the possible effects on fish and plant life of piping the heated water back into the river.

The tests now being conducted by the plant are designed to determine just what those effects are.

The U.S. Atomic Energy Commission has ordered the plant to operate with the cooling towers in use at all times. Vermont Yankee spokesman Lawrence Keyes said the plant would petition the AEC to relax that order if the tests showed there would be no environmental damage from discharging the water back into the river.

Air Force ROTC... The college scholarship program with fringe benefits.

Yale pushes for contributions

NEW HAVEN (AP) — Yale University, complaining of inflationary pressures and soaring fuel prices, this week launched a drive to triple contributions from alumni and friends in each of the next four years.

The prestigious Ivy League institution hopes to raise $370 million by the end of 1977, "The largest campaign goal" of any U.S. university, Yale President Kingman Brewster Jr. said.

Preliminary efforts toward a secure kickoff of the drive has produced gifts or promises of $63 million during recent months, he said.

Brewster said Yale, which has suffered annual operating deficits since 1971, is facing the same problems as most other private universities and the fund raising drive is only an early part of a developing national trend toward strenuous efforts to raise more money for them.

Radioactive liquids stolen

CLIFTON, N.J. (AP) — Clifton police asked the aid of the public Monday in the recovery of two packages of radioactive liquids stolen from a truck here.

New England Nuclear Corp. of Boston reported the material was in two small boxes stolen from a truck of the Mark IV Freight Co. of Clifton while the truck was parked in the Mark IV lot here over the weekend. New England Nuclear said the radioactive liquid used in medical diagnosis was being shipped to its customers.

Local option rents

BOSTON (AP) — More than 1,000 boisterous and sometimes unruly tenants jammed the State House Wednesday to urge the legislature to extend Massachusetts' four-year old local option rent control law.

The legislature's Local Affairs Committee spent the day listening to emotional pleas for continuance of the law either for several more years or permanently after it expires in April, 1975.

Representatives of the Massachusetts Association of Realtors and the Massachusetts Rental Housing Association opposed various bills to continue the law, now in effect in Boston, Brookline, Lynn, Cambridge and Somerville.

Workshop to stress planning for living

The Student Development Center is sponsoring a "Planning For Living Workshop" Tuesday, April 16th.

The purpose of the workshop is to increase student awareness about how the present creates the future.

The organizers feel that in psychology, there is an emphasis on the past, and its influence on a person's life. "Granted, the past does have an important effect, but What about the Future?" they are asking.

This workshop is an attempt to make people aware that what they do now, in the present, has an important effect on the future.

The workshop is open to any interested students, free of charge. The meeting began at 6:30 p.m. in room 168 of the C.C. and last for about 4 hours. The facilitators for the workshop are Barry Collamore, Rich Geffin and Chick Rheault.

Interested students should call the Student Development Center at 545-0333, and leave their name and telephone number with the secretary; or stop by Room 213, Berkshire. If more information is needed, call Gollomore may be reached at 253-3613.

Celebrate Easter

To The Editor:

As we all know, Easter is just around the corner. This past Sunday we celebrated the entry of Jesus into Jerusalem upon an ass proclaiming the Kingdom of Heaven and the reign of God. The throngs cheered singing "Hosanna in the highest" and laid palms at his feet (note: this same crowd yelled "Crucify him, Crucify him" shortly thereafter). Soon Jesus was to go to the cross in obedience to his father's will and die to heal us here of all of our sicknesses and afflictions, and to deliver us from all our sins -- to make us white as snow before our father in Heaven. As the scripture says, "He was oppressed and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth; like a lamb that is led to the slaughter, and like a sheep that before its shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth." Then there on the cross he defeated Satan and all his authorities and healed us -- this is the greatest victory of all time. There he proclaimed the political theory of the Kingdom of Heaven -- victory through death; authority through submission; forgiveness of the enemy. Then three days later he rose from the dead proclaiming victory over the grave (eternal life to all believers) and promising the POWER of the Holy Spirit to believers. This is the good news of Easter. The resurrection of Christ becomes the hope of the world.

This Easter, beloved children, turn your eyes away from the world so that you can realize this wonderful story. Although I never knew it until I was saved, there is more to Easter than the Easter Bunny and chocolate candy. Turn your eyes upon the lillies of the field and the bright new dawn of the Lord's Day. Thus says the Lord, "I love you and want to give you my resurrection and the power of the Holy Spirit to live a Godly life; to become the children of God." Believe in Jesus and be resurrected Easter morning. God is Love.

Estelle: A bunch of horseshit

To The Editor:

I am writing in reference to Bob Estelle's article in the April 5 issue of the Collegian regarding "our" Panama Canal Zone. In his article Estelle refers to a "popular myth" about the U.S. leasing the canal zone as being false. However, the U.S. does lease the zone although the conditions specified in the treaty are for 99 years to "perpetuity". The conditions under which this treaty was signed I think should be made known.

At the time, Panama was part of Columbia. To build the canal the U.S. had to deal with the Columbian government as well as a French holding company who held the building rights to the canal. The Columbians wanted a favorable financial settlement as well as effective control over the area and the holding company was asking $109,000,000 for the concession. The U.S. said they would give the French no more than $40,000,000 and by use of threat got the Columbian ambassador to sign a treaty favoring the U.S. Enraged by the threat of their sovereignty in Panama and a miserly financial settlement, the Columbian Senate rejected the treaty.

At this point Pres. Teddy Roosevelt decided to have no further dealings with the "foolish and homocidal corruptionists in Bogata" (referring to the Columbian Senate), and moved to procure other means of building the canal. Roosevelt, who disliked Latin Americans and often referred to them as "Dagos", made it known that the U.S. would look favorably upon a revolution in Panama and could be depended upon to insure its success. Sure enough, with the help of an instigator named Phillippe Bunau-Varilla (a Frenchman and member of the holding company), a revolution did occur. The rebellion was poorly equipped and badly organized (the rebels' major force consisted of a fire brigade), and could not have succeeded without the help of U.S. naval and ground forces and well-placed bribes. Before news of the revolt reached Columbia and before most Panamanians learned of their own independence, the U.S. proclaimed recognition of the new state which in effect told Columbia not to interfere. All this time the U.S. claimed a neutral stance.

Negotiations with the Panamanians began and their minister (appointed by the U.S.), was Phillippe Bunau-Varilla who hadn't been in Panama for thirteen years. In desperation, the government of Panama sent two of their own men to the U.S., but they arrived too late. Within 5 days Bunau-Varilla, interested only in his financial gain, reached a settlement which procured for his company the entire $40,000,000 but gave up much in return. The agreement was to last for 99 years to "perpetuity", the canal zone widened from a promised 6 miles to 10, (and more in some places), and it granted the U.S. complete authority over the zone which split the new country in two. In effect, this treaty was worse than the one Columbia had previously rejected. Since Panama was now dependent on the U.S. for protection from Columbia, they were forced to comply. Thus, the U.S. began immediately to build "our" canal.

In light of these facts I submit that Bob Estelle's article is nothing but a bunch of horse-shit and should be treated as such. We, as a nation, have no right to intercede in the affairs of other nations through the use of threats, bribes, and military force. Benefits gained by the use of such tactics should not be regarded as sovereign.

In his letter to the editor on April 9, Estelle accused another person (a Panamanian), who replied to his article, of assuming things to be true simply because he felt they were. I accuse Bob Estelle of the same thing and the previous facts, (taken mainly from an article by a noted historian, Maddox), prove it. Estelle also states that he "checks out all" his facts before placing them in his column and to do otherwise would be "downright stupidity". Well, you said it Bob, not me.

Closed system in Theatre Dept?

To The Editor:

I am under the impression (maybe falsely) that the purpose for furthering one's education after high school is to gain knowledge and experience both in the classroom and through extra-curricular activities. The Department of Theater here at the university is failing to do so.

Recently the University Theater gave a performance of The Importance of Being Earnest under the direction of Maria Bednerik. Ms. Bednerik is now beginning direction of another play. Yet strangely, even after two days of try-outs, she could not find two students who could successfully perform the two roles needed for the new play. So she, (and it may have been with help from others, I don't know), chose two of Earnest's previous cast members. May I be so presumptuous to ask what the purpose of try-outs was if an actor and an actress she already knew and had worked with were to be chosen? She could have eliminated a lot of false hopes and expectations, and to some extent inconveniences to some people, if she had gone directly to those chosen and asked them if they would be so kind as to perform in her play.

This is not meant to be a personal attack on Ms. Bednerik. But this is meant to be an attack on the Department of Theater who perpetuates this kind of a closed policy when it comes to plays. As I understand it, the purpose for having plays here is not just a financial one, but rather an excellent opportunity for students to gain experience in what might be their career. How is anyone ever to gain this kind of experience if the theater department is allowed to continue in its elitist policy?

I think it is high time people began re-evaluating their priorities and decide exactly what the purpose for having a department of theater is. And if they decide they would like to continue in the manner they have been for as long as I have been here, I think it is time the students in the department of theater began to help their professors in reassessing, if they can't do it themselves.

S of E colonialization

By VICTOR MANUEL GOMEZ

If you have never heard of the CIE, it is the Center for International Education of the School of Education, but its real name should be the Center for the Americanization of Education in developing countries.

This particular organization has been chosen by the U.S. Government's Agency for International Development (A.I.D.) to conduct out-of-school educational programs in rural areas of Ecuador, and has recently been granted close to $1 million and promised other contracts that might easily amount to $1.5 million. The purpose of this grant as stated in the document "An Institutional Grant Proposal" is "...to strenghten and expand its (CIE's) existing capacity in non-formal education for developing areas of the world. The specific objectives of this grant is to create at the CIE ' "Non Formal Education Center" that will have the following functions:

—To train a cadre of Americans and some foreign nationals who will be practitioners, researchers and consultants in developing countries.

—To provide training in Non Formal Education to AID personnel.

—To create a 'development process' for the diffussion and application of their concepts and techniques of out-of-school education.

—To design specific techniques and methodologies for out-of-school education in developing countries.

This grant requires from the University of Massachusetts to provide physical space, use of facilities, of the University Computing Center and administrative support services (accounting, payroll...etc). In return the University will receive an overhead, which usually is between 20 and 30 per cent of the total amount of the grant...

All of the above sounds very convenient for UMASS and the School of Education and in line with the old foreign policy tradition of Americans as helpers of the poor countries, generous givers, unbiased advisors and well-intentioned reformers (Peace Corps, Alliance for Progress, Food for Peace...etc.). However, from the perspective of many citizens (like myself) of dependent, colonized and consequently underdeveloped countries, the forementioned grant to UMASS has many serious social and political implications. First of all the role and objectives of AID should be put in their proper perspective: AID as an agency of the U.S. Government is but a tool for the implementation of its policies of imperialism and subsequent exploitation and control of less developed countries. Traditionally, AID has served as cover for CIA personnel like Mr. Mitrioni whose real role was the training of Uruguayan police in counterinsurgency techniques.

AID has sponsored multiple research projects, through American Universities, whose ultimate objective was the gathering of essential and strategic information about a given country. AID has the role of promoting capitalist economic development by influencing and controlling economic policies of developing countries. AID is in charge of stimulating American private capital investment in these countries and protecting the investment against nationalization or expropiation without 'just' compensation. Through its educational aid program AID seeks to control and influence educational policies so that a given country's educational system become more similar to the U.S. system and more useful in training the 'right' type of manpower for capitalist economic development and more efficient in socializing the youth into a consumption-oriented, class-structured society. This objective is accomplished through 'academically legitimized' groups of American advisors, technical missions, consultants, tied loans, and for more credibility, utilizing Americanized foreign nationals.

Secondly, what is the rationale in creating in a placid community such as Amherst, Mass., a center of expertise in out of school education for developing countries? Would not this Center accomplish better its objectives if it was located in any of so many educationally deprived areas of Asia, Africa or Latin America? If this Center was located there it could be staffed and run by those people who might know better what their needs are and how to solve them without having white, middle class UMASS educators as consultants and experts coming down to 'help' them. If AID were really interested in promoting out-of-school education in less developed areas, why does it not create several research and training centers throughout the world? Clearly, the intent is to strengthen and expand an American University's expertise so that it could play an important role in determining and controling the political values, educational philosophy and content of out-of-school education in developing countries. In other words, five years from now there will be many foreign nationals coming to UMASS for training (and ideological indoctrination since no content is value or ideology free), and many consultants will have been provided for AID. The growing process of academic legitimization through formal education certification of non formal education practitioners will have created more and more dependence and centralization on formal education institutions - like the CIE - for ideas, strategies, techniques, methodologies (non of which is value free) to be applied in out of school education programs in developing countries. This process of centralization, hierarchization and bureaucratization of non formal education in developing countries, i.e., decentralized, autonomous, autoctonous free, flexible, relevant, community-based and directed.

Finally, the control of the educational systems of less developed nations is for the U.S. Government and its Big Business partner an important strategy in insuring the reproduction and perpetuation of the class structure, in socializing the youth and training the adequate type of manpower for the capitalist model of economic development. Historically, this type of economic development has led to the continuous underdevelopment, poverty and dependence of the colonized countries for the benefit, accumulation of wealth and increasing power of the rich country. Educational colonialism is effected through a greater dependence of less developed and colonized countries on the concepts, methods and strategies of out-of-school education thought out and designed by a group of Americans, and a few complacent foreign nationals, generously financed by AID at the Center for International Education of the School of Education. Faculty and students concerned with issues raised here can express their ideas and seek further information from Professors David Evans (5-0468) and Mr. John Bing (5-0465) of the CIE.

Viva Golda

Golda Meir has resigned as Prime Minister of the nation-state of Israel. This time, she terms her action as "irrevocable". With Golda's departure goes the last of the Ben-Gurion style Israeli politicians - a seventy-five year old woman who's been with the nation from the beginning and has served that nation faithfully throughout its brief history. Whether or not one approves of the existence of the state of Israel or its government, there is no recourse but to admit that Mrs. Meir is a patriot in the true sense of the word. In 1948, David Ben-Gurion said of her, "Someday, when history will be written, it will be said that there was a Jewish woman who got the money which made the state possible."

Golda's political record and convictions since 1948 are common knowledge to students of world politics, but few are familiar with her previous life. That's the reason for this article.

To begin with, Golda was born on May 3, 1898, in the city of Kiev, Russia. Seven years later, she and her family, the Mabovitches, emigrated to the United States and settled in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

In 1915, Golda made her first true political committment by joining the Poale Zion, the Labor Zionist Party. Six years later, Golda, who had since married Morris Myerson prepared, with her husband and sister, for their journey to Israel.

Having been given to Great Britain as a mandate after WWI, Palestine was a hot bed for turmoil. The British used the existing antagonism between Arabs and Jews for their own purpose to divide Palestine in order to keep it weak.

Golda and Morris lived on a kibbutz in Merhavia, and Golda served as delegate to the Council of the Hitadrut, the General Federation of Labor. In 1923, they moved to Tel Aviv and then to Jerusalem. She often spoke of the rights of women in society and by 1933, she had established herself as a leading proponent of Zionism.

But times were cruel in Palestine. The militant Hagannah, which had been virtually abandoned after 1921, was now reborn to counter Arab terrorism and British control. Things might have been different if the Jews and Arabs had joined together against the British, but instead, the Jews joined with the British to crush the Arab revolt.

Golda's job was one of raising money. She was an excellent fund-raiser, and she began developing skills as a politician. In 1939, with the British issuance of the "White Paper", which restricted Jewish immigration to Israel, David Ben-Gurion spoke to the World Zionist Congress and advocated smuggling of refugee Jews into Palestine. Golda Myerson stood fast behind her hero, and when the resolution was approved, she became a recognized figure in world Zionist circles.

By 1943, it was clear that Hitler intended to exterminate every Jew in Europe, and the British were turning again to put down the Zionist movement. In the famous trial of Leib Sirkim, a Histadrut sports leader who was later to become Assistant Director-General of Defense for Israel, Sirkim asked that Golda Myerson appear as a character witness.

In 1946, Golda appeared before the Anglo-American Commission saying, "We are convinced that Jews went to their deaths because they were not allowed to come into the country where they could have been saved."

It was during that year that the ship "Fede", with twelve hundred refugee Jews aboard, was forced by the British Navy to turn back to the Italian port of La Spezia. The passengers went on a hunger strike, and Golda proposed that Palestinian leaders should join the strike. She was forty-eight years old and incredibly overworked, but she participated, as did fourteen other leaders, for one hundred hours. Golda emerged as a worldwide recognized leader of Palestinian Jews.

On June 30, 1946, the British Army siezed the Jewish Agency building and placed a curfew over Jerusalem. Ben-Gurion was out of the country and Moshe Sharett, the head of the Political Department of the Jewish Agency, was in jail. Golda was in charge.

During the next few days, charges and countercharges flew back and forth, and on July 10, the Army withdrew from the building, and Golda Myerson turned world opinion to condemn the British actions.

1947 was the year of the "Exodus" and Golda took on the British Army once again demanding that refugee children be allowed to enter Palestine and that adequate health facilities be set up in the refugee camps. The British authorities bended again.

Finally, on November 29, 1947, the United Nations adopted a proposal for the establishment of a Jewish state in Palestine and the withdrawal of all British troops. Riots broke out throughout Palestine, and the Arab state pledged that they would not allow the existence of the state of Israel.

Golda now prepared for war. She took on the task of raising funds for armament, and it was she that almost solely arranged for the financing of the Jewish state. It was also Golda that took part in the negotiations with King Abdullah of Jordan.

But it was on May 14, 1948, that the state of Israel was officially born, and Golda Myerson was one of the signers of its original Declaration of Independence.

The rest is common history. Golda Myerson, soon to become Golda Meir, went on to become Prime Minister of Israel, a position from which she resigned yesterday. She was never able to obtain a lasting peace, but she's never abandoned the hope that there will be peace in the Middle East - someday.

"I am convinced that someday - I don't know when - someone - and I envy him already - will stand up before the communities of the world with the message that there is peace in Israel - joy in Israel - and only joy in Israel. And we will know that everything which contributed to that day was worthwhile."

Bless my greasy spoon

Last spring a quarter-page ad appeared in the Collegian: SPEND AN EXCITING, REWARDING SUMMER TRAVELING AND EARNING OVER $2500!!!!

Looking back on a few summers, spent on my feet, 60 hours per week for $1.85 an hour, serving oil-laden hamburgers and hard-as-rock veal cutlets in my home-town greasy spoon, it sounded damn good to me.

The cynic in me screamed, "Don't do it, you fool," but the fool was taken with the dollar signs and thoughts of exotic places floating around in my head.

So it was, "Good-bye all you grouchy, penny-pinching, small-town, hamburger eaters — I'm off to see the world!" and over to the Campus Center for the Friday-night meeting of all interested persons.

Upon entering C.C. Room 155 I was greeted by Superior Johnny, job recruiter and recent graduate of the "if you can pull his arm out of the socket, you'll impress him" handshake school and the type of person whose mere presence wipes out all of my good self-concepts.

When he discovered that shaking my hand was comparable to shaking a wilted lettuce leaf, Superior Johnny's wide, pearly-toothed grin dissolved into a dismayed frown. He seemed to sense immediately that I wasn't quite the "right material" but he let me stay for the meeting anyway.

Four men students joined me and we all sat around staring at our feet while Superior Johnny paced back and forth in the front of the room in his shiny wing tips and immaculate suit, every muscle in his body taut and ready for action.

He looked at me and shook his head and muttered, "A girl, huh?" and rather than standing up with raised, clenched fist and shouting, "I am a woman!" I sullenly looked down at my body to make sure.

His spiel ran 25 minutes uninterrupted and was spoken in a booming, phony, us - Southern - folks - is - more - friendly - drawl. Twenty minutes of the spiel were dedicated to making us believe we really wanted the job. The last five went to breaking the news of just what the job was: selling encyclopedias, on commission, in East Brassiere Strap, Nebraska.

Johnny was pacing all around the room now making wild gestures with his arms. After shouting at least 15 questions at each of the guys in the room and ignoring me, he snapped his arm in my direction, pointed his finger at me and asked, "Do you really believe that you could do it, that you could work 60, 80 hours a week, that you could sell anything?"

"W-w-w-well, of c-c-course," I squeaked, "but I don't want your stinking job."

He shook his head violently.

"But, no, not one of you," he shouted, emphasizing each word with the thump of his fist on the wall, "is anywhere near being capable of handling this job."

The five of us were squirming off of our seats onto the floor in shame and embarrassment at our shortcomings when we were shocked upright by Superior Johnny's ranting and raving about his rise to super salesman.

Ambition, ambition, drive, drive, go, go, work, work, sell, sell!!! ZINGO — all the way to the top!

I timidly raised my hand; Superior Johnny sneered at me.

"Are you really happy?" I asked.

His muscles went loose, his eyes blinked a few times, his jaw dropped an inch...

"Well, of course!" he boomed.

With visions of hamburger specials and french fries dancing in my head I sneered at Superior Johnny and left him selling his lifestyle to the four young men remaining.

"My wife and I are very happy with our home in Rochester, N.Y. and let me tell you..."

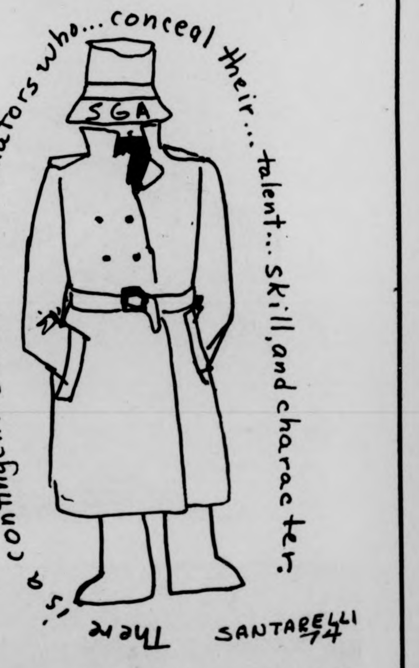
SGA Reorg

By JOHN O'KEEFE

The Student Government Association, in the wake of a constitutional crisis, has redoubled its efforts to come to grips with some of its more pressing problems such as sifting out those who, within the existence of an elitist inner circle, choose to live off students rather than live for students. It becomes somewhat of a ubiquitous problem.

How the roles within student government are distributed, how they are perceived by the student community, are questions that need to be answered.

The people who play these roles are themselves from a milieu which emphasizes their anonymity insofar as they keep their distance and eventually lose touch with the people they represent. This isn't by any means the end of it. Within its ranks there are reckless opportunists and stubborn dogmatists who cannot reconcile style with reality.



There is a contingent of... Student Senators who... conceal their... talent... skill, and character.
SGA
SANTARELLI 74

On the other side of the continuum there is a contingent of concerned Student Senators who are likely to conceal their pool of talent, skill and character.

And the rest of the student body? Why aren't they clamoring for change? Part of the reason lies in a learned incapacity for cooperation and participation. This aversion is no excuse for their silence in student affairs especially when it concerns the disposition of $800,000 in student activities taxes.

Reorganization of the student government seems to be the only alternative to an inept Student Senate. Senate Bill 74-S149 merits some consideration in this respect.

It purports to be a radical transformation. Radical in the sense that it tends to reflect the wants and needs of the student community by creating a participatory culture. Some of the more specific provisions include popular election of the SGA President and Vice-President, elimination of a large number of bureaucratized offices which have accrued over the years, special meetings of all interested undergraduate students with voting privileges, and a strengthened role for the area governments with their separate activities tax. This bill may be the prelude to a very important change.

Capturing gymnasts in California

It started last fall in Boyden Aux. Gym. For all those women showing a continuing interest in the gymnastics, coach Virginia Evans, and Asst. Coach Mike Kasavanna were there to help.

For those who continued, in this time of open practice, the more formal practices started in the early part of December.

The first real pay-off came on March 15 when the UMass Womans' Gymnastics Team won the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (AIAW) Eastern Regional Championships, held at UMass.

This was their ticket to the AIAW National Gymnastic Championships in Sacramento, April 5th and 6th. The women placed third behind Southern Illinois University and Southwest Mississippi Jr. College.

Sacco visiting today

George L. Sacco, democratic candidate for Attorney General, will spend a busy day on campus today. The former Chairman of the House Committee on Ways and Means will visit with physical plant workers during their morning coffee break and will casually meet the students at the "Hatch." Other activities include speaking before a political science class and interviews with local radio stations.

Highlights of the day will be a coffee hour at 1:20 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union sponsored by the University Students Communication Council and an appearance tonight before the Amherst Democratic Town Committee.

Students for Sacco, who are supporting Sacco's candidacy here, are urging the Amherst community to attend the 1:20 p.m. coffee hour and to feel free to approach the candidate any time during the day.

Dawn Easter service to be celebration

A Sunrise Celebration is scheduled for 6:30 a.m. Easter Sunday on the east side of the Campus Pond.

This is the second year UMass students are organizing such an event, and Rev. Paul MacVittie, pastor of College Church, Northampton, will give the main talk, as he did last year.

Rev. Renny Scott, Episcopal chaplain to UMass students, will be a participant, as will John Fitz, director of the Campus Crusade for Christ group at UMass. About 1,000 members of the campus and area communities attended last year.

Sunrise Celebration is sponsored by the Intervarsity Christian Fellowship, and will be broadcast live over radio WHMP in Northampton.

POLICE COMMUNITY SERVICE OFFICER
Amherst, Massachusetts

The Town of Amherst, Massachusetts has eight (8) vacancies for part-time Police Community Service Officers. The Community Service Officer will work a basic 20-25 hour week, and perform a variety of police community functions. The program is intended for individuals who have a desire to work in the police field, and are enrolled, or intend to enroll, in a law enforcement related curriculum at an accredited two or four year college or university. Applicants must be high school graduates or equivalent, and be at least 18 years of age on June 2, 1974.

The selection procedure will include a written examination, oral interviews, background investigation, medical examination, and may include a physical agility test or psychological examination. Send or call for approved application form and complete announcement to Amherst Police Department, Town Hall, Amherst, Mass. 01002. Phone 1-413-253-3211. All applications must be received in the Amherst Police Department by 5:00 p.m. E.D.S.T., April 29, 2974.

Amherst is an equal opportunity employer and encourages all qualified applicants to apply regardless of age, race, creed, color, sex or national origin.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Forecast

Of late, I have received numerous communications from Virgo readers complaining: "When are you going to say a couple of good things about us?" All right, here goes: Virgo individuals are perceptive, generally loyal, will work their fingers to the bone for loved ones, desire to be of service, can get in and out of places prohibited to most ordinary mortals, can be dynamic, intellectual and sexy. Among them are Aristotle Onassis, Peter Falk, James Coburn, Tuesday Weld and Joan Blondell. The month of August could be most significant in 1974 for many born under this zodiacal sign.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Communications open in new areas. You are able to put creative talents to use. Leo, Aquarius individuals might figure in important ways. Break through to fresh horizons. Shake off tendency to be too lenient, too patient or plain lethargic. Act on recent lessons, experiences.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Follow through on inner feelings. Don't dismiss hunch. Something or someone is trying to tell you something. Be receptive in sense that you have an open mind. Aquarian could figure prominently. Friend proves friendship.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Highlight versatility. Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Ask questions and expect answers. Patience is ally now, but this does not mean you should wait forever. Accent is on partnership, legal agreement, marriage.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Practical matters dominate. Family relationships command attention. Money, basic costs, far-reaching plans are in picture. Be frank. If you say what you mean, you are more likely to achieve favorable response.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Change of scenery could be on agenda. Relationship with member of opposite sex intensifies. Be communicative. Listen and learn. Test ideas. Young persons should not be regarded as threats or annoyances. Instead, welcome chance to inspire and be inspired.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): What means most to you becomes available. There now is greater degree of domestic harmony. Family member makes concession. Be a gracious "winner." Deal with Taurus, Libra persons. Money question will be resolved.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Accent is on getting around, testing, experimenting and making selections. Define terms. Refine techniques. Pisces, Virgo persons are likely to be in picture. Avoid self-deception. Have fun without being foolish.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Money and how it gets that way is featured. You build, accept responsibility and collect what is needed. Older individual is in picture but you should not be intimidated. Reward factor is greater than in recent past.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Veil of secrecy is removed. Clear sailing now indicated. You reach more persons. Recognition comes your way. Be ready. Cycle is such that you can emphasize appearance, personality. Your timing is on target.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Creative solutions can be found to problems which had been hidden, obscured. Direct approach succeeds. Leo figures prominently. What happens behind closed doors is significant. You are likely to involved in clandestine agreement.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Accent on bring our your natural qualities. Friends, desires, goals are in picture. You can release yourself now from burden which should not be your own in first place. Do so. Make clear the fact that you have life to live and that you intend to live it.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): There is room for you at more elevated position. Know it and act like you are aware of it. Means be definite, confident and relaxed. Sagittarius, Gemini persons play roles. New contacts through social affair will benefit you.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are intuitive, innovative, have sense of drama and a unique way of expressing yourself in humorous manner.

Women's crew rows on

The University's Women's Crew Club had a good turnout of people this spring. There have been over twenty-five women practicing.

Since the fall, the women's crew, has existed as a seperate club from the men's crew. This required that the women obtain their own equipment.

In order to row this spring, the following events have made it possible. From the use of money raised by showing movies, selling raffle tickets, and personal contributions, the women bought a used eight-woman racing shell and a set of used oars from the men's program. The program was given a real boost when a major Eastern rowing power donated a used "eight", the RUSTY CALLO. Extensive repairs were made on the donated shell and the oars by the women themselves. To complete the equipment needed, Amherst College loaned the women a second set of blades and the University's Geology department generously granted the use of a boat and motor for coaching purposes.

Since the beginning of this semester, (and for many since the fall,) the women have been training by lifting weights, running, rowing on the ergometer, and practicing on an indoor rowing tank.

Many of the rowers, although being new, are beginning to shape up for the fast-approaching races. The spring team held an election for officers early in the season with the following being voted in: President, Cindy Flint; Secretary-Treasurers, Anne Craig and Rose Sellen; Co-Captains, Mimi Brown and Debbie Kirchmer. The team will be pointing its season to the Eastern Association of Women's Rowing Colleges (EAWRC) Championships.

Anatomy of an overtime defeat

By BEN CASWELL

Losing is usually not too much fun. At least it is not as much fun as winning. Losing in sudden death is most probably the ultimate bummer. In sudden death one second you are in the thick of the game and the next second the game is over. This is how it went for Garber's Lacrosse Gorillas last Saturday afternoon against Cortland State, last season's defending small college champions.

At the finish of regulation time the score was tied at nine-all, and after collaboration of both coaches and the referees it was decided to play two more mandatory four minute periods. If it was still tied after these eight minutes then there would be sudden death and the first team to score would win. Pressure? Only about as much as the weight of the library puts on its foundation.

The Gorillas controlled the play for most of the overtime. They were flying and if it were not for some superb saves by the Cortland goaltender they would have ended it. They even put the ball in the net only to have it disallowed because of a crease violation which was a very gutsy and very fine call by the referee. Then when a UMass shot hit the cross bar and failed to go in it just seemed like Cortland was destined for success in this in-and-out day for UMass. And it was just a matter of time. The Gorillas outshot Cortland 10-3 in the overtime periods but the Redshirts from New York made the one that counted.

After the game in the locker room the place seemed like a morgue. Stunned players went to the showers in disbelief. That is how sudden death is; sort of like getting hit by a Mack truck going 100 miles per hour. Two games into the season and two tough one-goal losses, I guess you could call that heartbreaking. Although I don't think that the hearts of the Gorillas will break that easily.

Last season two early on close losses (one to Cortland) did nothing to prevent the Gorillas from continuing on to a fine 11-4 season and their fifth straight United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse league Northeast division championship. A sudden death loss like last Saturday's could bring the team up and together for the remainder of the season. They know they can do it...now all they have to do is exactly that. QUICK SHOTS: The Gorillas played the whole second half and overtime periods without their star starting defenseman Bill Blaustein who suffered an ankle sprain in action near the net in the first half. His status for this week is still uncertain.

...Games this week, today at Wesleyan and Saturday at UConn.

...Next home game versus Harvard Weds. April 17, 3:00 p.m....Coach Garber - "the Ivies are always tough."

Judo uses body to build mind

By BILL STEVENS

Judo is more than a combative art and competitive sport. Like other oriental martial art, it is a way or path to perfection of self and the world. "Ju" can be translated to mean gentle, yielding, flowing, flexible. "Do" means path, direction, process (to perfection). Judo can be referred to as zen in motion, action in passivity and passivity in action.

Jigoro Kano, Judo's founder, developed judo from jujitso, which was an ancient form of self-defense developed in China and Japan. Kano studied several forms of jujitso. He was a master of Tenshin Shinyo jujitsu, which emphasized throwing techniques, and Kito jujitso, which emphasized body attack and fighting of body and arms. The more dangerous techniques were eliminated or revised by Kano. His aim was for all judoka to practice this art safely, without deliberate intention to maim or kill the opponent, but still to have practical use as self defense.

Physical conditioning, mental conditioning, and self defense become natural results of judo practice. Maximum efficient use of physical and mental energy with mutual welfare and benefit for all. Perfection of self is the first set in the evolution and perfection of mankind. "Ju" teaches a flowing with people, ideas, events, that enhances mutual welfare and benefit. Judo is a process of being. By giving way, "ju", we discover our own path or "do". Judo becomes more than the physical activity in the dojo (judo hall), it becomes an extension of ourselves to the Universe.

Returning is the motion of the Tao.
Yielding is the way of the Tao.
The ten thousand things are born of being.
Being is born of not being.
(from Tao TeChing)

Judo techniques or "waza" are broken up into three main categories: throwing techniques, holding or mat techniques, and striking techniques. Throwing or Nage-Waza are further broken down into hand, hip, leg, and side sacrifice and rear sacrifice techniques or throws. Mat-work consists of hold-downs, strangulation grips, and elbow joint locks. Atemi waza, or striking methods are only performd in formal judo exercises called kata.

Ukemi, falling practice, is always taught to the novice judoka first. Ukemi teaches the beginner not to fear being thrown. Letting the physical body and ego "give way" to this fear and be thrown forcefully without injury or pain. This is the first way to learn "ju".

The instructor introduces a movement to be practiced. The judokas pair off and fit in for the throw repeatedly without throwing. They concentrate on off balancing, the opponent and proper form. Form practice is done slowly at first, concentrating on form and balance, then faster as the body blends into the movement seemingly without effort.

Sutgeiko, throw away practice, is the next step after uchikomi. The judokas pair off and move around throwing each other as forcefully and fast as possible without losing form, timing or using unnecessary strength. No resistence is offered by the person being thrown. The thrower gets timing, movement, form and practice; faller learns to flow with thrower and has valuable ukemi practice. There is a whirlwind of action in throw away practice, both thrower and fallers' minds remain alert but passive, open to react instantaneously. Strictest attention must be paid to the moment, the movement, the do. As the judoka perfects his-her technique, the body can move unconsciously into a throw, with "no mind" as in Zen meditation.

Element gods frown on IM's

By RUSS SMITH

About four stories ago, I said something to the effect that when spring comes, students look forward to the outdoor sports to show their athletic ability. Then, in my previous article, I said, "This should be an interesting and exciting softball season coming up, providing it doesn't rain."

Well, I was right on both counts - except I forgot to mention it would be an interesting season providing it doesn't snow.

I concluded that because I didn't give equal time to the Snow God, he got mad, thus deciding to send down to us here in Amherst all this white stuff (and before anyone writes a "Letter to the Editor", that wasn't a racist statement!)

So, to the Snow God and the Rain God, "I'm sorry!"

The combination of both demons postponed the entire week of scheduled football and soccer games last week. The Sun God did his best to dry the soaked fields located across from the "Home of the Jocks", Boyden, but his work was usually destroyed the next day. He did a half-decent job on the practice fields adjacent to Brown house and the Women's Phys. Ed. building, making most of the Sylvanites happy - but there's still nothing like playing under the lights!

Monday, the intramural office did manage to sneak in some games in the early evening, and had planned to play some that night, until it was discovered the lights had been shut off, and couldn't be turned back on. It really didn't matter though, because the Rain God came out to play, and would have forced the games to stop.

In any case, here's the rundown on the games that were played. Keep this list, for they may go down in intramural history as the only games played in that "interesting and exciting 1974 spring season"

In men's soccer: The McNamara Magicians, the Chenzos, Smokey Joes, and the Webster Heads all registered opening game, 1-0, shutouts. Meanwhile, the Panthers from Kennedy slipped by the Greenough Grants, 3-2; Squif edged the Stiffs, 2-1; the Black Stars, 3-0, over the Mushrooms; the Wheeler Trojans plastered Adams' Seagram 6's, 4-0, and the Bafos refused to let the Mystical Wizards tricks upset them, and romped over them, 8-0.

In women's softball: the Van Meter Vikings defeated the Chadbourne Chargers, 11-6; the Dupas from Mary Lyons corraled the Wheeler Trojans, 6-2; Cashin choked the Johnson Jocks, 9-5; and the Cubs from Mary Lyons were cooked by the Baker Brownies, 7-4.

In men's softball: There were close and slaughter games played. The Math Department took a 10-9 decision from Ocean Engineering; the Reds snuck by the Nurds, 2-1; and the Stouts upset M-203 (what a name) by the score of 4-2. Now, these are what you call good defensive games! Either that, or bad offensive games!

At the other end of the bat, however, the Thatcher Hemlocks swamped the Hamlin Cheesers, 22-1; the Jokers creamed the Grayson Fudpuckers, 18-4; and Immorrill ran over the Sport Studs, 21-7.

In a 12:20 gym class Monday, the Red Sox blew a 4-2 lead in the seventh (after tieing the game, 2-2, in the sedond); and lost to the Orioles, 7-4.

Erving unanimous all-star

NEW YORK (AP) — Former UMass star Julius Erving, the American Basketball Association's Most Valuable Player and scoring champion this season, was the only unanimous choice on the 1973-74 All-League team announced.

The slender, agile 6-foot-7 forward of the New York Nets received 66 first-team votes and 132 points from sports writers and broadcasters in the 11 league cities.

Erving led the Nets to the East Division title and the best record in the league by winning his second consecutive scoring crown.

Men's gym team may fold

by WALT POWERS

Coach Tom Dunn, whose men's gymnastics teams have compiled a record of 17-6 and produced two all-Americans in two years, will not be rehired after the 1974-75 season, according to UMass Athletic director Frank McInerney.

The decision, which resulted from a recommendation made by McInerney last week and approved by Dean Hischhoff, will mean the almost certain phase-down of the men's program from its current level of competition.

Inflation was cited as the main reason for the decision, which is not final. Dunn was the only UMass coach paid out of the athletic trust fund account, and this money, which pays the salaries of Athletic Financial Manager, Sports Information Dirctor, ticket manager, and three secretaries serving these offices, is paid for by student athletic fees. According to McInerney, money used to pay Dunn's salary would be better used elsewhere.

Because of the situation surrounding Dunn's hiring, the decision was not a complete surprise. In 1972 Dunn, a recent graduate of Penn State College, was hired as a temporary replacement for Erik Kjeldsen, who was on sabbatical. When Kjeldsen retired to devote full time to teaching Dunn was rehired for another year on the athletic trust fund. It was a stopgap measure, and McInerney who took over as Athletic Director in 1972, "Never Both Dunn and McInerney are hopeful that the first possibility can be implemented, and McInerney said he would consider the other two possibilities "only as a last resort." He pointed out, however, "That gymnastics has a large danger element, and because of this required a highly qualified coach." If one were unavailable the program would be phased out.

Probably the only way the men's program would be able to maintain it's current level of competition after next year would be for the Mass. Legislature to approve a request for the institution of a paid gymnastics coaching position, and because of current inflation, this is a highly unlikely possibility.

McInerney had high praise for Dunn as a coach "expressed enormous regret" at the about the phase-down decision. "Five year ago this might not have happened," he said. "But the university has stopped growing and, inflation has hit us harder than we expected." thought of (maintaining) the coach on the trust fund.

McInerney said that Dunn would be rehired for the 1974-75 current season and that all scheduling obligations would be met next year and that all scholarship obligations would be honored for the full four years. After that, the program faces three possibilities: 1. Less competitive New England schedule with part-time coach, 2. Club level competition with a qualified coach and 3. Total elimination. All barber scholarship money for incoming freshmen will be terminated.

To the courts!

By GLENN POSTER

Weather permitting, the UMass tennis team will open their home schedule this afternoon at three o'clock on the courts behind Goodell. The Minutemen will be trying for their first victory of the young season when they host the University of Rhode Island Rams.

This past Monday the team travelled tc Tufts and came up on the short end of a 5-4 score. And in the words of Coach Steve Kosakowski: "We stunk the place out in Medford. It was a very poor showing." And, to top things off, it was the first time since the fifties that Tufts was able to defeat UMass.

In singles play, Chris Post claimed victory by scores of 6-3, 4-6, 6-1. Post, a transfer, drew Tufts' number one player from last year. Don Douglas was outstanding winning in straight sets 6-2, 6-0. Mark Brass was the other singles winner, 6-4, 6-1.

Looking at the other side, Captain Fred Braley didn't show much, losing 2-6, 4-6. Bob Schpeiser, playing in the number one slot, lost to Tufts' sixth seeded player of a year ago. And freshman Barney Kalon had a tough time bowing out 1-6, 0-6.

The fourth team point came from a doubles victory by the team of Douglas and Schpeiser 6-1, 6-2. All the doubles combinations are new this year. Coach Kosakowski indicated that he is still seeking new pairs of doubles partners. However the Schpeiser-Douglas duo will remain intact.

Kosakowski also is planning on possible singles changes for the URI match. David Abramhoff will probably see action from now until the end of the season. Abramhoff didn't get any court time against Tufts because of a groin pull which was not worth risking due to possible loss to the team for the rest of the year.

LOVE LOBS: URI has lost most of their team from last year. The Minutemen won that match 8-1. This will be the first of two meetings with the Rams as they are the host team for this year's Yankee Conference Championship Tournament later this month ... There will be a match vs. Bowdoin Friday at 2 (which wasn't on the schedule originally) and Vermont Saturday at one. Both meets are at home.

Midseason opener

Bruins edge MapleLeafs, 1-0, Gilbert, Sheppard shine

Giles Gilbert turned in a spectacular performance in protecting young Gregg Sheppard's second period goal and the Boston Bruins edged the Toronto Maple Leafs 1-0 last night in the opener of their National Hockey League quarter-final playoff series.

Sheppard cashed his own rebound at 4:22 of the middle session and the Bruins clung to the advantage in a furious windup as Gilbert hung on against six Toronto skaters in the final 96 seconds.

Gilbert, who lost in his only previous playoff game while with Minnesota last year, finished with 35 saves, including nine in the third period.

Doug Favell, a former Boston farm hand, was equally spectacular in the Toronto goal with 38 saves in the close-checking series opener before 15,000 fans at Boston Garden.

Favell was pulled in favor of a sixth skater as Toronto made a desperate move to tie the count with 1:26 remaining and a faceoff in the Boston zone. However, Gilbert smothered the puck in a big pile-up in his crease with 1:11 to go and the Bruins didn't give the Maple Leaf's another chance, despite two more faceoffs to their goalie's left. Toronto, which had beaten Boston only twice in six regular season meetings, upset the high-scoring Bruins with tight forechecking and tenacious back-checking. The combination of the checking and Favell's goal tending frustrated the Bruins who made a run away of the NHL East while scoring 349 goals in the regular campaign.

Sheppard picked up a loose puck, spun around and fired at Favell early in the second period. The puck came right back to the fiery center, and he beat Favell with a 15-footer to the goalie's glove side for the game's only goal.

Gilbert robbed Ron Ellis at the corner late in the second period but saved his most exciting efforts for the finale. Midway through the third period, Gilbert stopped a Paul Henderson shot with his face mask. Then, while trying to regain his feet, the goalie's arm blocked a shot by Norm Ullman.

Later, Gilbert turned in fine saves on Eddie Shack, Ian Turnbull, Jim McKenny and Ellis.

The two teams meet in the second game of the series at the Garden Thursday night before moving on to games three and four in Toronto Saturday and Sunday.

Lacrosse postponed

The lacrosse game between UMass Wesleyan of Connecticut, originally scheduled for yesterday, was postponed. Both teams will try again today at 3 p.m. at Wesleyan, weather permitting. The next game for UMass will be an away game at the University of Connecticut, starting at 10:30 a.m. on Saturday.

Toronto Northmen get cold shoulder

OTTAWA (AP) - Legislation that bans operation of foreign professional football teams except for exhibition games was introduced in Canada's House of Commons Wednesday by Health Minister Marc Lalonde.

The bill's immediate objective is to prevent the Toronto Northmen of the World Football League from operating in Canada.

But the stated long-term objective of the government is to prevent any American leagues from operating in Canada and thus hurting attendance at Canadian Football League games.

The bill also sets a Canadian content rule for Canadian football teams.

In 1974, the present Canadian Football League limit of 15 imports is allowed to stand. But in the future, the number of imports would not exceed 15, or 40 per cent of all players on the roster.

Golfers try again

Instead of staying home and practicing their putting on the living room rug, the UMass Golf team will try once again to get the season underway, when they travel to New Haven this afternoon for a match with Yale.

Snowed out of their match with Rhode Island on Tuesday, and their home course, Hickory Ridge C.C. still blanketed with the white stuff forced Coach Fan Gaudette to switch the originally scheduled home match to Yale.

Friday's scheduled tri-match with Springfield and Vermont has also been canceled. The Springfield match will be made up as part of a tri-meet with Coast Guard at Hickory Ridge on May 6. Since UMass will meet Rhode Island and Vermont in the New England and YanCon championships, the canceled matches will not be re-scheduled.

Expo projection

Henry Aaron wasted no time in putting Babe Ruth away as the major league baseball season began for most teams. The Braves opened their season a week ago. The Montreal Expos have yet to play. So, with apologies to laugh-in, here is a story of the future.

MONTREAL — July 10: The Expos opened the 1974 season today by winning baseball's first triple-header. They defeated, in chronological order, the Chicago Cubs, Los Angeles Dodgers, and New York Mets. The festivities began a half-hour before game time at Jerry Park, 7:30 a.m., when one of Canada's new immigrants, Richard Nixon, sang the Star Spangled Banner and then O Canada. His French was terrible. As at all opening day ceremonies, the teams were introduced along each baseline. The visitor's side of the field attracted quite a crowd stretching from home plate to the left-field fence. Then the Expos were introduced.

Commissioner Bowie Kuhn threw out the first pitch. Kuhn also ordered that Ron Hunt must play every game because he was chasing the all-time record for being hit by a pitch the most times in a career. Then the game got underway. The first Cub batter stepped to the plate at 8:02 a.m. Pitcher Steve Rogers stifled a yawn and then threw a fastball past Vic Harris for a called strike. Immediately the crowd rose to its feet to give Rogers a standing ovation. The noise managed to awaken him, but he didn't realize where he was. He recalled standing on a hill like this one day last March down in sunny West Palm Beach, Florida. He thought that the reason for the ovation was that someone was going to hand him the ten commandments. History has a way of repeating itself, thought Rogers.

Manager Gene Mauch noticed that Rogers couldn't find himself out on the mound and decided then and there that he was going to change pitchers. Mauch opened a road map in order to try and find the best route out to Rogers. He decided not to take the scenic route because he didn't want to waste any time with three games on the schedule. Mauch figured that the shortest distance between two points was a straight line, so he walked straight out to Rogers.

Arriving at the mound, Mauch didn't know what he and Rogers were going to discuss. Rogers stayed in the game as Mauch returned to the dugout. Rogers went on to hurl a shutout and is now considered a prime candidate for next week's All Star game. He's had a great season so far.

The Expos went on towin the remaining two games of the day. Willie Davis played in two of the games going six-for-eight and has an incredible .667 batting average at this point of the season. And the team is undefeated.

Tomorrow the Expos take to the road for the first time in 1974. They have another triple-header in San Diego, Atlanta, and Philadelphia. Rumor has it that Mauch is going to split the squad up.

INTERVIEW WITH CHARLES CAMERON

Tiny Imperfections of Freedom

by Jerry Lazar

Who is this teenage Indian boy who, in the short span of a few years, has attracted nearly sixty thousand followers in this country and over six million devotees worldwide?

"He is the most sensitive person I have ever come across," according to Charles Cameron, editor of the paperback best seller Who Is Guru Maharaj Ji?

"Who is this teenage Indian boy?"

Cameron, a former theology student at Oxford University in England, and himself a devotee of Guru Maharaj Ji for the past five years, explained in a recent interview how and why the collection of essays came to be published.

"Part of the idea," said Cameron, "was that one of the saddest things in the world is someone who is so enthusiastic about something wonderful that nobody could bear to hear them talk about it." Hence, he continued, the book gives the public a chance to look into the Guru Maharaj Ji phenomenon "in their own houses, with their doors locked, their slippers off, with a cup of coffee ... without feeling any pressure. I think there are many, many people who are interested in finding out a bit about Guru Maharaj Ji," he said.

"He is the most sensative person I have ever come across."

And if sales figures are any indication, then it seems more and more people are indeed looking into the adolescent Guru. Published in November, 1973 by Penguin, the book sold 100,000 copies in 45 days, "which is O.K. for a non-fiction book," said Cameron.

Cameron was writing for And It Is Divine, the monthly publication of Guru Maharaj Ji's Divine Light Mission, when he was asked to edit and compile a book explaining the Guru to the public.

"I was involved enough in the magazine that when discussion of the book came up, I thought I was safely out of it," he said. "So I started making suggestions, and they turned around to me and said, 'Look who's making suggestions'!".

Some of the essays had already been written or spoken, said Cameron, and others he solicited. He worked with three other writers and some typists in New York for a month, he said, "and suddenly there was a book."

Although the book contains speeches by Guru Maharaj Ji and members of his family, the Guru's involvement with the book was "only to inspire it," said Cameron.

All royalties from the book go to the Divine Light Mission, said Cameron.

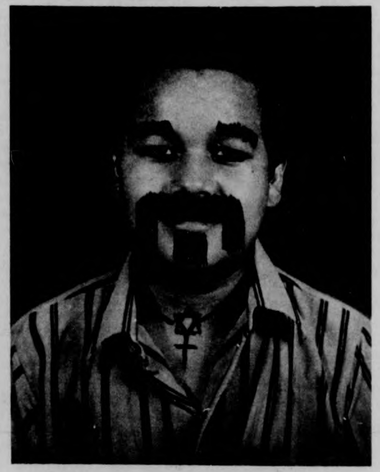
"The Divine Light Mission has been supporting me for years without ever asking me to make any contribution," he said. "I am one of two thousand people in the States who are so convinced that we have received a most previous gift of our life from Guru Maharaj Ji that we have dedicated all our time and talents to these various services which he is recommending."

"There are 1001 different responses to this situation. . ."

The contents of the book include:

— an introduction by Rennie Davis (of Chicago 7 fame);

— a section on meditation as taught by the Guru;



The idiot bastard son?

— a thesis by a medical doctor theorizing how the Guru's meditation might be related to the glandular and nervous system ("It can't be proven at the moment," noted Cameron);

— how the Guru's meditation relates to physics and sociology ("We're actually light," commented Cameron, "but the shape we're adopting is 'us'. It's a validation of what the Scriptures have always said — our original nature is light. I'm sure there is a science which we will get to in the near future based on the energies that are inside the human mind.");

— a question and answer session with the Guru, conducted with different people at different times;

— a section in which 22 people give personal accounts of their experiences in 'coming to the Guru', including the Secretary-General of the Swiss Bible Society, a primal therapist who is a personal friend of Leon Trotsky, an 84-year-old lady, a nine-year-old child, an ex-president of a Hare Krishna chapter, and Cameron himself.

Why did so many people catch on to Guru Maharaj Ji so quickly? Cameron attributes the Guru's sudden growth in popularity to a situation in which we are mistreating our planet and each other, and when that happens enough he said, there is an automatic reaction in people's hearts as they want to see a loving and sincere society established.

"There are 1001 different responses to this situation," Cameron continued, "ranging from people who chant mantras to ecological activists to political coordinators. All of these things are manifestations of a sincerity that's coming out in people. There's a sincerity revolution going on on Planet Earth," concluded Cameron, "and the followers of Guru Maharaj Ji are one aspect of that."

Cameron is giving religious poems one voice.

Prior to his involvement with the Divine Light Mission, Cameron considered himself an "independent Christian" and "a writer in a private sort of way," he said, composing bits of Haiku and "avant garde type of literature that meant something to me and maybe five other poets."

A few of his early poems were published in a Penguin anthology of poetry, Children of Albion (1969).

Cameron now spends most of his time writing and speaking about Guru Maharaj Ji. He was on thirty radio talk shows throughout New England in February, and is currently working on a book of poems "from all different religions in the world, trying to give them one voice."

His own poetry displays a boyish brevity and simplicity, ("water- has no time-to practice falling"; or, "the facts cannot lie-before a bird can learn to land-it has to fly"), not unlike the sayings and teachings of Guru Maharaj Ji himself.

Cameron was the man responsible for converting Rennie Davis, whom he met on an airplane to Paris.

"(Rennie) was basically ready to retire and practice some form of meditation," explained Cameron, "but the form of meditation he'd have practiced would have been a withdrawal. So I said to him, if what he was practicing was really life, then it wouldn't involve withdrawal, but that it would involve recharging.

"So far, he had been on the interface of politics, which was action, but not finding the inside springs of that action. Now he was going to try to find the inside springs by taking himself away from action. But unless the inside springs were really there, then they would be somewhere where those two things met ...

"Anyway, in the course of several conversations, he came to India with us. Essentially, all the people he met in India who were around Guru Maharaj Ji, or who had been with him at some time or another previously in one of the various phases of his growth — (Rennie) found that they were working with greater harmony than any part of the peace movement, the Black movement, the women's movement, or any movement he'd ever been in.

"That was basically the thing that carried conviction for him," he said. "People were working together on an organizational level as intensely as he'd ever seen, without the normal friction that intensity would bring."

Ma Barker's Skirt a Bit Tough

THE FIVE COLLEGE CULINARY GUIDE

At the corner of University Drive and Route 9 in Amherst there lurks a restaurant known as the Steak Out. It's hard to explain exactly what the interior design of the place is like, however, it's not the kind of joint Bonnie and Clyde and the rest of the gang whose pictures adorn the walls, were used to. Let it suffice to say that it's very modern and tries to create the impression of being classy. Whether it succeeds depends upon your taste.

Once seated, a menu is presented to you with a picture of your favorite gangster on the cover. After ordering, there is time for casing the salad bar which we found to be fairly good. Be sure to try the bean salad as that was probably the best item in that department. The menu consists of the standard steak house fare as well as a selection of Italian and sea foods. From the steak house section we sampled Big Al's Chicago Style Sirloin ($5.50) which was very good as it should be in view of the price. A less expensive steak which we considered to be a better buy was Ma Barker's Skirt Steak ($3.75). It's a bit tougher than the sirloin, but together with the salad bar is well worth the price.

The Steak Out does better with steaks than with the other items we tried. Little Caesar's Stuffed Shrimp ($6.25) was mediocre. The shrimp itself was good, but the dressing, which lacked body, was uninspired. The Eggplant Parmigiana ($3.95) was a bit overcooked which made it mushy. The spaghetti that came with it reminded us of a commercial spaghetti a la Franco American. As a side dish we order Ruby's sauteed mushrooms and had our feelings about canned mushrooms reinforced. The baked potato is an extra (45c).

From the dessert menu we tried cheesecake (85c), chocolate Bavarian Cream pie (65c) and a chocolate sundae (50c). The cheesecake was excellent. Not nearly as good was the Chocolate Bavarian Cream pie which was fair. The sundae made with dairy whip was good enough. They also offer beer, wine and mixed drinks. The Steak Out is available for functions with room for parties up to 80. They have a happy hour daily from 4:30 to 7:00 p.m.

Overall we enjoyed the evening. We recommend the steaks above the other items. If you want to spend a little money on a steak dinner you might like the Steak Out.

What is this PB?

B.T.S.: Would you like to talk about some of the comedians who've influenced your work?

Proc.: Albert Brooks, because he is a master of the put-on; and his real name, by the way--you may not believe this, but believe me it's true--He's Bob Einstein's brother, and his real name is Albert Einstein. And he changed his name to Brooks because of course no one would believe it. But I believe he was responsible for spreading the rumour that Albert Einstein, before he became a great physicist, was a silent-film comedian. I heard someone like Fernando Lamas, or somebody on the Carson show about eight months ago, very seriously espousing this bit of information, and I saw it in print, and I'm sure it was Albert Brooks who did it--If it wasn't it was still very much in keeping with his...He's a very, very fine comedian and put-on artist.

Berg.: And Bob and Ray. I just heard a thing of their's again; I'd forgotten how brilliant ...

Proc.: They had an enormous influence on me — they and Ernie Kovacs. I used to write in to them, and they'd read my cards and letters on the air — I have tapes of this from the 50's. I have tapes of some of their funniest routines, I have tapes of all the times that they broke up this guy, Peter Roberts, who was the newscaster on W ... whatever it was in New York. Anyway, they had a tremendous influence on me, and Peter as well, and Ernie Kovacs had a tremendous influence on me as far as surrealism goes, and no one has equalled him yet. I've recently become acquainted with his family; Edie Adams, and a fellow named Marty Mills, who was a manager in show business and knew Ernie quite well. And I've found out various things about why, for instance, nobody has picked up the gauntlet that he threw down and carried on with surrealism on television: Basically it was because Kovacs never cared about cost; he never cared how much it cost in time or money. He created one effect, for instance, where a used car salesman, a guy is selling a car. and he taps the car on the fender and the entire car falls apart. And that breakaway car cost them, I don't know, twenty thousand dollars to construct. And when Kovacs died, tragically and suddenly, or absurdly, he was very, very much in debt. And it took his wife, with the help of the show-business community, really, many, many years to work off all of his debts. But the result, the gift that he gave to America and to the world was a fantastic surrealist comedy. Just the most wonderful, wonderful things, and they came out of very simple ideas that he evolved, working on kind of local television and which, as his ability to budget expanded, got into much more elaborate manifestations of very simple comedic ideas.

All right, contemporarily there are a few other comedians who we respect, when we discuss this among ourselves. George Carlin is one; he's a very brave comedian.

Berg.: I, myself, am not all that familiar ...

Proc.; I had that record, his A.M.&F.M. record, which is very fine ... especially the 'dirty words' section. I wish Peter had heard it; I lent it to someone and they liked it so much that they melted it down and ate it.

Better Letter

To the Editor, Below The Salt:

I am writing in response to Timothy P. Wallbridge's article on Everywoman's Center. I was one of the staffwomen Timothy interviewed at EWC. In the two hours we talked it, of course, was impossible to explore in depth the questions raised in his article. I would like to take this opportunity to expand the dialogue. While these are my own personal views, my year and a half working at Everywoman's Center has played an enormous part in shaping them.

I perceive the ultimate goal of Women's Liberation to be a society in which oppression no longer exists, in which each person receives the opportunity, support and encouragement to fulfill human potential, whatever that may be. Some major blocks to our attaining that goal are the cultural attitudes and social structures that deny us a potential, let alone encourage us to pursue it. In this culture we are victims of oppression in one form or many.

Oppression I essentially define as a conflict in values in which one set of values is imposed at the price of other values, namely those concerned with self-determination. Oppression denies the possibility of our creating a society in which no oppression exists. Our culture values hard work and achieving success. This in itself may not be oppressive, but defining for others what work and what kind of success is approved and rewarded is oppressive, it denies us choice. That oppression might be as blatant as denying us the opportunity to enter a career field because of our age, class, race, class or sex; or it might be as subtle as destroying our creativity by grading-reward systems in elementary school that encourage conformity.

Individually I have had to struggle against many facets of oppression; institutions and people's preconceptions of what I am capable of-not capable of because of where I come from, my sex, what I look like, the vocabulary I use, etc. Everyone can compile their own unique list of the labels that so effectively pigeonhole and limit us. Perhaps someday we can live in a world without those labels.

How we're all going to get there I'm not sure. One way to start on that path is to become conscious of our actions and their meanings in order to question them and create new ways of relating that seem more positive. Feminism, to me, while having an ultimate goal of universal Personhood, focuses on identifying and changing those forms of oppression that apply values on the basis of sex, a system called sexism.

While all of us as people with gender are affected by sexism, the roles arbitrarily assigned to women are more limiting and self-destructive than those assigned to men. Women as a caste are the victims of oppression. For this reason the initial efforts of feminists are directed toward women, taking care of the critically wounded while the walking wounded give each other first aid. Maybe we'll all survive that way.

The Women's Movement has sometimes been criticized for excluding men. It usually comes from an ignorance of the affects of oppression on the oppressed. Some of the affects are feelings of inferiority, helplessness and self-degradation. At this stage in our culture most women have to some degree internalized negative feelings toward themselves as women.

Much of the negative feeling comes from an inability to conform to the roles prescribed to us as women. Many of us, rather than questioning the validity of those roles, have placed the blame on ourselves, felt like failures. One of the things that the Women's Movement has discovered is that by sharing our feelings and experiences as women we can help each other sort out the externally imposed roles-values from our true capabilities. This process is called consciousness raising. Admitting that we do not conform is one of the first steps in the process, and that step is more easily taken when we are along with other women, away from those that traditionally pressure us to conform.

In our society the people who control the major systems that teach cultural values, education, religion, politics, economics and the media, are white men. Since these are the institutions that primarily foster sexism, and are controlled by men, it should not be too surprising that women find it more productive to do consciousness raising without men present; that women find it easier to act against sexism with people who share similar perceptions and values, who can be supportive and affirming.

Many men resent being excluded from this process. It is hard to explain to them that their exclusion is for their benefit also, that it is a necessary stage in human growth. The CR process of course can be, and is, used by men. It is also used by men and women together. Each variation however seems to focus on different facets of oppression, and which kind of group is most appropriate depends on the individual's needs. Men because of role definition are affected differently by sexism, and an exploration of that internalization process is most effectively achieved by a homogeneous group. A woman couldn't contribute much to a man's group exploring the effect of locker room jokes and the first jock strap on their self-concepts. Conversely a man would have trouble contributing much to a women's group about the experience of being a woman. The place to share how we affect each other as men and women would obviously be in a mixed group where people were there for those purposes.

In the meantime I and many other women have a need to share and support each other in order to overcome the handicaps limiting us because we were born female. I see my work at Everywomen's Center as part of my growth as a person, and a way of fostering growth of other women, The University, by supporting EWC logistically, is recognizing that damaging limits have been placed on women because of their sex, that there are ways in which the damage to individuals can be repaired, and that institutions as well as individuals can change so that the damage does not continue to be inflicted.

At the present, EWC and residential area women's centers are the only groups seriously committed to creating alternatives to meet the needs of women in the University community. What we are learning we are sharing with others, and when all components of the University, institutional as well as individual, recognize and respond to these needs we will no longer need women's centers; we will have taken an immense step forward toward human liberation.

CHAIRMAN MAO ON THE CAMPUS CENTER

by Walter Jonas

As I was walking back to school this afternoon from the center of town, I stopped by a store that I thought might sell seeds for the snow peas I wanted to grow this Spring. (Chinese, you know.) Well, they didn't have any, but I did notice on the wall an urgent message from "The Farm" in "Southwestern Tennessee." It seems that Steve Gaskin had been busted. His friends call him Steven, or Saint Steven. he was busted for growing a different sort of plant, and will spend about three years in jail for it, all of the appeals having already run out.

It upset me, because I have a lot of respect for Steven "Be Here Now" Gaskin. He used to get together with anyone who wanted to come at the Family Dog on the Great Highway in San Francisco, and rap, that is talk, and he made a most excellent right reverend, because what he did there was articulate the mood of the room — perhaps a thousand people — and actually get people together. A truly religious kind of thing.

"Now he's in jail, a person of love and brotherhood, for exercising what he considers to be his religious beliefs. As he says, at least he's now got a captive audience.

Now there's nothing anyone can do about it, and I'm sure that in God's good time he will get out and continue to live his life as he sees fit. But I felt I had to write a letter to everyone, I guess, because the word had to be spread.

There are some things that we can do something about, but for a variety of reasons, some soon to become clear, I was not going to write of them. Bob Foster wrote a column called "Centralism," whatever he means by that I'm not sure, and I was already upset by, among other things, the fact that Steven Gaskin is in jail, and that column needed answering, and I might as well do it as anyone else, and pose useless kinds of rhetorical questions such as:

a) Why don't the people of the university, in particular the students, get involved in local politics so they might lower their rents or prices, or get more buses, or all those kinds of things that a local government could provide to its poorer citizens?

b) Why do the students of the university allow it to charge substantial room fees, to pay off the dorms built, and then, when those dorms are paid for , simply transmute them into office buildings without refunding the equity to the other dorms for much needed improvements?

c) Why, after the students hire one of the best men in the country to be director of the Campus Center, do the students allow him to them continue the direction as before, that is, gaddam it John, the Hatch still stinks and it's because the Fryolator has no working exhaust fan, at least, and I still can't figure out where any particular book is in the bookstore ...

d) Did you know that I talked to a sophomore at the University of Vermont on Friday night, and he said that he liked the dining commons food there, and it costs about the same as here?

e) Don't you care enough to try to change the conditions you must live in if you are a student here?

The point is that a profoundly illiterate and poor population transformed itself, I believe, into a relatively just and egalitarian society with the help of what is referred to in abbreviated form as Mao's Thought. It might be better translated as participatory democracy. I'm going to let it shine.

"There are a lot of assholes here," said one administrator to me in Whitmore. "There is nothing I can do," said another. A third said, "Why don't you give me a job?", but then he's no longer there. In spite of all that, I still think the job of being a university administrator is a pretty thankless task.

We can, however, reward the "good" ones, convince them to stay, because they need the support, if we ourselves get together, tell them what we want, and see if they come through with the goods. As far as I can tell, though, your standards for good administration are different from mine.

The problem is not decentralization, or centralization. It is guts, courage or whatever, and imagination, combined with technical expertise. The problem is not "maintaining efficiency and continuity" around these parts; it is establishing efficiency within a self-perpetuating, continuous framework. I don't know if it can be done, but at least, it seems, the attempt is being made.

Back in colonial times, one recalcitrant Northampton Tory was kept over night in a smokehouse "until his colors changed." After the revolution, some of the common folk around here continued to fight for an egalitarian society against the monied interests in Boston. We call that Shay's Rebellion. They lost. We might win if we forced some of our contemporary Tories to spend a few days in the Hatch. I don't think the color of snow peas or marijuana is that ugly.

It's farewell — welfare time again, folks. I am resigning as Mike Kostek's flunkie for politics. No argument with Mike or any of our germinating staff. I'd just like to take the last few weeks of school a bit more easily, and I have independent projects (counselling in Greenough; helping the Jazz Society get funding; making pains to be sure I graduate by the end of the year (with loudness); and the like), and I can't do them all and edit at the same time.

Quitting entirely? No! And that's the exciting part (get ready — this is FUN!!!): I'll still be doing record reviews, features for the paper, etc. PLUS one radio spot a week on WSYL (97.7 FM), and, of course, the esoteric Edge City from 2-6 a.m. Friday nite (actually Saturday Morning) for WMUA, the "station of the cow" with Sacred Cowboy Andrew MacKenzie. Pick us up....and throw us away. Meanwhile, I'd like to thank all the people who've helped me with the page through the past weeks — me, Tom Hayden (courtesy Rolling Stone), Noel Connelly, Mike K., Dennis Simkoski, B. J. Roche, Bob Callahan, etc. People like this (and of course, George) made the political situation on this campus look more hopeful. Committed and honest people are what we need. Thank you...and everyone won.

THIS PAGE WILL NOT DIE HOWEVER. As of NEXT WEEK, we have a handpicked replacement taking over the realm of politics for Below the Salt — political reporter of the first rank MARK VOGLER. Mark will be presenting his own format (which is his write), but we'll still have space for additional, worthy items, as I have done in the past.

Want to get in touch? We still need you, you know. And, if you can't find the office, I'm in the UMass directory.

Concentrated Meaning In Found Objects

by Anne Hamburger

Dan Graham, a New York video and film artist, and Paul McMahon, a Boston artist, came to the student gallery Monday night to discuss and show their works. Dan Graham is known as one of the forerunners of conceptual art. Paul McMahon believes the original precepts of conceptual work have already been established and to work in this fashion would be a repetition of others' ideas. Thus his work is visually orientated with conceptual overtones. Project Incorporated is a non-profit gallery that Paul McMahon organized to bring artists into the Boston area. Realizing the needs of students and unknown artists to show their work, McMahon will review anyone that brings in a portfolio.

McMahon discussed and showed slides of his work which illustrated many different ideas. He explained that a prime objective of his work was enacting a process upon an object which changes its meaning by calling attention to certain characteristics that wouldn't normally be noticed. One piece, "The Rape of the Fashion Model", is an effective example of this. A picture of Marilyn Monroe was partially covered with white pieces of paper accenting the sexuality of her pose.

The main flaw in McMahon's work lies in the ambiguity of his statements. Without an explanation, some of his work was unclear. His show did provide an interesting perspective on visual art which incorporates idea with aesthetics.

Dan Graham spoke after McMahon, verbally and visually communicating some very exciting ideas. Previously dealing with films and presently working with video, he defines the difference between the mediums, stating that film deals with past time and video deals with the present. His work deals with how mutual interaction between persons affects their individual behavior. Dan Graham sometimes acts as one of the interacting parties which then involves his intent for the piece. This intent manifests itself by the role that he chooses to play. Graham directs one of the persons to play an objective role, while another is to act subjectively. He defines subjectivity as a representation of a person's internal feelings and how they are conveyed through body language. The objective person films the subjective person analytically, revealing the other person's behavior. Often the objective person displays behavior that is equally subjective. Graham, in a performance piece, describes the audience's physical behavior which exposes their mental state of being. By describing this behavior, through their feedback, he is told how he appears to others, altering or changing his own behavior.

THE NAIVE FARMER

there is a saintly tree out in our yard even in the still of day always a breeze under her its leaves so thick that when it rains
the witches hide under it the only trouble is we are so busy
we never get to sit under it much

I guess in the cities the rich people sit under the air conditioners except maybe their busy getting rich and the poor people in the city they don't work to much but they have nothing to sit under except a hot bar or a leaky roof

I do know one thing beneath my field and feet under the dirt lies God

in the city below the pavement lies the dirt
then God

Mad on Penn. Ave.

by Kathi Coleman

It started as I strolled through the National Portrait Gallery. I studied a portrait of one of the few historic women contained there, Harriet Beecher Stowe. There was a short biography beside the portrait stating that she was in a trance the last ten years of her life.

Then as I wandered, I wondered in my mind about madness. What ever happened to raving madness? Is it extinct or are those afflicted locked away or was it only a pheonomenon that vanished with the nineteenth century? The danger is such questioning is that sometimes there is an answer.

The end of springbreak had come and I waited in the D.C. rain, umbrella in hand, for my ride back to UMass. The directions were simple enough, I could not understand why my ride was delayed as I stood on one side of a parksplit by Pennsylvania Avenue. The friend I had stayed with was in the doorway, she had no umbrella, and frequently I turned to exchange last minute pleasantries and reflections of the week. I was completely content in the rain, basking in my memories of the week past: a Shawn Phillips concert at JFK Center, being questioned by the capitol cops, a day in Williamsburg, VA., enjoying friendships and acquaintances, Georgetown nightlife and all the eloquent historical settings. It seemed close to perfection and I shared these varied delights with my friend.

When I turned back to face the street and look for a glimpse of my lost ride, she arrived. She stood adjacent to me with only the low wrought iron gate between us, a profoundly lost expression suppressed her face. I wanted to be of assistance to this peculiar old figure crowned by her foaming white hair and leaky umbrella. I inquired if she was lost. She replied from somewhere else that she had had too much of "whatever it was" and was looking for some incomprehensibly pronounced liquor store on a distant street. As she spoke, she displayed her blackened teeth and I was overwhelmed by the sacrilegious nature of a grandmother image drunk before eleven a.m.

I pointed in the direction of the street in question but she did not turn her head. Her gaze was molded to my face.

She asked for a cigarette. I had none.

I suggested a liquor store across the street. As she pressed against the gate, she was emphatically opposed to the suggestion because her "mama and papa" would find out.

She recognized the beauty in the surrounding circumstance, the soft rain. She pointed to some dewy drops on an overhanging bush from next door, expressing simply, "I like beauty." Then she broke off the sprig. I had to agree with her, the bizarre quality she added to the instant make the beauty pervertedly more intense.

She decrepitly stretched out her ancient hand, imploring, "Touch me." The situation became uniquely religious, I was stunned. I grasped her hot hand in my cold one. It was an intimate exchange, as I mentally patted myself on the back for being so bighearted to this creature who only desired human companionship in the form of a brief tactile contact.

I thought she would be satisfied with this and consider it an end. Wrong. She pleaded, "Kiss me," as her hand brushed her almost decaying cheek. I could not do it.

She took the rejection slowly before speaking, "It doesn't matter, you'll never see me again. But I'll find you."

The eeriness overtook me and my gaze must have been as intense as hers. She broke, "Get that dumb look off your face." I tried and she continued, "We're not here you know. We're somewhere else. In the thirteenth century, that is where I am and where we are all going. You may not believe me but it's true."

I had to get away and made an excuse about making a phone call. When I returned, she was physically gone and I cannot say I was sorry.

All things fade in the mind and I am sure she will leave mine with time. Yet, I will not be able to escape a quick glance over my shoulder when I am alone at night, just to make sure.

Sonny Rollins – Musical Colossus

by John Cahill

Live Music:
Sonny Rollins
Paul's Mall
April 5

Saxophonist Sonny Rollins walked into the seating area of Paul's Mall through a side door and began to play his opening number, "Alfie's Theme," sans rhythm, as he strolled about in the crowd. As inauspiciously as that, one of the greatest living jazz giants began his first set last Friday night during his week long Boston appearance.

Theodore Walter Rollins has been such an important tenor saxophonist and overall musician for the last 25 years that any praise offered here would be second-hand. Instead, one should hear and evaluate his music as he plays it today, for it is that, more than "Freedom Suite," more than "East Broadway" "Rundown", that is the essence of the forward-thinking Rollins. And the music played Friday night was the finest that I have ever heard live.

The tunes used by Sonny were his usual ones: the calypso "St. Thomas" bluesish things like "Sonnymoon for Two" and "Alfie's Theme" and the graceful, timeless "Poinciana." Once having entered the songs, however, Rollins improvises his own melodies, and I mean true melodies, as if they had been thought over and written out beforehand. His solos are not the typical jazz saxophone progressions one hears; they are songs, and he sings them exuberantly, warmly, gracefully with such infallible rhythm and sureness that as you listen, they instantly become classic statements, not merely lucky experiments.

Augmented by a latin percussionist, Sonny's group sounded tight, despite an inexperienced pick-up drummer. Guitarist Masuo's style is maturing quickly because of the demanding context in which he is placed, as a foil for Rollins' brilliant improvs. His solo on "Poinciana" was a fine piece of work, equalling Sonny's remarkable preceding solo, and wasting not a note in its considerable length. Roland Wilson on Fender bass and the Japanese pianist whose name I could not catch performed ably both in solo and section work.

It was Sonny though that fixed the look of awe on the faces of each and every member of the audience, be they hip musicians, earnest fans or casual newcomers. It was clear Sonny was feeling very up for playing when, after a crowd rousing, up-tempo solo by Masuo on "Oleo", Rollins steamed in and blew the guitarist away with his first four bars and followed that with five choruses of go-go creativity that would not quit. The brilliant ten minute unaccompanied ballad that he wove together so perfectly as he played forced cries of wonder from people's throats, mine included, as we heard music so beautiful that we could not believe that anyone would dare play it to the extent that Rollins was doing.

Sonny Rollins has reached the point where a tremendously high level of creativity in his playing is so constant that it is standard. He is a musical colossus and a true colossus will always stand.

LET ME IN YOUR LIFE—
ARETHA FRANKLIN (Atlantic SD 7292)
Total Playing Time: 42:43

Already a legendary performer, Aretha Franklin manages to strengthen her ever growing legacy with each new record she makes. In its consistency, Let Me In Your Life is reminiscent of her beautiful Young, Gifted and Black of a couple years ago. The material on both is a combination of her interpretations of hits and lesser known songs of other artists, and a sprinkling of her own writing. On this latest album, her own "Oh Baby" and "If You Don't Think" come off with the same sparkling glow as marked her earlier originals, "Rock Steady" and "Daydreaming", so it is somewhat of a disappointment that she doesn't write and perform more of her own songs.

Yet Aretha makes everything that she does utterly worthwhile. "The Masquerade is Over" and "Eight Days on the Road" showcase the full richness of her voice, while her renditions of the perhaps too familiar "With Pen in Hand" and "A Song for You" make all other versions obsolete.

In addition, Let Me In Your Life contains Stevie Wonder et als' "Until You Come Back to Me" which has surprisingly (from 'sleeper' to 18 weeks on the Billboard charts) turned into one of Aretha's greatest hits, as well as dramatic versions of Bobby Womack's "I'm In Love" (Wilson Pickett's hit and Aretha's latest single) and Ashford and Simpson's "Ain't Nothing Like the Real Thing", popularized, though done quite differently, by Marvin Gaye and Tammi Tarrell.

Thanks to the production of Jerry Wexler and company, the arrangements of Arif Marden, and the generally superior quality of the whole recording, we have legendary performances for the relatively modest price of $5.98 list. Thank you Aretha, we appreciate you.

THE TALBOT BROTHERS - THE TALBOT BROTHERS
(Warner Bros. BS 2767)

After a woefully slow start with an overly folked-up version of Little Feat's hot biscuit "Easy to Slip", The Mason Proffit brothers get down to business with a set which recalls the early country-rock days of the Proffit. It is disappointing that the brothers have stuck religiously to their familiar themes: trucking, the American Indian, and Jesus, rather than moving on to something new. Although John Talbot's voice is as mellow as ever, and despite Sneaky Pete's steel, Russ Kunkel's drums, and John Jarvis' piano, the record lacks the memorable material which brothers John and Terry have demonstrated their capacity to write in the past. There is nothing close to a "Good Friend of Mary", "Everybody Was Wrong", "Two Hangmen", or "Buffalo" here.

In all, a relaxing, country-folk-rock record for a non-discriminating mood, but the Talbots can do better. Their best is still to be found on the first two Happy Tiger Mason Proffit recordings, recently re-released on Warner Bros. under the title Come and Gone.

BO HANSSON—MAGICIAN'S HAT
(The Famous Charisma Label)

BO HANSSON
Distributed by Atlantic Records

A wonderfully interesting album by one of that singular breed of talented Scandinavian musicians. Hansson, on organs, guitars, bass, synthesizers and mellotron, is making his U.S. album debut aided by ten of his commendable countrymen, including Bobo Stenson on electric piano, known for his work with Jan Garbarek, Terje Rypdal and the Swedish quartet Rena Rama. The album's strengths lie in the very individual musical ideas conceived by Hansson and the complex cohesive arrangements he designs. Quick, but subtle time switches by the drummers direct, rather than push the group along, and the reed passages are beautifully voiced. Hansson's music, not his playing, is the dominant force. Magician's Hat seems to be an album that welcomes regular listening, yet maintains its depth of stimulation. And that, friends, is a sign of something very good.

—John Cahill

STRING DRIVEN THANG—THE MACHINE THAT CRIED (Atlantic

It's really good to hear an album of some quality, minus the junk fillers usually passed off as songs. Side Two is interestingly mellow, with well-done harmonies involving Pauline Adam's raspy voice against Chris Adams'. If you tend to make judgements on the first song on the side, try to wait out the first three 3:05 minutes in a friend's closet; Pauline lacks something on "Two timin' Rama", probably another voice. If you can overlook that, "Traveling" and "People on the street" will equal it out. Side One involved extensive instrumentals on "Hearfeeder", even the six minute cuts are interesting and never drag; a rarity.

—Lori Ann Yeslow

CULMINATION— JAMES VINCENT (Columbia)

Vincent's solo album is entitled Culmination, and predictably contains lyrical and melodic statements from his culmination point (the recording studio?). Good reason for putting out an album?

Questionable. The sparse lyrical content is cloudy, self-indulgent introspect. It means a lot to Vincent, but not a whole hell of a lot to the listener. The music, however is another story and merits description in more detail.

The sidemen for this session are extremely competent, including musicians George Marsh and Clyde Graves, whom I respect for their percussion work and bass playing (respectively) for Jerry Hahn, that fine guitarist and leader of the Brotherhood. Howard Wales is present as keyboard man, and is most noticable for his boorish, Deadish sans soul noodling on synthesizer and organ. (By the way, you can catch more of that boorish, Deadish noodling on an LP he did with J. Garcia entitled Hooteroll?). The Pointer Sisters point out their presence on the album with three or four bars of their inimitable "do-do-DO-de-DO's". And the whole thing appears to be masterminded by James William Guercio, producer and godfather of Chicago. Coincidentally, several horn men from Chicago augment the arrangements.

After all the trouble everyone went through to do this album, Vincent seems the least bit out-to-lunch. Listening to the album brings to mind the question of just who is in control of the album—Vincent or the Producer? Vincent, however, does play some pretty nice sounding guitar and mandolin, quite a change from the McLaughlin-Coryell-Zappa pervading style of present day guitarists (remember when the current guitarist triumverate was Clapton-Page-Harrison?)

A compartmentalizing statement on the album: one-third good listening, and two-thirds mediocre. An album for those who look to Chicago to find out what time it really is.

—Paul Kontrimas

HAPPY CHILDREN-OSIBISA (Warner Bros.)
Time — 37:04

After listening to Osibisa's second album, Woyaya, I really felt that they were going to become THE Third-World Rock band. Woyaya was a very spiritual album and rich in African texture. Unfortunately, Osibisa's third album Heads, was a disaster like their first one. On top of all this, internal problems within the band caused four of the seven original members to depart.

Happily, what seemed like certain disaster didn't turn out that way. Reformed and anxious, Osibisa now presents Happy Children, which despite some flaws, is a very enjoyable album. Though not as good as Woyaya, it is satisfying enough. Side One is completely listenable. The title cut is exactly what the title implies, and is very uplifting. The next cut, "We Want You To Know (Mo)" reminds one most of the Woyaya style. New bassist Jean Dikoto Mandengue whips out an infectious riff, while Osei (saxaphone) and Tontoh (trumpet) whirl around him, creating an exciting song.

Side Two imbodies most of the album's difficulties as Osibisa's continues their obsession for excess conga-percussion work and verbal babbling. Case in point is "Adowa", which is ruined by such tripe. The rest of Side Two is good, especially the last cut, "Fire".

Though I miss their former guitarist and sax player, Osibisa has convinced me that they've overcome the gaps left by them. Session keyboard player, Jean-Alain Roussel, has now joined the group and adds much to it. New conga-percussion player, Kofi Ayivor, is spectacular when he wants to be. Their next disc should be a killer. A-

CUL-DE-SAC — ERIC KAZ (Atlantic SD7290)

With a style resembling countless other musicians, and lyrics which distinguish themselves like a grain of sand on a beach, EK gives us another Folksy, Bluesy, C&W record. It's one of those records whose songs you can so easily forget. After listening to this album a few times some of the songs do stand out: "Looking For A Sign," "My Love Will Never Die," and "Come With Me."

It's good music, but since there's so much better music around, you can easily afford to pass up this album.

—Mike Tiberio

There's a fine line between slow music and dragging music. Eric Kaz continually teeters between the two on Cul-De-Sac. Dragging can be defined as a painfully slow waste of an album: repititious lyrics fading.

Whether he excuses his way through this album or does some quality work is up to the listener. He jumps from one extreme to the other, playing with his music.

After listening to Cul-De-Sac he really can't afford to play.

—Lori Ann Yeslow

FINGERS — AIRTO (CTI)

With Fingers Airto Moreira has created some very unusual rhythms. Airto (pronounced 'ear-tow') is a Brazilian percussionist, who until the release of Fingers, was best known for the fact that he used to work with Miles Davis. Airto is one of the first musicians to effectively fuse jazz, Brazilian melodic progressions and the driving beat of rock. The result is unique; yet, strangely enough, it has a familiar sound. Its uniqueness lies not in the fact that Airto has outgrown his roots and expanded into different directions, but rather, in that he has respectably buttered up the bun of the feelings of three eclectic fields of music.

Zappa: More Popular Meat Twisting

by Mike Kostek

Apostrophe'
Frank Zappa
DiscReet DS 2175
time: 31:58

While not, as many of the others have been, an album with which to conquer the world, Apostrophe' may take its place with pride in the pantheon of distinguished recordings issued in whole or part by this man.

Following his general two-consecutive-albums-with-the-same-sound pattern, Frank's been sporadically pushing along, Apostrophe' embraces Oven-Nite Sensation's forms, though in a slightly different context here. The two similar albums deal is probably resultant of his contract with Warner Brothers (DiscReet's parent company) whereby his album's financial plusses and downs are gaged in pairs. If Over-Nite Sensation had lost money, (and it certainly did not, shooting up to No. 39 on the Billboard chart), Apostrophe' would have had to make up the loss before Zappa realized any profit from the record.

The time? Yes, very short. More, Frank, always more, please. The cover? I see it's not very great. Must be a sales experiment to see how a Zappa album with a 'tolerable' cover will do in the market.

An Eskimoan fancy fantasy makes up most of side one. Starting with "Don't Eat the Yellow Snow", then Nanook Rubs It", "St. Alfonzo's Pancake Breakfast" thru "Father O'Blivion", Frank struts a bewitching odyssey reminiscent of a smaller scale "Billy The Mountain". Of course it's nonsense myth allegory to the dada degree. And of course this works in the same way his other dada allegorical mythical nonsense works: fine. By dispatching reality, working in old forms, cliches and Standards, Zappa gives us a new creation, one that we will scrambledly carry back with us when we listen to the next Moody Blues Earth Piece. And laugh.

Some great musical bits here: amazingly apt time-subject changes in and between the songs; the ending is beautiful little melodic snatch; the frozen dog doo sno-cones are not to be forgot, and of course this voluptious Funky Alfonzo, for which Sylvia will certainly drop her plantive cries for water to be able to do.

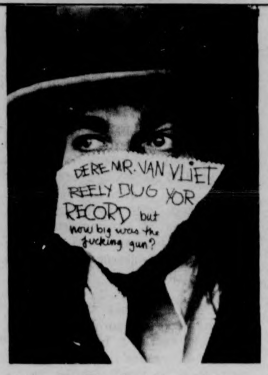
"Cosmik Debris" (about gurus and why they're crappy," says Frank), seems a barren and graceless joke, with a few basically good ideas, but too ~~enugly~~ stated with no really ~~redeaming~~ music magic to make them go. George ~~Luke's~~ little keyboard illustrations in particular are annoyingly cute, see? Even the snappy storyline turnabout and bright denoument doesn't quite pull it out.

Flip and side two unseemingly wails with "Excentrifugal Forz", a malapropable, punny fog that's a believable 1:31.

"Apostrophe'" is culled from an old jam Frank had with Jack Bruce and Jim Gordon. All have played better, with Gordon taking special honors for unrelenting dum-dum drumming. He does have a nice big drum sound, but his simple style doesn't go anywhere here. Still a good kicker of a tune. George Duke and Frank wrote "Uncle Remus", a slightly melancholy, intelligent one-step further look at smart, liberated blacks looking at being Still Down: "World, are we moving too slow? — We look pretty sharp in these clothes — Unless we get sprayed with a hose — Have you seen us: Uncle Remus?" (pronounced 'Ream-us').

"Stink-Foot" is, like "Cosmik Debris", a lot of good ideas improperly ~~galled~~. Because it's two minutes longer than "Debris", we get more ideas, and hence more good ideas. And the odds are likely that they'll work. And they do. The potentially disastrous fillup of having a dog deliver his personal 'conceptual continuity' is carried off with aplomb and nonchalance. Just right.

This collection of stories and songs is a continuation not of Frank's bemused anguish of a few years back, but rather one strong, steely step beyond that. Zappa's only nominally bemused now, and I doubt if he still feels much anguish about us. Fascinating development, though.



The Capfain in juicier days.

Beefheart: Love Over Gold? – Beefheart Oversold

Unconditionally Guaranteed
Captain Beefheart & The Magic Band
Mercury SHM-1-709
time: 31:03

This is, once we can fix the blame, an incredible indictment of either the American Music Business and-or Don Van Vliet (Capt. Beefheart). The foreboding winds of this onerous development were first detected last fall when I heard reports from someone privy to inside info with the Beefheartian Bandwagon. "They're not satisfied", he said, "Everyone in the group is a real virtuoso on his instrument and nobody knows it. They've been playing for years and have nothing to show for it. There'll be a big change, though I won't tell you what it will be. I'll let it be a surprise."

Their signing to Mercury (Phonogram) was a shock. Nobody but Rod Stewart has really been able to peddle many records through Merc., and he probably could have sold more if he had had the old, Warners-Columbia hype behind him. Warners has an odd reputation of sheltering yet neglecting many 'tell-no sell' Artists (Randy Newman, Martin Mull, Van Dyke Parks, etc.) They do harbor these people for years upon fruitless years, though accoring to Howard Kaylan (ex-Turtle, ex-Mother, now Flo & Eddie) "Warners put out thirty albums a month, and if you're not Deep Purple, you're one of the other twenty-nine." Flo & Eddie are now signed with Columbia.

Maybe Phonogram will become a great company. I doubt it. It's very doubtful they'll be able to break Beefheart in any commercial sense. Whatever the reason, Beefheart appears to have jumped into a certain spell of oblivion.

What sounds even worse is this album, by far the worst album Van Vliet and The Magic Band have ever come up with, and their only one not worth buying.

Imagine the slower, quieter numbers on Clear Spot made even 'nicer', more pleasing to Mr. Muzak. There are a few compelling melody lines, but where before The Magic Band would be burning up underneath them, laying down eight or nine others just as compelling, there's nothing but that one line on Unconditionally Guaranteed.

Everything's degenerated to the Neil Young - Neil Diamond level: the lyrics (now written, as well as the songs, by Don and wife Jan and producer Andy Di Martino) are often insipid, and never never approaching the roaring majesty of the other albums. The Magic Band sounds like they're playing with, literally, one hand tied behind their backs (drummer Tripp is minus a foot, too); the sound is lousy; Beefheart's voice/ goes nowhere from pleasantly hoarse festooning; even the song titles are nothing special (no "Sun Zoom Spark" or "Big Eyed Beans from Venus" here) — instead we get "Happy Love Song", "This Is The Day" and "Peaches". Ruh. The only good shortcoming about the whole thing is the silly short time of 31:03, thus saving us ten minutes of having to shudder through this weak gruel. Jive.

Let's not get out of whack — this would be Graham Nash's best album, and a triumph for Paul McCartney. But God-damn it, Captain Beefheart is one of the world's best singers and songwriters, while The Magic Band can blow any white band in the world off the stage. What a complete waste of talent this record is. Where's the money?

Frozen Sound

CHICAGO VII — CHICAGO
(Columbia C2 32810)

Chicago's biggest disappointments in their last few albums seem to be the overdone and over-repeated guitarraring of Terry Kath and ho-hum brass arrangements by James Pankow as two (of many) causes of the Chicago's blases.

Chicago VII is another two disc risk. AS ALWAYS they begin their Prelude to something (This time "Prelude To Aire") and then for 1½ of the first disc's two sides, each member of Chicago (as well as anybody who came off the Caribon Ranch in Nederland, Colorado) tries to find some new chord — the perfect twang or toot.

Then "Life Saver" comes on and Chicago is saved. In fact, the rest of the album really comes on at you and in you. Peter Cetera is the most improved member of Chicago and really has come along with Robert Lamm and James Pankow as the feature writers for Chicago.

CHICAGO VII is an overall good effort that could have been a sure record-lover lure if it had been cut down to one record and leaving the grinding winding to General Motors.

If the music doesn't turn you on, the sexy jacket will.

TOM SCOTT and the L.A. EXPRESS
(ODE SP 77021)

"Who and the L.A. Who?" Honest, I didn't make this album up. As near as I can figure, the band consists of L.A. studio musicians. You might even recognize somebody: Tom Scott on horns and woodwinds, Joe Sample on keyboards, Larry Carlton on guitar, Max Bennett on bass and John Guerin on drums.

Don't let the obscurity fool you — the band lays down a good funky sound, and elements of jazz, soul and rock are used to the best advantage. There are moments on this record that probably will remind you of Herbie Hancock, Frank Zappa, Chick Corea and (here's a brain teaser) Bold. All of the songs are original compositions except "Dahomey Dance", a tune by John Coltrane.

Every song attests to the capability of each musician, especially "L.A. Expression", where Joe Sample takes a beautiful piano solo that is accompanied absolutely perfectly, and "Strut Your Stuff", where Larry Carlton picks a pretty mean guitar solo.

The most pleasing song on the album would have to be "Easy Life", a tune that develops from a dreamy, searching sound into a floating, sort of "bouncing" moderately slow four tempo. The tune has almost a therapeutic effect in that it somehow manages to convey contentment and optimism. It's a nice song to relax to or to think to.

In fact, the whole album could be characterized along this same line — it's to enjoy it.

— Ken Blanchard

LIVING IN A BACK STREET—SPENCER DAVIS GROUP (Vertigo VEL— 1021) time 35:52

THE SPENCER DAVIS GROUP

Full assortment of solid, if stylized, English rock, from "Living In A Back Street" which is strictly Deep Purple, to Faces on "Back Street Boys". None of it is going to make anyone pay a whole lot of attention and — or money, but it manages to hold up for two sides and never get rank or dumb. All very competent. C+

PLAYING MY FIDDLE FOR YOU—PAPA JOHN CREACH & ZULU (Grunt BEL1-0418)

No, he's not dead, no matter what the cover photo may purport.

Papa's spinning his wheels a bit here, falling back on his first solo album for some of that "Milk Train" inspiration and trying to pick up the String Jet Rock Feel on "String Jet Continues". The funny-sad thing is that whilst the Airplane was Barking, Hot Tuna was being First Pulled Up, Then Pulled Down, Dino Valente was still polluting Quicksilver, Copperhead was nowhere to be found, Steve Miller was Recalling The Beginning and the Dead were Living, Mr. Creach was making the best San Francisco Rock of the time.

Filthy, Papa's 2nd, was a move toward more Soul de Papa, and this was distressing as it showed little of the quality that made the first album so good: taste. Whether "Danny Boy" or the "String Jet Rock", John always seemed to know just When. And well he should, after forty years of playing his fiddle for us.

However. This new record breaches both the 'taste' and the over-loaded soul baskets. Sounds like Papa was too anxious to let his new band, Zulu, wail. It's all not too bad; there are some eminently good tracks: "Friendly Possibilities", "I Miss You so", "One Sweet Song". But. C.

PAT WILLIAMS THRESHOLD
(Capitol ST-11242)

I must agree with the artists description of his own album: "Although about 500 years of combined musical experience are represented in this album, they are telescoped into an instant in time that is totally spontaneous and beautifully child-like."

The first cut on the album ("And on the first day") starts out like something from 2001. But Williams soon gets away from plagiarism and puts down two more excellent cuts ("Threshold" and "Mr. Smoke"). I enjoyed those three cuts in particular because of the way Marvin Stamm's trumpet leads trades off with the flute and saxophone leads of Tom Scott. The other two cuts on the album ("The witch" and "A lady beside me") are more conservative and belong elsewhere.

This album appeals to me in the same way as Zappa's Grand Wazoo and Rick Wakeman's Henry the Eighth, which is probably the highest praise I can give it.

— Mike Tiberio

CHAPTER TWO: HASTA SIEMPRE - GATO BARBIERI
(Impulse AS-9263) T.P.T.: 38:24

Do not, under any circumstances, buy this album if you are looking for good jazz — Coltrane would turn over in his grave and Marion Brown and Richard Abrams, etc., would turn over in their sleep — in fact, if you went to the Bluewall, the Hatch or the Bug Bed Booger instead of the Black Musician's Conference, I don't even want to talk to you. Real musicians are starving because your ear muscles are flabby and you're afraid to listen to anything you might have to flex them for. Go 'way, kid, you bother me.

Gato Barbieri · Chapter Two : Hasta Siempre

On the other hand, if you're looking for a really (you'll pardon the expression) rockin' album, full to bursting with rhythm and high spirits (around ten of them), insert here. Gato is a joy to listen to, not so much for his sax appeal, but for his enthusiasm — several places here he gets so caught up in the spirit of the thing that he forgets to play and just starts yelling "Heeeey!" and his rhythm and percussion section generally makes Santana's band look like the Geritol-for-lunch Bunch. All of them have honed their jasmine polyps on the druid filter of a Labrador bassinette, wired in the paradigm of sequential farthing logic and rendered in a warm oven for 11 and one-half hours.

Coast...

It was something you did up and down, and up and down, around the block, and anywhere you could find a fairly level surface. Ah, but you passed that stage and some went onto that ever favorite sport: Roller-rink skating, and spent time inside, sliding around a shiney wooden floor in time to a strange version of,"Alley ~~Opp~~". Such is the conventional picture of roller-skating. Well poop on convention.

David Letters is rollerskating cross-country, and it's never been done.

"I've always wanted to go cross country and skating is faster than walking," said David.

Sometime around the first week of June, David Letters, a journalism major, will take to the highways (mostly Interstate 80) and rollerskate from Gloucester, Massachusetts to San Francisco California

"I don't wish to say which brand as I have two companies bidding", David stated when asked about the make of skate, so the definition was left at 'the steel wheeled roller rink type'. It seems the company that sponsors David will buy the rights to use him as advertising. The same deal was supposed to hold for equipment until a certain 'glossy East Coast sporting good store' came up with a deal, something to the effect of their reimbursing him after he completes the trip. David's no fool, so he's custom making his equipment, according to his needs, out of aluminum tubing from local dumps. His backpack is custom designed to be flexible rather than rigid. His clothes are being redesigned with extra pockets, with strips of flourescent cloth. And lastly, his hair must meet the final doom of scissors to obtain a clean-cut image.

Picture it, this blond man rollerskating thru some small town in Wyoming on a boring Friday nite. The element might not fancy that, thus putting David in a delicate situation. But David will carry no weapons other than a fishing knife.

"I'm glad I have the creative, realistic, spacey, minds of those available to me as advisors," was all David had to say of his department heads. Scholastically, the cross-country jaunt is part of an independent study.

Presently, David is negotiating with newspapers as to weekly press releases on his progress and general news coverage. After the trip is completed, David would like to compile a book of photographs on life across the states featuring subjects deviating from the 'sightseeing trail' and instead concentrating on small towns: bars and people.

Physically, David has been training since January. He runs six miles every morning, rollerskates thirty-two miles every other day, climbs Mt. Monadanock once a week and in the winter, cross-country skiis up to thirty-two miles. He lives forty-five miles from campus in a cabin on a lake where he is winter caretaker.

According to his calculations, he should roll into San Fransisco 120 days after his first push-off in Gloucester, and that is alotting time for camping and visiting friends on the way. Just skating, sleeping and eating, David estimated it would take him 62 days.

The only real problem he can foresee is the fact that between Pennsylvania and Cheyenne, Wyoming he has nowhere to stay. He is appealing to UMass out-of-state students and people who know people that live within twenty miles of Interstate 80 from Indiana to Colorado to please get in touch with him. Beside needing a place to sleep for the night, he would appreciate arranging to have a mail drop at their house where he could pickup food and supplies. You can contact him by leaving a message

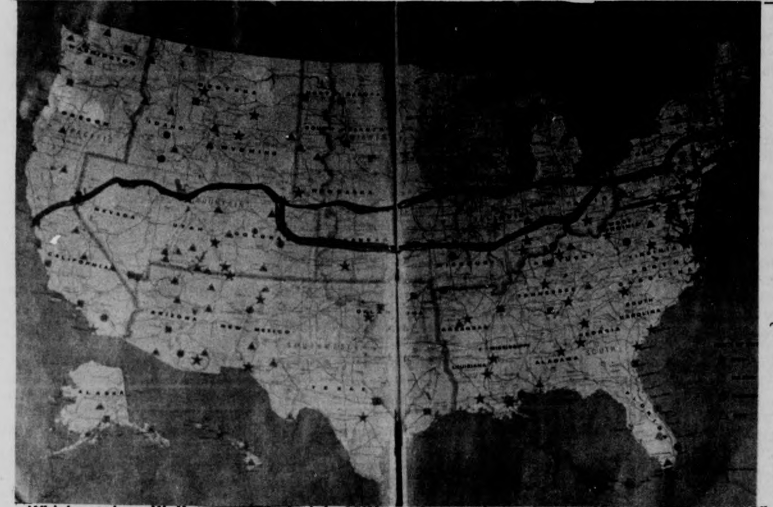
Needless to say, you must have a unique frame of mind to attempt it. It's far to easy to find someone talking of their goals, and too difficult to find someone actually getting up and going. As David put it: "I just don't believe that people should get so wrapped up in this life that they don't enjoy it. They're trying to achieve the so-called success. I want to experience more, if I don't do it now, I'll never do it. My last job was director of a drug program, and my main philosophy was 'there's a world out there', now I'm in the position to enjoy it."

"People who don't know me repeatedly state that I'm crazy, those who do are confident I'll do it." He finished his beer, leaned back and smiled. A UMass junior with a wild look in his eyes ready to make the pages of Guiness.



Which route will the great skate take? It's up to U and Mie to give this intrepid traveller aid and abettance.

Plain Speaking — Truman's Way

by Frederic C. Weiss

Plain Speaking, an oral biography of Harry S. Truman
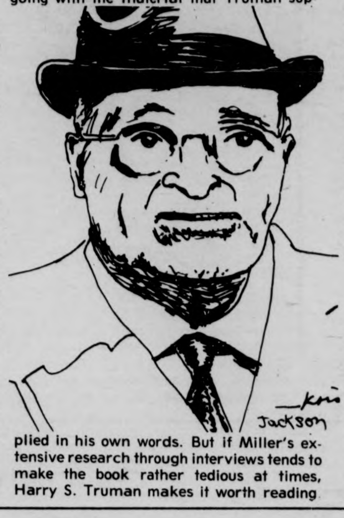
by Merle Miller
G.P.Putnam Publishers
448 pages, $8.95

General Douglas MacArthur once said that "Old Soldiers never die, they just fade away." If this is true then surely Merle Miller's recent book on Harry S. Truman proves that "Former Presidents never die, rather they write memoirs, and tumble back and forth between attacks by revisionists and boosts favorable historians."

Plain Speaking, an oral biography of Harry S. Truman, is in one sense a memoir, and in another sense a favorable judgement by a writer. Based on a group of interviews that Miller had with the former President in 1962 (for a planned but later aborted television special), the book is alive with many of Truman's observations concerning the Presidency, opinions of various people that he has known, anecdotes concerning his life, and a great many stories based on his knowledge of history. Since much of the book is done through a question and answer format, you can read Truman's ideas in his own words.

Unfortunately besides for all of the "Trumanisms" there are a great many unnecessary words in the book. For one thing, Miller has supplemented his Truman interviews with too many conversations with other people (people Truman went to school with, or lived across the street from, etc.) Some of the interviews do add insight (most notably those with Dean Acheson) but all too often they burden the book with too much material. It is as if Merle Miller felt guilty writing a book about Truman, and going with the material that Truman supplied in his own words. But if Miller's extensive research through interviews tends to make the book rather tedious at times, Harry S. Truman makes it worth reading.



The strength of the book lies in Truman's ability to be candid throughout on the questions asked, and to "shoot from the hip" concerning the issues he faced and the people he knew.

The best parts of Plain Speaking are when Truman is doing just that: Telling the reader how he felt when he ordered the dropping of the Atomic Bomb; what he thought of men like Dwight Eisenhower ("Ike didn't know anything, and all the time he was in office he didn't learn a thing."); Richard Nixon (..Nixon is a shifty-eyed, goddamn liar, and people know it); Douglas MacArthur ("I don't know anybody that liked him except maybe some of the people on his staff, and it was hard to tell with them because...each and every one of them was nothing but a damn ass kisser."); Joseph Kennedy ("...is as big a crook as we've got anywhere in this country, and I don't like it that he bought his son the nomination for the Presidency.").

Such open and candid expression by the late President is what makes Plain Speaking worth reading. The book is enjoyable in spite of Merle Miller and not because of him. Too often Miller's deification of Truman throughout the text starts to hurt the entire credibility of the book itself. Truman is an interesting and complex individual. The book can stand on the merits of these qualities in its own right. However when Miller starts to build up Harry Truman as a cross between Jack Armstrong and Horatio Alger, the book gets too cute.

Was Harry Truman a great President? Why ruin a good book by making it a document of U. S. history. Obviously Plain Speaking is not an objective book; its purpose is to make the late President look as good as possible. And despite the fact that some people have been offended by Truman's "vulgarity" in the book. This has been accomplished. There is nothing new about this from the myriad number of John F. Kennedy books in the mid sixties, through Lyndon Johnson's murkey The Vantage Point, there have been attempts to give readers a sympathetic view of Presidential Administrations. No doubt when the mesh of Watergate dies down, someone will try and soft-shoe a book showing Nixon to be a man of "courage under pressure" who was right all along. If nothing else it will prove that some writer has a real imagination.

So I'll let the revisionists and the traditionalists fight it out between themselves whether Harry Truman was or was not a great President. Chances are when all is said and done, the verdict will be that there were some things that went well during his years and office, and there were some great errors; that all in all he was a good President. The same can be said for Plain Speaking; for it is a book that lacks excellence, but sparks interest!

Subliminal Seduction: more than greets the eye!

Subliminal Seduction: Ad Media's Manipulation of a Not So Innocent America by Wilson Bryan Key
206 pages — $8.95
Prentice-Hall

reviewed by Barbara Voorhees

SEX

Caught your eye, eh?

This technique has been used in hundreds of advertisements to alert the public's conscious attention to things which probably don't have much to do with sex at all.

Dealing with the subconscious mind can be a bit more tricky — and, for advertisers, a lot more profitable. Here we find a more subtle, if not downright devious, technique: what author Wilson Bryan Key calls Subliminal Seduction: Ad Media's Manipulation of a Not So Innocent America.

Key, professor of journalism at the University of Western Ontario and president of Mediaprobe: Center for the Study of Media, Inc., presents his case against American advertisers complete with an introduction by Marshall McLuhan and with 30 illustrations of how ads are designed to seduce the consumer's subconscious into wanting to buy.

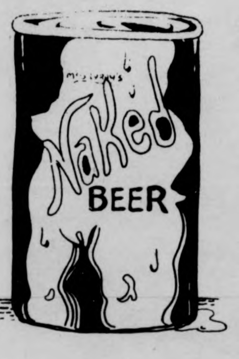
From the first Gibley's gin ad, which upon closer examination is camouflage for an orgy scene; to the ad for Playboy magazine subscriptions picturing a wreath which, look closer now, is not made up of walnuts at all but of penises and vaginas, Key takes the reader on a chilling exploration of the bizarre techniques of the two-billion-dollar per year American advertising business.

Perhaps most frightening is Key's admission to having used a subliminally seductive technique himself on the dust jacket of his book; the word SEX is embedded several times on the front cover in such a way that only the subconscious or relaxed mind can recognize it.

The book lacks a good explanation of how and if this technique really works. Does the promise of sex sell things to a person's subconscious? Key begs off by saying that research on subliminal perception is limited but points out that if a company is paying $50,000 for an ad they must feel it's going to sell something.

In an attempt to prove that Key is paranoically reading too much into ads, the reader may find himself anxiously flipping through magazines and scrutinizing TV commercials looking for his own examples. This reader can testify to the fact that they exist in abundance.

It is interesting to note that although most people feel that they are protected by law from subliminal seduction in advertising, Key was unable to find any such law. The variety of theories on the media and on the part symbols play in our lives which Key presents are fascinating and thought-provoking. His theory on schizophrenia in children is absolutely shocking; he feels that schizophrenic children actually are hearing and seeing the things they say they do — subliminally, of course, from the parent substitute of our time, TV.



This book is a must for every consumer who reads magazines or watches TV; perhaps for everyone since Key has found SEX and other words and symbols embedded even on textbook and novel covers.

Sitting under a good light and relaxing his mind to a point where he can see the words and symbols Key has found in the illustrative ads, the reader will discover new dimensions of his awareness.

Although the reader will probably find himself screaming for "more, more, more information" he will have to console himself with the thought at at least this is a step towards exposing the crooked side of a business which plays such an important role in a media-oriented society.

This book is available at the University Bookstore.

VERY SPECIAL LOVE SONGS — CHARLIE RICH (Epic KE 32531) Total Playing Time: 29:48

The lights had just come on after our third and final set at the Burlington High School homecoming dance. By 11:05 most of the boys and girls were well on their way home. My eyes couldn't help but fall on the golden hair of one of the few remaining stragglers. As I disassembled my bass drum, she came up to me.

"What's your name?", I inquired politely.

"Susie", she replied sheepishly with a slight grin.

"Well the boys in the band call me DS, but you can call me Derek," I responded with a quick wink.

"Can I help you dismantle your set. I used to be a groupie. You might have heard of me. I'm Susie Poop with the big wazoo."

Suddenly it dawned on me. Susie "Ying Yang" Poop. I'd read about her in Rolling Stone. She'd given up her pursuit of superstars when Jimmy Page turned down her offer to ball all night (hey, hey what can I do) and was now tooling around with undiscovered rock musicians. Well, I hadn't logged any "action" for two weeks and my girlfriend was having her period, so I suddenly became excited.

After dismembering my set almost singlehandedly, Susie placed her hand upon my shoulder.

"What 'cha gonna do now, cutie," she blurted. "Wanna show me that record collection I heard you squawking about before?"

"Sure, it's the biggest in the state."

We loaded up and drove a few short moles to my place. I fixed Susie a triple Wallbanger and grabbed a frosty Canadian Ace for myself.

"Susie, what would you like to listen to? I've got the new Spinners, the latest War live double, the recent McCoy Tyner, the Brand new Cecil Taylor, and even the new Steeleye Span and Procol Harum albums."

As she rested herself on my plush double bed, she spouted, "Y'know Derek, you remind me of the drummer for that Canadian group, Thundermug. Real slick, lots of records. But he failed the test. I hope you won't let me down. I assume you have the new Charlie Rich album, Very Special Love Songs.

"Oh jeez", I couldn't help but utter. "I just picked that up this morning but I hid it in my closet. I didn't think anyone would ever ask me to play that one."

Ballad after lovely ballad played as Susie and I petted. We undressed and heard his latest smash single, "A Very Special Love Song", his all new recording of "There Won't Be Anymore", and "Take Time to Love". But as I became more and more enticed by Ms. Poop, she became enchanted by Charlie Rich. "Charlie," she called out softly, "Charlie". But my desire grew. As my lust was peaking, she suddenly and without warning began to sing along to "Almost Persuaded". I cringed, put my clothes on, and pulled out another Canadian Ace.

The Film Film — Lovers Love

by Stuart Sojcher

Day for Night

Directed by Francois Truffaut, starring Jacqueline Bisset, Jean-Pierre Leaud and Francois Truffaut

The ads for Day For Night state that it is "a movie for people who love movies." And rightly so, for the film tells much about the making of a movie, the family of people that work on it and the trials and tribulations that plague a director. Yet, there is so much more. It gives an insight into the world of film itself and the people who comprise that world. As the female assistant director says "I'd give up a guy for a film, but I'd never give up a film for a guy."

The story concerns the shooting of a film, Pamela. As the shooting begins, the director, played by Truffaut himself, explains that when "he begins a film he has high hopes; by the middle of shooting he is just happy to finish it." The cast is made up of an aging actress, Valentina Cortese, who constantly forgets her lines and drinks too much; a distinguished middle-aged gentleman, Jean-Pierre Aumont, who has a thing about visiting airports; a young actor, played by Jean-Pierre Leaud, who besides being childish, runs around asking people "if women are magical;" and the beautiful American actress, "Julie Baker," played by Jacqueline Bisset, who is recovering from a nervous break-down. From a cast like this problems are bound to develop and soon do, but not all due to them.

The first problem concerns an actress who is found to be three months pregnant. She is not needed for shooting for some time, however by then she'll be a bit noticeable. Jean-Pierre threatens to leave the film when his girlfriend, the script-girl, runs away with a stunt man. Bisset sleeps with Leaud to prevent him from leaving, and he promptly calls her husband, a psychiatrist, and informs him of his deed. She in turn breaks down and finally is calmed down by the presence of her husband who has flown from the U.S. to France. Aumont is killed in an automobile accident and the script must be rewritten in places. After viewing all this one thinks, why would anyone want to be part of a movie crew, let alone be the director.

Instead, I walked out feeling excited and elated; wanting to take part in a film immediately. Truffaut captures the magic of film by his witty dialogue, photography and especially through his characters, who are refreshing and human. The film entirely captivates the viewer.

The photography, as in most Truffaut films, is characterized by a moving camera which gives a sense of beauty and romance to the film and the hand-held camera. The latter is well-used during one sequence as Truffaut is walking on the set and is constantly interrupted by people asking his advice on the movie. The effect is one of disruption and confusion as the camera follows his every sudden turn and movement.

There are some wonderful allusions to film throughout the movie. Truffaut wears a hearing aid, partly because in real life he is a bit hard of hearing, but mainly in reference to Luis Bunuel, the great Spanish director, who is stone deaf. In one scene, Truffaut is excited by a package that has just arrived. Upon revealing the contents, one is surprised to see a bunch of film books of whom some are by: Godard, his French 'New Wave' compatriot; Rosselini, the founder of neo-realism; and one about Hitchcock, who Truffaut has written books about. In one sequence Truffaut even discusses how one can make a film about anything, citing the headlines of the paper in his hand as an example.

As Truffaut sleeps, he dreams about his childhood, when as a young boy he stole small pictures showing scenes of Citizen Kane from a cinema. There are allusions to American cinema, the French director Max Ophuls; I could go on and on. Perhaps the funniest is when Bisset asks Leaud what he is doing during a day in which neither is involved in any shooting. He replies, "I'm going to the cinema." What could be more appropriate.

The expression "day for night" is a term used when a scene is supposed to take place at night but is shot during the day. Through the use of filters however, darkness is simulated.

Day For Night is such a marvelous film that I don't feel that I'm doing it any justice by writing about it. It must be seen to be appreciated. Oh, to be in the movies.

New Film Series

Film buffs will be pleased to hear about a special film series, "Cinema Club," appearing on television every Sunday at 11:30 p.m., on Channel 3.

A number of films rarely shown before will provide a variety of entertainment in musicals, the gangster film, the western and romance. The films include: John Wayne in The Big Trail, his first starring role (1930); Lionel Barrymore, Laurence Olivier and Elissa Landi in The Yellow Ticket (1931); Frederic March in Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, the unedited version (1932); and Spencer Tracy in The Power And The Glory (1933).

Many of these films were either thought to be lost or terribly damaged. Through the efforts of the American Film Institute and Museum of Modern Art many of the films were eventually restored. Many of the films have been shown only once before on a similar "Cinema Club" on WTOP-TV in Washington, D.C. and the Channel 3 showing will be their only other public exhibition in some 40 years.

Free memberships in the "Cinema Club" will provide members with program notes written by the American Film Institute. The address is: Cinema Club, WFSB-TV3, Broadcast House, Hartford, Conn.

Compiled by Eileen McKnight

ANNA KARINA +++
Tolstoy's novel has been filmed many times, in 1927 and 1935, 1948. This particular version is well done and has some pretty effects. Playing at the Globe in Northampton.

DOCTOR JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE +++
Robert Louis Stevenson's classic thriller of split personality has become one of the screens most popular and oft-borrowed themes. This version is one of the better ones, playing Sunday 7:30, Franklin Patterson Hall, Hampshire along with the Fearless Vampires.

DOUBLE INDEMNITY (1944) ++
Crime story bout a man who murders his mistress' husband for his insurance money. Leaves quite an impression through the good direction of Billy Wilder and a witty script by Wilder and Ray Chandler. Starring Fred MacMurray, Edward G. Robinson and Barbara Stanwyck playing with Bells are Ringing at C.C., Tuesday at 8:00.

DADDY'S GONE A HUNTING +
A cheap supposedly horror film that is about as interesting and scary as a Disney film. Plot is typical formula film and the acting is the same. Playing Thurs., C.C. Aud. at 7 and 9.

42ND STREET (1933) +++
Classic putting-on-a-show musical from Hollywood's golden age, with a genuine backstage atmosphere and a fairly caustic script. Music by Al Dubin and Harry Warren; directed by Lloyd Bacon with Warner Baxter, Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell and Ginger Rogers. Playing Friday, 7:30 and 9:00 also Sunday at 9 in Lec. Room 1, Merrill Cntr., Amherst.

400 BLOWS (1958) ++++
This influential 'new wave' film written and directed by Francois Truffaut, was basically a moving account of a small boy's adventure in the big city while on the run from an unhappy home and school life. Great movie, playing Thursday, 7 and 9:30 in the SUB.

HENRY V (1944) +++
Lawrence Olivier directed this Shakesperian drama. The production is a good one starring Leslie Banks, Robert Newton and Leo Genn. Playing Tues., 7 and 9, Thom. 102.

GRAND ILLUSION (1937) ++++
Directed by Jean Renoir this film concerns three French prisoners of war held in German hands during WWI. They are transferred to a prisoner of war camp where they unite in plans of escape. In their travels they are befriended by friend and foe alike. Renoir on the film: "I made this film because I am a pacifist. To me, a true pacifist is a Frenchman, a German, an American. The day will come when men of good faith will find a common meeting ground." In this film at least they find this meeting ground. Thurs., 7 and 9:30 at the SUB.

MURMUR OF THE HEART +++
Louis Malle has fashioned a modern, sophisticated comedy based on one of civilizations strongest taboos — incest. Lea Massari stars as the libertarian raised mother. Playing Amherst, April 12, Merrill Sci. Ctr. at 7:30 and 9:30 and in Thom. 104, UMass on April 13 at 7:30 and 9:30.

MR. SMITH GOES TO WASHINGTON +++
Frank Capra's light comedy about a boy scout leader who becomes involved in Washington politics and manages to try to convert political corruptness. Plot is nothing new, but the film is one of Capra's masterpieces. Playing Friday, 8:00 in Main Lec. Rm., Franklin Patterson Hall, Hampshire.

QUEEN CHRISTINA +++
This historical romance was more a homage by MGM to its great star Greta Garbo. Expensively presented, directed with care by Rouben Mamoulin, it makes a flawless example of Hollywood's golden age. The plot concerns a royal love affair in 16th cen. Sweden. Also playing at the Globe along with Anna Karina.

SAVE THE TIGER ++
One of jack Lemmon's finest dramatic roles as a middle aged man for which he won an oscar. Playing at Mountain Farms Mall.

SLAUGHTERHOUSE - FIVE +++
Kurt Vonnegut's novel comes to the screen losing some of its erratic wherewithal, but is still good. We delve into Billy Pilgrim's thoughts and actions and can say afterwards 'boy and I thought I was screwed up'. Playing Sat., 7:30 and 9:30, Sage Hall, Smith.

ROAD TO RIO (1947) ++
Based on Road to Singapore in 1940, Paramount's three contract stars Crosby, Hope and Lamour did six others based on same plot line of gags inside about Paramount to talking camels. Anything can happen but Hope as usual doesn't get the girl. Playing Mon., Main Lec. Hall, Franklin Patterson Hall, Hampshire.

THE ROARING TWENTIES ++
James Cagney has been honored for his contribution to film art. In The Roaring Twenties one of his last gangster films, Cagney is at his peak. Humphrey Bogart, on the threshold of stardom, co-stars in the look at the lawless era from a perspective of America on the brink of WWII. Playing April 18, UMass, Thom. 104 and April 19, Merrill Sci., Amherst.

SLEEPER ++++
Allen is the writer, director and star of this new film which finds him awakening in 2173 after being frozen for 200 years after an operation for an ulcer went amiss. This futuristic satire is full of the usual Allen one liners and sight gags, but with some Chaplinesque slapstick added. Campus Cinemas.

THE STING ++++
Newman and Redford excel as a pair of con men operating in Chicago about the time of the Depression. But the film is more than just these two charming heroes. The elaborately planned con of an underworld kingpin, keeps the audience guessing from the start to finish with the finale leaving one thoroughly astounded. It's an authentic look into the thirties with a number of Joplin rags thrown in. For sheer entertainment it can't be beat. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

TO HAVE AND HAVE NOT +++
Ernest Hemingway's tough, soft-hearted adventure starring Humphrey Bogart and Lauren Bacall, directed by Howard Hawkes. Great Hawkes film with his finest stars. Playing Sat., 8:00, Main Lec. Hall, Franklin Patterson Hall, Hampshire.

WIZARD OF OZ (1939) ++
This well-loved film survives as Hollywood's best retelling of a fairy tale, due to the score by Arlen and Harburg. Judy Garland herself makes the film come alive with supporting help of excellent performances by Ray Bolger, Bert Lehr, Jack Haley and Frank Morgan, Margaret Mitchell is a classic as the wicked witch. Sun. and Sat. at Lec. Rm. 1, Merrill Ctr., Amherst, 7L39 and 9L30.

Games No Longer

by El Tra Gommmmes

Taking a film history class and expecting to be enlightened as to the world of film is less realistic than expecting to see a good film which is advertised on the tube, the magic fan mags or reading a hyped-uped review.

Film reviews are an expression of a individuals' interpertation or description of a film from his eyes. All writers feel they must comment on the film, and comment they do. "It's not relevant, where is the social value — ha — you give them freedom and look at what they turn up."

When is the last time any film review was without reservations? Every viewer has an idea as to how the film could be improved. Film-like music, has its musicians who neither can or have attempted to perform the art they scribe.

The Sting — nope — haven't experienced it yet. The sweet lady viewed it at Sears Town, Leominster. She returned with heavy negative vibes — 'That's the worst piece of Hollywood trash to hit us in a long time — totally a bogus Shot. The film offered nothing.'

My bookie smiled describing the film. 'Class man, real class. The acting lacked, but the story, — the ending, make sure you digg it.'

Wonder Woman — that fast flow who always has a line on films flew out in a strange way — 'Oh yeah, like I enjoyed The String, especially the Scott, the scitt — the scott. With a quick New Orleans history riff she remembered — 'Scott Joplin.'

Just what is the feeling, the flow, the theme which affects the listener, the viewer, the feelier.

My bookie enjoyed The Sting, Lady Number One believed in the glory of trash and Wonder Woman was pleased because the music touched that area of sensitivity that no producer can create to grab both the Wonder Women of San Francisco or Gloucester . . . my, my, muse — aren't they different. We are all different. And all being different is not a proper sentence, but is a true fact. Seldom can the ulta ego of GOMES flatly state that such is such and little will change it, be it an upsetting Red Barron, a bad take of Ron or who else flows with a crazy zany smile of UMass. Now, that, my film crazed friends — is film. Just what is going to take you away for those 90 minutes — What is going to help you relax?

I believe that we (including UPPERgrads who now drop off their nickel — yes it is VOGUE to rip the COLLEGIAN for a nickel — yes friends even the Veterans who are presently crying for a raise can afford a COLLEGIAN.) The mind of GOMES is ~~forevver~~. But to films, must we realllll-lll-ll-ly believe that rel-la-vence is to be near your relatives, and on a holiday claim "Yes, relivance, relivance is where its at?"

Just viewed a great Marx Brothers film — Heck friends, the story is the same. Back then when I was gonna - go GOMES - gonna learn about film, I read, did read - can you digg it - film reviews of days gone by - by-by.

Just recently I researched the Marx Brothers. The people behind the black ink on white said, "Marx Brothers films — poor Artists — their style of humor is such of a 'con man' — impreessessesss at first, but quickly fades' . . . Or how 'bout this goody: Their humor is such that a Martini of two would allow one with desire to struggle through."

Youshouldofseenthe people at the Bluewall — laugh, laugh and laugh, — you must understand how college students are today — flying away and enjoying the Marx Brothers carry on with their routines.

And before my eyes a young lady with many posters asked that grand question: "Wanna see a film?"

Just like Groucho, with a little New England accent, this one looked, smiled, twisted my blond mustache (not that stash) and twisting that magic film review card replied "No, I'm not Ralph Blackhead of the CHICAGO GO GO, rather my dear — I AM GOMes-"

She had my number, realizing I was NOT Gomes, — bomb — a quick chop to my chops — and, all film reviewers do have chops — I fell.

Now if this was a film and your favorite man directed this insanity you'd enjoy it . . . but (ha-ha) if it was not GOMES — well — who else would it beeeeeeeeeee . . .

One of my favorite comedies is ZACHARIAH — The Electric Western. Many people go crazy with ha-ha-hee-hees and ho-hos'. Others claim it is trash-trash — It's like a weekly serial — Wow — Another one by the boards!

Quick flash from Holleywood — ooooooD'ha. "Hi! I'm RHONDA Ron, and have I got a scoop for you — Seen just last week at a lo-cal hot spot was the dashing men from (I don't have to say) a recent sucess doing the Bump with none other than — that's right you guessed it — wow — and do you believe that the big silver screen behind your eyes is only that trip which can be answered thru a walk in our library . . . tooooo (two--tu-tu) bad Jackson had a steal on the GREEN PHONE. . .

. . . Back to Hollywood and the Silver Screeeeeeen behind your eyes — Are we really going to go go — stop it Gomes, your last utrrrra - ego article and here I am a mere typewritter and were 'sus'pose 'to be doing a straight filmtrippie.

Just what is the straight film review? The Sting impressed some and regressed others. American Graffitti had DEE GREAZE wondering about the SUB while others believe the film to be not only fun to watch but a drawing back — a happy return of a time when . . .

Just because AMERICAN GRAFFITTI did make those people happy, the film was good.

Well, if I was directing this film, I would be Richard NIXON. . . If I was Richard Nixon I'd roller skate from Baltimore to Washington every day — after all — if this was film, and I was THE man . . . shucks film friends — who else would leave HORE for a Wash-

For you fine freshmen and those not so fresh — (You UPset The editor — uch-tuch-tuch---ker the way)))) ((((Rule 12 of College pare- seven, elev-efen - even though the film aspect — the desire to entertain does not reach a consistent point, where as many can enjoy — many will believe that time has passed.

Yes thank you — being the ultra of GOMES is more than an-and- just you wait to next time — cause GOMES is going — and I shall replace — place — we all need a place — it is said, was said, shall be said, that Easter (HAPPY EASTER) is a time of glory- and you - with your own little silver screen behind those all seeing eyeballs-ch-yours and that is what Easter is all about — Happy Easter.

Editors Note: Like all, Gomes is leaving soon. This is a writer's respect.

House judiciary subpoenas Nixon tapes

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY Collegian
VOLUME CI, ISSUE 113
FRIDAY, APRIL 12,1974

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon was subpoenaed by the House Judiciary Committee Thursday to turn over all tapes and other materials sought for its impeachment inquiry but the White House declined to say it would fully comply.

After the subpoena was issued by a 33-3 committee vote, White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler promised only that Nixon would supply the committee within two weeks with unspecified materials that would be "comprehensive and conclusive in regard to the President's actions."

Ziegler said the White House had been pledging since Tuesday to make some of the requested materials available when Congress returns from its Easter recess on April 22. He said the White House review of these materials would continue.

The White House spokesman declined to say that Nixon would fully comply with the subpoena, declaring only that he would turn over materials "consistent with his constitutional responsibilities."

Ziegler argues that the materials which he said would reach the committee between April 22 and April 25 would bear out Nixon's past explanations of his Watergate role and "will receive the support of the House."

In-State tuition requirement relaxed

By LARRY CARPMAN
MDC Staff

A new Board of Trustees ruling changing the requirements for the classification of students for tuition purposes may result in a $400 refund this semester for some qualifying out-of-state students.

According to a news release from the treasurer's office, "The guidelines approved by the UMass Board of Trustees at its meeting of March 6, 1974 for tuition purposes, give 18-year-olds the right to establish their own places of residency apart from their parents' and allow for women students to consider residencies apart from their husbands.

Until now, a student proved Massachusetts residency for tuition purposes by presenting the University with certification from a town clerk.

"Basically the new system is the same," said Robert H. Brand, associate treasurer. "The main difference is since many people move around from town to town we no longer are requiring the town's clerk's certification," he said.

To qualify for the new in-state tuition category a student must have "maintained a residence in Massachusetts for a period of not less than one calendar year prior to the date of his application", according to the treasurer's office.

Tony Boyle convicted of murder

MEDIA, Pa. (AP) — Former United Mine Workers President W.A. "Tony" Boyle was convicted last night of three counts of murder in the slaying more than four years ago of union rival Joseph "Jock" Yablonski, his wife and daughter.

The verdict was returned by a jury of nine men and three women after 4½ hours of deliberation.

The conviction carries a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment.

The 72-year-old Boyle, who already is serving a three-year federal prison sentence for misuse of union funds, exhibited no emotion as the verdict was read by jury foreman Clyde M. Parris.

Boyle, however, did have a pained expression on his face as he turned to wave goodbye to his wife and daughter on his way out of the courtroom.

Boyle was the ninth person to be charged in the murder of Yablonski, a union insurgent whose dissident movement shook Boyle's leadership in 1969 and later toppled him from the UMW's top post.

Due to misinformation supplied by Student Senate Speaker David Booker, yesterday's Collegian reported that a motion to make the SGA Presidential election a popular election had passed. Can the DC's force you to eat?

By LAWRENCE KORNFELD
MDC Staff

Do UMass students have legal grounds for abolishing the mandatory meal plan? The only honest answer is nobody really knows yet.

The issue of colleges requiring students to live in residence halls and eat in the dining commons is being fought in court in various places around the country.

Two landmark decisions have been reached so far. A court in South Dakota ruled in favor of student self-determination in living and eating accomodations. Meanwhile, another court in Louisiana has ruled the opposite, and the supreme court has said that the South Dakota decision was wrong.

Student Attorney for UMass, Richard Howland, refuses to give his opinion on this issue. He claims a written statement of his opinion would prevent him from acting as legal council should it come to court. He did say that the cost of such action would be extreme, mainly because there are a wide diversity of cases and decisions supporting both positions."

This issue has been raised at UMass by a recent decision of the Massachusetts legislature to change the age of majority from 21 to 18. This means that all people 18 and over in Massachusetts are considered adults and have the right to negotiate a contract.

Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert W. Gage justifies the universities position for financial reasons. He says the university still has "abundant indebtiness" for the dining commons buildings which will not go away if the mandatory meal tickets are abolished. The mortgage on those buildings comes to over $600,000 a year, according to Marie Capadonna Assistant Director of Food Services.

As for the dormitories, Dr. Gage claims if they have more than 25 per cent vacancy they will fold. If the dorms fold the university will lose $800,000 a year on default bonds.

He adds, "That money will come out of the students hides."

Even though the 21 age requirement for moving off campus no longer has any legal basis, Dr. Gage justifies it as a "convenient break-off point."

Dr. Gage says that the university has plans to make the dorms and dining commons "all voluntary" in 2-3 years. He adds that the university has already begun studying ways to make this possible.

Marie Capadonna says the all voluntary system would "take alot of changing in what we know to be dining commons and dormitories."

She adds: "Schools have survived and gone from mandatory to nonmandatory."

Some of the other reasons supplied by administrators for keeping the system mandatory, at least temporarily are:

a.) the fire hazard presented by increasing use of hot plates in dorms (A UMass dorm burned down in 1962, because somebody left their hot plate on too long.)

b.) the health hazard of students keeping more food in their rooms

c.) Dormitories and dining commons are considered part of the student's learning experience.

d.) Increased use of hot plates may overload dorm electrical systems.

Proud parent UMass bears $15m baby

By DOROTHY MULLER
MDC Staff

Fifteen million dollars, three strikes and three years later UMass is the proud parent of a new concrete labrynth-the fine arts center.

But the Center, one of the architectural progeny of Roach, Dinkelo Associates (who designed the NBC building, and the St. Louis Arch) has a patchwork history.

Designed as a showcase in meeting the architectural needs of university fine arts, the central structures of the building are the Concert Auditorium and the theatre. The concert auditorium is a natural concrete structure with green velour seats.

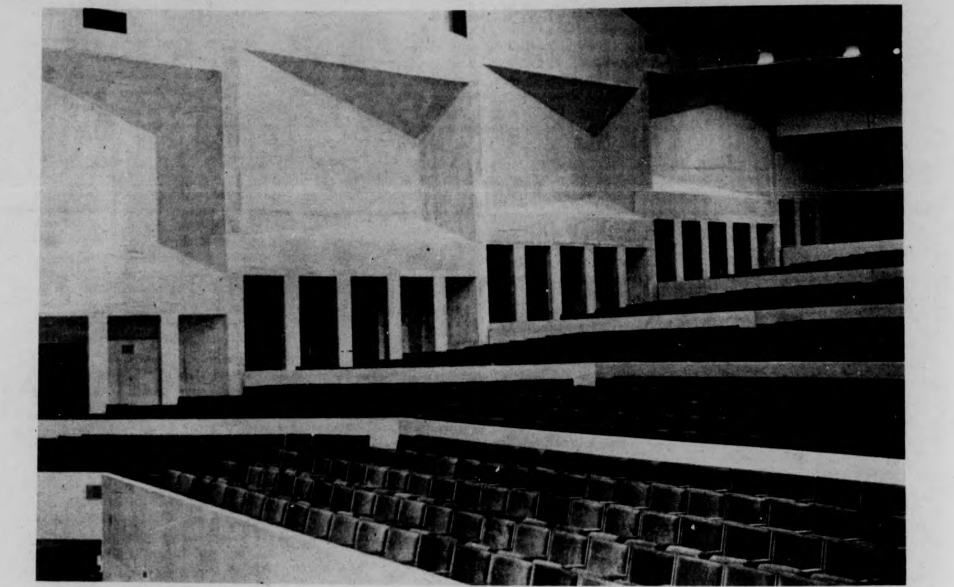
The hall seats 2,055 in the continental manner in which there is no center aisle and access to the audience sections including the six over hanging balconies is made from side entrances. This helps to control crowd movement and insure quick entrances and exits.

Seats will be sold according to sections, so that in the case of a quartet concert when the house will probably not fill, seats in the down front sections will be sold first.

The auditorium is aesthetically overwhelming but architecturally, it has its problems: the last three seats in each of the rows of the fourth, fifth and sixth sections are completely out of sightline of the stage.

As a consequence carpenters have had to construct wooden platforms to raise the floor five inches so that spectators on the ends of the rows can see the stage. But given the diamond shape of the auditorium, the seats on the row-ends will still lose sight of much of the stage-left and right areas so that much of the action must be played forward and center-stage.

Unfortunately the auditorium was the object of much budget cutting so that the lighting systems are manuel and the fly capability is limited. The stage is overhung with shallow balconies for student observation and is equipped with an organ left. However, the pipe organ had to be custom made for the balcony and the $160,000 cost was prohibitive.



The auditorium was ideally designed as a concert hall with a two-second reverberation time. However, the reverb time is now double that. The architect proposes to carpet the entire back wall to cut now on the echo. One feature the Department of Public safety might call in question are the balcony railings. With the balconies at sixty-five feet and more above the ground seat level, the railings have been fixed two and a half feet from the floor in order to prevent interference with the sightline of the stage. Physical Plant representatives feel sure a change will have to be made.

As a result of these problems the fifteen million dollar construction cost will be a figure in the past.

The theatre is a diamond shaped, completely carpeted structure seating 700 (200 less than Bowker auditorium). However, the theatre is no designed to replace Bowker but Bartlett auditorium. It is designed with full fly capability, steel grids 65 feet up from the stage floor to hand backdrops complete with coutner weights. Makeup and dressing rooms are located backstage on two floors directly above the stage. An intercom system connects the main production areas to backstage ares for cue warnings. At the ground level, indoor art gallery connects the lobbies of the auditorium and theatre where audiences for two simultaneous events can mingle.

The entire fine arts complex has been designed for handicapped students. Ramps and elevators are provided for easy access by wheel chairs to the concert auditorium. Bathrooms are provided with special grab bars and sinks. Some telephones have been lowered to wheelchair height. Also, intercom and elevator call boards have been stamppd in braille

The music wing of the fine arts center runs parallel to Pleasant St. While its rooms are not completely soundproofed they were never intended to be. They are "sound-deadened." The intention is to lower the sound to a point where it will not disturb a student studying or a musician in the next room. Each practice room has a double floor, sound-deadening panels, and caulked light sockets to prevent a bleed-through of sound electrical conduits. Sound-deadened chorus rehearsal and orchestral rehearsal rooms are connected by a projection room which can record, pipe music or televise ongoing performances to closed circuit receivers within the Fine Arts Complex.

The longest wing of the complex is the 646 ft. studio-classroom art corridor. The studios employ natural lighting in the classes, while the faculty section combines a studio and office where a professor can work closely with two or three students.

But for all its innovation, the Fine Arts Center is beset with several serious problems, concerning planning and budgeting. The complex was originally designed four years ago as a 100 per cent expansion in fine arts faculty space. However, over the course of construction the faculty number has increased from 25 to 80. From this standpoint, the building is just not big enough. Architecturally, the building was not designed with enough expansion control joints and there are large cement cracks which will have to be repaired. In addition, the two reflecting pools at the main entrance of the complex have drainage but no circulation. The resulting stagnant water may be a problem later.

One purely budgetary problem is the fact that maintenance in the Fine Arts center will beinadequate at least according to present budgetary considerations. No additional hiring has been attempted and two or three janitors will be expected to maintain the building. Physical plant estimates it will take at least two men to maintain the equipment alone and a crew of a dozen men to continue daily janitorial services. It is hard to imagine only two men vacuuming the 2,000 seat auditorium following an afternoon performance in time for the evening show.

You too can weigh in for campus handicaps April 18

By MARJORIE MORSE
MDC Staff

The campus organization for Handicapped Student Affairs is sponsoring a diet marathon, April 18 to May 9, to raise money for a project to make the UMass campus more convenient for the handicapped students.

To enter the marathon, a person must weigh in on April 18 in the Student Union lobby to determine a beginning weight. The contestant then finds sponsors who will pay him a designated amount of money for each pound lost during the three weeks. The individual may go on a weight-gaining diet if he wishes.

On May 9 there will be another weigh-in to determine the weight difference. Contestants will have a four day period in which to collect their money. A prize of $100 will be awarded to the person earning the most money and the contestant finishing second will receive $50.

All the money collected, except the $150 in prizes, will be used to make the campus architecturally barrier free This would include establishing graded ramps, curb cuts and wider entrances for those handicapped in mobility, and tactile signs and elevator numerals for the blind.

Water bubblers, elevator emergency buttons, bathroom mirrors and coat racks need to be lowered. Pay telephones, lavatories and heavy doors should be modified. The Campus Center doors can be a strain even for the non-handicapped. Shower stalls within dorms and P.E. facilities are inconvenient for those handicapped in mobility and need to be adapted.

As noted by Jim Riley from the Student Activities office, some Universities have already installed, or are considering installing knurled door knobs, braille floor plans and relief maps for the blind students.

The door knobs are engraved with cross-hatchings specifying the type of entrance it is, thus eliminating anyone from entering a maintainance, electrical or any improper entrance.

Peggy Stevens, coordinator for Handicapped Student Affairs, said these modifications would also benefit the temporarily handicapped students and elderly faculty. Over six-hundred pairs of crutches were issued by the Health Services here over a year's span. Apparently many students would appreciate the improvements.

Ms. Stevens says the office is hoping for a Federal Grant to be approved to help fund the modification project. The cost for adapting the campus will be extensive and what is raised by the marathon will constitute a small portion of the final bill. Everyone's involvement is needed.

All interested in improving the campus come to the Student Union April 18 and weigh in!

Food, utensil theft problem faces D.C.

By MARK KELLEHER
MDC Staff

The Food Service Governing Board along with representatives from Food Services discussed Tuesday night, one of the most chronic and critical problems facing the dining commons today: the theft of food and utensils from the commons.

As far as students go, it's a most self-defeating problem as well. It was estimated that without the large scale ripping off from the commons there would be no board increase next year. As an example of the nagnitude of the theft, Food Services this week is placing an order for $18,000 worth of replacement dinnerware for next semester.

Food Service announced that it is planning another food survey for April 22 and 23. The purpose of the forthcoming survey is to measure any progress made since last November when The American Restaurant Association (A.R.A.) conducted its own independent survey. The April 23 survey will be the same as A.R.A.'s to prevent any bias.

The food surveys are a help to students because it allows the choice of entrees most desired along with their frequency. Food Services then takes this demand curve and uses it as an in-house took; fitting it to their financial situation.'

In other action the Board determined that the Meal Ticket Exemption Board's term was up and that new appointments were needed. For the interim Chairperson Matt Burns suggested that individual members of the Board fill in until new appointments are made to fill the vacancies.

The Meal Ticket Exemption Board was originally appointed by former vice-chancellor Campion as an appeal board apart from Food Services. The majority of its cases have to do with financial hardship with seven students having been exempted so far this semester.

Speaking on the magnitude of "food to go" Marie Cappedona of Food Services related a study made two years ago on one dining commons during lunch and dinner meals. Volunteers sitting in the commons observed $300 worth of food being lifted from both meals. This was an estimated 50 per cent of what was actually occurring.

By rough estimation Chairperson Burns came up with an $80,000 loss per semester because of this theft. This was a minimum figure as well.

Among ways of combating this theft the Board considered was the waging of publicity campaign via Collegian ads, editorials and reminders at the commons. Student awareness of the problem as well as the concept of 'students ripping of students' would be the general thrust of the campaign.

Also discussed was the possibility of putting receptacles in the dorms at the end of the semester. With the support of the janitorial staff it was agreed that a large amount of dinnerware could be retrieved instead of being thrown in the dumpster at the end of the semester.

Also discussed at the meeting were:

1. Cortland State College of Vermont has supplied the Board with information concerning its meal plan. Cortland doesn't take absenteeism into account but the students are very happy with their plan.
2. The idea of managers wearing jackets that make them more identifiable was discussed and received a favorable reaction among all present.
3. Matt Burns, elected chairperson last week, stated that goals for his term would be to make the Board more representative, and provide a continuity so that next semester will show some action.

Burns also said that vacancies on the Board still exist for two Third World students, a graduate student with a meal ticket and a representative from the Northeast area.

The next meeting will be Tuesday at 7:30 in the Campus Center.

'Health Careers Night'

On Wednesday, April 17 a special "Health Careers Night" will be offered to students at the University Health Services (Infirmary) from 8:00 p.m. to 10:00 p.m.

The program will offer students an opportunity to discuss and realistically explore various careers in health, such as pharmacy, medical technology, X-ray technician, laboratory science, physical therapy, medicine, dentistry, nursing, nurse practitioners, mental health, social work, environmental health, health education, and health administration.

This program is being offered before pre-registration so that if you have any questions concerning various fields, appropriate people will be there to speak with you. Health professionals from the Health Services will be able to discuss job responsibilities, opportunities in the field, changing employment patterns and the like. Academic representatives from departments such as Public Health, Nursing, Medical Technology, and Laboratory Science will also be there. Representatives from the Career Planning and Placement Office and the Pre-Medical and Pre-Dental Advisor will offer their assistance. All these sources have been gathered under the same roof at the same time so that you might gain good perspective on any questions.

Student Advisory Board members will be available to give directions as to where the various people will be located in the Health Services.

This program is being sponsored by the Community Health Education Committee of the Health Services in cooperation with the academic departments and the Career Planning and Placement Office. If you have any questions concerning plans for Health Careers Night, please call the Health Education Office at 549-2671.

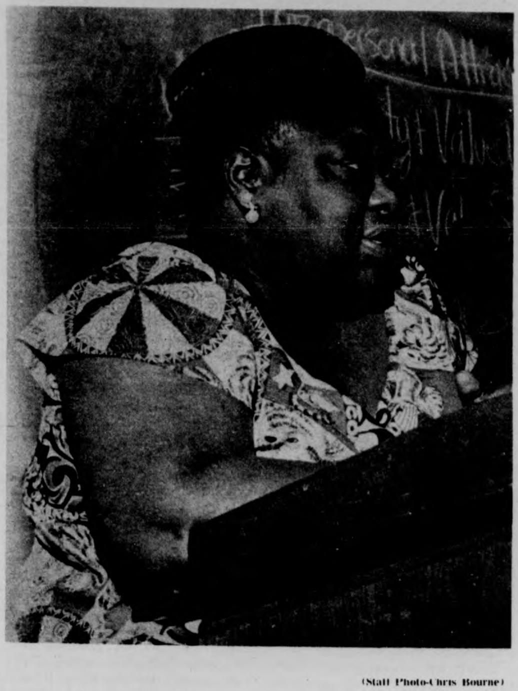
Ms. Lewis praises Paul Robeson



(Staff Photo-Chris Bourne)

Elma Lewis, founder of the National Center of Afro-American Artists.

By MARK KELLEHER
MDC Staff

Speaking at the third of a series of lectures on the life of Paul Robeson, Elma Lewis, founder of the National Center of Afro-American Artists, characterized him as "a shell of a man, who endured a mental and spiritual punishment that no physical punishment could match."

Robeson, now living in seclusion in Philadelphia, was a victim of the post-war McCarthy reaction period, when he continued to speak the truth about what he saw in Russia. He became convinced as he saw Russian women fighting from room to room, barefoot, that they must have had something to fight for and he repeated this to the American public. His 'mistake' was that after the war when the Russians were no longer our allies he continued to repeat the truth as he saw it.

For this he was declared non-grata in America and was blacklisted throughout the nation. A graduate of Columbia Law School, an All-American, acclaimed as an actor, he was regarded by white America as a credible and outstanding black." After 1946 he couldn't even make a living because he "spoke the truth." He very rarely leaves his house nowadays.

Ms. Lewis, noting that Robeson is coming back into fashion lately, and hopefully appreciation described her role as being "the grain of sand in the oyster that begets the pearl. To carry on the spirit of Paul Robeson's humanitarianism in the true sense of brotherhood, "eternally offering support mentally, physically and spiritually," requires a committment Ms. Lewis said.

Saying she criticized 'to cause to grow', Ms. Lewis asked rhetorically "where have they all gone" in reference to the community's college graduates. Fearing that young blacks had been co-opted rather than revolutionized on the campuses Ms. Lewis added," you are responsible, the torch has been passed to you. You don't have the privelege to make just a good living and leave it at that."

She said that the good life for young blacks will come only because "you made it so." We are asking you to give up the evil ways of an evil society. You're being asked to give up nothing compared to what you'll get."

She ended her talk with the same words Paul Robeson said to her 35 years ago. "If not now, when?"

Gospel festival honors M. L. King, Black Church

By MICHAEL PATTERSON and ILENE GARNETT
Black News Service

The Amherst Regional High School Auditorium reverberated to the joyous sound of six Gospel choirs last night.

The event marked the third night of the annual Martin Luther King, Jr. Memorial Lecture Series. The event was free and open to the entire community.

The choirs were: Voices of New Africa House; The Youth Choir of the Faith Baptist Church, Spfld.; The Womens Ensemble of Mt. Calvary Baptist Church; The Famous Boyer Brothers; the Violinaires and noted singer and Gospel composer Dorothy Love Coates and her group. Her group consisted of four vocalists and two noted gospel musicians.

The festival was a celebration of the Black Church which King loved, so dearly. In his speech Tuesday night, Lerone Bennett said, "King came from the heart of the Black preacher movement."

The Voices of New House were as usual superb as were all the gospel groups heard in the auditorium of the Amherst Regional High School.

It's not often that we get a chance to hear some pure undiluted gospel music while languishing in this sea of whiteness, however last night made up for this cultural deprivation.

Virtually all of the people in attendance were on their feet at one point or another in response to the powerfully moving music the groups so soulfully blessed us with.

The spirituals are the songs of our oppression. They reflect the strength of the Black personality. Their depth and intensity reflect the depth and intensity of the black spirit which was able to celebrate the joy of living and loving our creator even while laboring under the bonds of slavery and colonization.

Arab terrorist attack kills 18

QIRYAT SHMONAH, Israel (AP) — Three Arab terrorists raided this Israeli border town as its inhabitants were rising from their beds yesterday and killed 18 men, women and children with bursts of submachine-gun fire and rocket grenades. Another 15 persons were reported wounded.

Officials said most of the dead were children. The Arabs died in an explosion inside a four-story apartment building they had seized.

"They were throwing children from the top floor of the building," a local police officer said.

A Palestinian commando organization in Lebanon said Arabs were on a suicide mission to enforce demands for the release of Arab guerrillas held by Israel. Israeli officials said they had received no such demand from the guerrillas.

Premier Golda Meir, speaking in the parliament in Jerusalem, termed the attack "murder for the sake of murder" and said Israel would hold Lebanon responsible because Palestinian guerrillas are based there.

The raiders slipped across the border of Lebanon, about a mile away, with three other Arabs who burst into a school, but found it empty because of the Jewish holy season of Passover. Officials said these three escaped back across the mountainous border.

Israeli officials described the attack as the worst of its kind in the war that Arab guerrillas have been carrying out against Israel throughout it's 26-year history. It was the worst terrorist strike inside Israel since the attack on Tel Aviv's Lod airport two years ago.

Police here said the three Arabs blew themselves up with explosives they were carrying as Israeli security forces moved in on them in the apartment building. But the Israeli military command in Tel Aviv said gunfire from security forces set off the explosives.

In Jerusalem, Mrs. Meir, who is stepping down as premier, announced the casualties as 33 dead or wounded. She added that eight of the dead were children, five were women and the remainder were men. She identified the wounded as five civilians, seven policemen and three soldiers. The soldiers and policement were hit while storming the apartment building, she said.

Only two hours after she officially announced her resignation, Mrs. Meir issued an indirecting warning to Lebanon for harboring Arab guerrillas and said the raiders were "not warriors of liberation but people who came just to murder...The killing of children, women and innocent civilians is murder for the sake of murder...

"The government of Lebanon must know that we regard it, and residents of Lebanon who help the terrorists, as responsible for this act."

In the Lebanese capital of Beirut, a Palestinian splinter group, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-General Command, claimed responsibility for the raid and said it was a suicide mission to demand the release of 100 Arab guerrillas jailed in Israel. It also said it was to free Kozo Okamoto, the lone Japanese survivor of the May 1972 massacre of 26 victims at Lod airport.

But Mrs. Meir read to Parliament a leaflet left by the dead terrorists which made no mention of Kamoto or freeing guerrillas.

The Israeli premier quoted the leaflet as denouncing Israel for "expelling the people of Palestine in a Nazi-like way...

"We are sorry to talk in the language of weapons but we have found no listening ear for our just demands," it said, accusing Israel of racism and dispossessing the Arabs. Mrs. Meir said it was signed by Popular Front-General Command.

The guerrillas crossed the mountain frontier about a mile away from Qiryat Shmonah after dawn, slipped into the awakening town of 18,000 and opened fire with submachine guns and grenades, spraying everything in sight about 7:30 a.m., police said.

Meir pledges Israel will continue to seek peace

JERUSALEM (AP) — Premier Golda Meir said yesterday that Israel would continue to seek peace and honor its international commitments despite the current political uncertainty in the Jewish state.

Formally announcing her resignation before a packed parliament, she also warned that Israel's army is deployed "as always and stands ready to fulfill its task."

Mrs. Meir told her supporters Wednesday that she would resign.

It was the second time in just over a month that Mrs. Meir had announced her resignation.

On March 3 she announced she would resign after she failed to win approval for a minority Cabinet. Two days later, after having received an overwhelming vote of confidence from the Labor party, she agreed to reverse her decision.

The special Knesset session was originally called to debate the causes of Israel's unpreparedness at the start of last October's Middle East war. But Mrs. Meir, who looked tired and pale, took the opportunity to formally announce her resignation. Earlier, she had formally notified President Ephraim Katzir.

The premier, who will be 76 on May 3, said she had resigned because the public unrest that developed following the war "should not be ignored." She said the unrest is "perhaps natural and certainly legitimate," and added:

"I reached the conclusion that the public should be given the opportunity to reassess" its political preferences.

The unrest was apparent outside the Knesset, where several thousand Israelis massed in a peaceful antigovernment demonstration.

Mrs. Meir will stay on until a new government is formed or until new general elections. She promised that her interim regime would continue to fulfill its functions "to the utmost and with complete authority."

She said Israeli ambassadors had been instructed to tell their host governments that Israel would "continue to seek peace ...and would see through its other obligations."

Wallace has support

TUSKEGEE, Ala. (AP) — The black mayor of Tuskegee endorsed Gov. George C. Wallace for re-election yesterday and predicted that Wallace, once a symbol of segregationist-resistance in the South, will get more black votes in Alabama than ever before.

Mayor Johnny Ford, who has worked closely with Wallace on governmental issues, issued a formal announcement endorsing the governor. He said in an interview after the announcement that Wallace's aid to predominantly black Tuskegee has demonstrated his willingness to "help all the people, particularly those who really need it."

"Our citizens have come to realize that voting for people is one way of assuring that their community will get at least its fair share of resources," Ford said. "That's what it's really all about."

Ford, a Democrat, was elected mayor in early 1972, after working for the federal Model Cities program. He endorsed President Nixon for re-election because, he said, the President had helped Tuskegee get considerable federal aid.

Relief bill to die

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House unanimously passed a substitute to the Senate's disaster relief bill yesterday, killing any chance for final passage before a 10-day Easter recess.

The substitute was introduced by Rep. John Blatnik, D-Min., who said the House was unprepared to act on a measure that passed the Senate only a day earlier.

Before adjourning for the recess, the House appointed conferees to work out differences between the bills with the Senate.

The Senate unanimously passed the bill on Wednesday and sent it to the House in hopes it would be passed and signed into law by the weekend.

Backers sought quick passage because of the tornadoes that devastated parts of the South and Midwest last week.

The House action, however, delayed final passage at least until April 22 when Congress reconvenes.

The House bill differs from the Senate measure in two areas. It adds mudslides to the list of disasters whose victims are qualified for federal aid.

Reinecke pleads

WASHINGTON (AP) — California Lt. Gov. Ed Reinecke today pleaded "absolutely not guilty" and said he wanted to be tried in California on charges he lied to the Senate Judiciary Committee about the ITT affair.

Reinecke's attorney, F. Joseph Donohue, contended that since Reinecke is a candidate for the gubernatorial election in California and the primary is June 4 he would like the trial date moved to May 20 so that "Reinecke's innocence may be established for the primary." Connolly indicated he would not oppose a trial before the primary date.

The case stems from allegations that an ITT subsidiary offered to put up $400,000 toward the 1972 Republican National Convention, scheduled at the time for San Diego, Calif., in exchange for a favorable anti-trust settlement.

Reinecke was questioned by the Senate Judiciary Committee about the matter during hearings on Richard G. Kleindienst's nomination to be attorney general. The indictment said Reinecke lied when he said he had not met then - Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell in mid-May 1971 to discuss efforts to hold the convention in San Diego.

Boyle guilty of murder

Kenneth Yablonski, son of the slain man, stood in tears in his eyes next to special prosecutor Richard A. Sprague and remarked: "You don't know how happy I am. There's no words that I can express."

Sprague said the verdict "is proper and shows that effective law enforcement can get to the people at the top."

"Unfortunately," he said, "too often only people at the bottom are caught and convicted. We get only the puppets and not the puppeteers."

Sprague had based his case almost solely on the testimony of William Turnblazer, 52, the only witness to link Boyle directly with the killing.

Turnblazzer, a lawyer and former president of UMW District 19 in Tennessee and Kentucky, had testified that Boyle told him and Albert Pass, another former District 19 officer, that Yablonski had to be killed.

Turnblazer said the order was given June 23, 1969 at UMW headquarters in Washington, D.C. as the three men stood outside an elevator for a minute or two.

Boyle, who testified in his own defense, denied the charge and said such a meeting never took place.

Turnblazer has pleaded guilty to federal charges of conspiring to kill Yablonski.

Seven others, including Pass, have been convicted of murder or have pleaded guilty to the murders, described in confessions and testimony as a complex plot that was nearly given away by poor planning and, in its final moments, was nearly bungled by a jammed gun.

Boyle, who had ruled the 200,000-member union with an iron fist for 10 years and was a protege of the late John L. Lewis, was accused of masterminding the Dec. 31, 1969 slaying.

Sprague had said at the time of Boyle's indictment, "This is where the case began and this is where it ends."

FTC moves against truck driver training

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Trade Commission moved against a string of Mid-western truck driver schools yesterday, alleging they have taken up to $895 apiece from men who thought they were applying for on-the-job training.

The proposed complaints and orders would require the schools to stop representing that they are offering employment and would require them to give back any money they have gained through deception.

The move represents an expansion of an FTC effort which has already led to complaints against three computer and data processing school operations and on $80,000 educational campaign initiated in August intended to steer people away from worthless vocational courses.

Joseph Clark, an Indiana private school accreditation official who has been battling schools listed in the commission complaints, said, "The Federal Trade Commission is, as usual, too late."

Clark said World Wide Systems, Inc., and other schools operated out of Indianapolis by Steven L. Bradshaw have closed. Clark estimated the operation covered 43 states and took in $2 million while it lasted.

Bradshaw, his brother John, and one other associate were in the fourth day of trial on federal mail fraud charges in Indianapolis. Nine people have pleaded guilty.

In addition to citing the Bradshaw operations, the four separate FTC complaints also named Nationwide Heavy Equipment Training Service, Inc., of Strunk, Ky.; Tri-State Driver Training, Inc., of Middletown, Ohio, and Diesel Truck Drivers Training School, Inc., of Sun Prairie, Wis.

The complaints were virtual carbon copies, citing advertisements run in "Help Wanted" columns with such inducements as "Diesel Semi-Drivers, 75 men wanted" and "Semi-Drivers Needed, On the Job Type Training..."

Security tight for Mona Lisa's Japan visit

PARIS (AP) — The world's most famous smile will be packed into an air-conditioned steel alloy container next week and flown to Japan under unprecedented security precautions.

Officials of the Louvre museum and the French Ministry of Cultural Affairs are guarding details of the Mona Lisa's departure arrangements like a state secret. Armed guards will accompany Leonardo da Vinci's unique portrait every inch of the way to the National Museum in Tokyo, where it is to be exhibited from April 19 to June 10.

It will be only the third time the picture has left France since King Francois I bought it for his Fontainebleau Palace early in the 16th century.

Leonardo painted the portrait of Mona Lisa del Giocondo, the wife of an Italian nobleman, in his native Florence in about 1503. Almost nothing is known of his beautiful model.

Campaign bill passed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate yesterday passed a far-reaching campaign reform bill with the avowed aim of eliminating big-money influence in politics.

It provides for the use of tax funds in financing general and primary campaigns for federal offices.

Also for the first time it puts a ceiling on campaign contributions and limits the total expenditures of presidential and congressional candidates.

Another key section establishes a bipartisan Federal Elections Commission empowered to bring civil and criminal prosecutions, independently of the Justice Department, for violations of campaign financing.

Passage of the bill, 53 to 32, after a debate that began March 26, climaxed a battle in which the Senate's anti-filibuster rule was invoked by a one-vote margin.

The controversy centered around the provisions for public financing of campaigns, but all moves to remove this part of the bill were rejected.

Much of the impetus for passage of the bill, which now goes to the House, came from the Watergate affair and related scandals of the 1972 election.

However, the legislation is expected to have rough going in the House where opposition to public financing of congressional races and primary campaigns is regarded as stronger than in the Senate.

Little League: 'conspiracy against girls'?

NEW HAVEN (AP) - A would-be little-leaguer argued with her older brother outside federal court Wednesday as lawyers inside debated the athletic abilities of girls.

Howard Needle, 12, a five-year Little League veteran in Fairfield, was asked in the court corridor what he thought of his sister as a ballplayer. "She's not bad for her age," he said.

Then Mellisa Needle, 9, who would like to pitch and play shortstop along with the boys, was asked what she thought of Howard's baseball ability.

"He stinks," she declared unhesitantly.

Melissa and her mother have sued the Fairfield Little League Inc., claiming sex discrimination has kept the youngster from playing in the all-boy league.

U.S. District Judge Jon Newman reserved decision Wednesday on the suit's request for a temporary injunction that would allow Melissa to join the Little League this year.

Newman heard experts argue whether girls have the reflexes, bones and muscles to keep up safely with boys on the playing fields.

Raymond Ross, attorney for the Fairfield Little League, asked Newman to dismiss the case on grounds it belongs before a state court or the state Commission on Human Rights.

He cited four similar cases in other federal districts which were dismissed on jurisdictional grounds.

Elaine Amendola, Melissa's lawyer, argued that none of those cases involved issues raised in Melissa's suit. She said the Neeles chose to fight the case in federal court because the commission had acted slowly on a similar case.

Mrs. Amendola added that she would name the national Little League as a defendant in a "conspiracy against girls" if necessary to keep the case in court.

Dr. Barry Russman, a pediatric neurologist testifying in Melissa's behalf, said "There is no medical difference between boys and girls ages 8-12 in reaction time or coordination on a baseball team."

Psychiatrist Marc A. Rubenstein of New Haven said "girls are as emotionally able...to engage in competitive sports as boys are."

He said it would be "harmful" for girls wanting to play to be rejected because they are girls.

"No physical characteristics of this age group," added orthopedic surgeon Joseph S. Torg of Philadelphia "would make girls more susceptible to injury than boys."

He said the reason many girls throw a ball differently from boys in that girls lack experience.

National Little League official Craighton J. Hale testified that "Boys throw balls faster, run faster and have performed better in physical events because of their advantage over girls in muscle fiber."

Posted: Training room is now co-ed

HARTFORD (AP) - John Lynham doesn't like the new dressing rules in the Trinity College training room. But he doesn't have much choice now that there are two female trainers.

As he waited for treatment of a blistered hand, the varsity tennis players said, "It's a hassle sometimes to get into shorts when you just want to come in from a shower in a towel."

But Lynham admitted that he thought the two new female trainers were "great. They have a way with men."

Betsy Tyson and Hadley Jones, both 19, entered the previously all male bastion last year when professional trainer Leo Hamel was looking for help.

"We've always had two male trainers working with me and Robert Slaughter, the other trainer. But when I started looking around last fall, all the guys interested in sports wanted to play, so I said 'The heck with it, I'll look for the girls,' " Hamel said.

He recruited Betsy and Hadley and began teaching them training techniques last December.

After they started their duties, a sign went up on the training room door: "Training room now coed, shorts must be worn at all times."

Not all male athletes needing ankles taped, backs or legs massaged or broken bones mended approved of the new arrangement.

Hamel told Betsy to massage the shoulder of an athlete who had separated it.

"He just ran out of here yelling 'No, No,' " Betsy said.

"He was just bashful," Hamel added.

The girls have risen to challenges.

The first afternoon Hadley was left alone in the raining room a lacrosse player came in with a broken ankle. "I put ice on it, splinted it and called securities for an ambulance," Hadley said.

"We had a lot of grief the first month," said Betsy, a freshman from Darien who wants to be a physical therapist. "The football players really object. They like to come in here before a game and really let off steam, act boisterous."

There's also been another kind of objection.

"You know the biggest complaint I've had," Hamel asked.

"The athletes' girlfriends want to know what's going on in the training room."

Food that smiles

BANGOR, Maine (AP) — There exists nowhere a kid who has not heard at some point during dinner: "Don't play with your food!"

But although Alola Morrison spends hours preparing her "food," she actually encourages kids to play with it. Love it, cuddle it and kiss it, she says, it's not fit to eat.

That's because her "food" smiles, frowns, yawns, and stares back. It's made of plastic and rubber and animated with brightly colored eyes, noses, hats, and other things that grab a child's attention.

Mrs. Morrison is the nutritionist at St. Joseph Hospital's clinics for children who suffer from cardiac and systic fibrosis illnesses.

To make eating more attractive for children with poor appetites, and to help overweight youngsters develop better eating habits, she has assembled a growing family of "Character stick food puppets."

To create her family of phony food, she browsed through pet toys sections of grocery stores, picking up rubber wieners, chops, etc., and got the rest from tabletop bowls of bogus fruit. A little work, with eyes, noses and other attachments finished her task. After the finished product was put on a stick, her "food" became a toy.

Why not. How many times do children see dancing bananas, a mustachioed wedge of cheese, a dimpled potato peering from beneath a headdress and grapes with grins? Or a rib steak with a tail, a lemon in a fez, a pear wearing a sailor hat and an egg with eyes?

"The most adorable to me involved a child who was overweight. He was 3½. He just adored the puppets," she said.

"There was one puppet that was a pear. He picked it up. It was one my son made. He held it close to him and he smiled and he cuddled up to it. And he put the pear close to his teeth and rubbed it and kissed it. And he wanted me to kiss the puppet.

"Through that I got the parents' attention to the fact that the child was overeating. The child was outgoing and the parents just loved him to pieces. They were not restricting him because he was such a joy," she said in an interview.

Extra weight creates an unnecessary strain for a child suffering a heart problem. Children afflicted with cystic fibrosis do not easily assimilate fats into the body and require a low-fat diet, she says.

Her first puppet stick? "It was a great big hunk of bologna," she said. "I named it 'Hot Lips.'"

Doctor indicted for abortion

BOSTON (AP) - Dr. Kenneth Edelin, chief resident in obstetrics and gynecology at Boston City Hospital, was indicted by a grand jury yesterday on a manslaughter charge in connection with the death of a 24-week old male fetus during an abortion, the Suffolk County district attorney's office said.

Also indicted yesterday were four physicians in connection with a separate study on fetuses, First Asst. Dist. Atty. Newman A. Flanagan said.

The four were indentified as Dr. David Charles, now Newfoundland but formerly of Boston City Hospital; Dr. Leon Sabath of Wellesley, Mass., Dr. Leonard Berman of Boston City Hospital and Dr. Agnetta Philipson, who took part here in the study and now resides in Sweden.

The study, authored by Charles, Sabath and Philipson and published last June in the New England Journal of Medicine, probed the effect of certain drugs on pregnant women.

Flanagan said the indictment of Edelin was launched after it was "brought to our attention that there was at the Boston City Hospital morgue a 24-week-old fetus in which no death certificate had been filed.

"I had Dr. George Curtis, chief medical examiner of Suffolk County, remove the body from the hospital," Flanagan said. He said the fetus now is in Curtis' custody at the county's Southern Mortuary.

Flanagan said no arraignment date has been set for any of the doctors.

UM/B program halted

BOSTON (AP) — State Correction Commissioner Frank Hall has suspended the inmate education program at the University of Massachusetts in Boston and has ordered a review of inmate participants.

UMass-Boston Chancellor Carlo M. Golino requested the suspension and review following the weekend arrest of one of the 18 inmate participants in the UMass program.

Inmates screened by state colleges and the correction department are allowed to leave their institutions to attend classes at UMass and five other schools under the education release program.

"One of the inmates was at the wrong place at the wrong time. He was not at school and he was not at his job," said Golino in his request to Hall.

"I'm supportive of the program, but it has to be done exactly right. What is wrong with the procedures that allows an inmate to be in the wrong place and allows nobody to know about it" he asked.

Alan D. Daigneault, 24, formerly of Haverhill and currently an inmate at the Framingham reformatory, was arrested in Boston last weekend and charged with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon after a 20-year-old South Boston woman was slashed in the cheek with a knife at a UMass building in downtown Boston.

Job total decreases

BOSTON (AP) - The number of nonagricultural jobs in New England increased by 4,200 from January to February, bringing to 4,731,000 the total number of nonagricultural jobs in the region, the U.S. Department of Labor Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

That total was 110,200 more than the total number in February, 1973, the bureau said.

Manufacturing firms showed the largest increase in the number of jobs, while trade and construction jobs declined.

Thefts hit Peabody

PEABODY (AP) — Nearly $5,000 in cash and merchandise was taken in three separate North Shore robberies, and police believe two of the holdups may have been committed by the same man.

A gunman forced the manager of Marshall's department store in Beverly to turn over $515 in cash Wednesday, police said. The same man apparently forced a chasier at Marshall's here to turn over $300 later than day, police said.

A block away, two men made off with more than $4,000 in coats from the Sirois Leather Outlet, police said. One of the men was armed.

Driving report due

BOSTON (AP) — Richard X. Connors, director of the Boston Alcohol Safety Projects, said he must submit a progress report to the federal Department of Transportation next week because the future of the $409,000 program is in jeaopardy.

Connors said the federally funded program to combat drunk driving in the city has produced "minimal results" since it began in January, 1973.

"There is no way I can defend the lack of productivity of drunken driving violation," Connors said. "But at least one argument I do have is that there have been more arrests for moving violations."

In the first five weeks of the program, when members of the Tactical Patrol Force worked on an overtime basis, 98 arrests were made, Connors said.

After the program was broadened to include all police officers at the insistence of the Boston Police Patrolmen's Association, eight arrests were made during the month of August, 1973, and 44 arrests were made from Jan. 24 to April 7, 1974, Connors said.

Can't study Irish

BOSTON (AP) — The legislature's Federal Financial Assistance Committee gave an unfavorable report yesterday to a resolution calling on Congress to promote Irish studies in the nation's schools.

The draft resolution, offered by Rep. Raymond L. Flynn, D-Boston, commented, "Other minorities have sought and obtained 'Italian Studies,' 'Hispanic Studies,' 'Indian Studies,' etc., and we do not begrudge them this protection of their heritage - it is healthy.

"But we are reminded that the Irish have also made many great contributions to the building of this great country and should continue the influence of Irish culture especially among our own children, not only through new immigration, but also by propagation through the schools and libraries."

The committee also reported unfavorably on another resolution of Flynn calling on Congress to ban the use of foreign aid funds for abortion or abortion research in other countries.

Prison has drug unit

BOSTON (AP) — The state Department of Mental Health and the Department of Correction will sign an agreement within several weeks to allow selected inmates from state prisons to participate in community drug treatment programs prior to parole, officials said.

Dr. Matthew Dumont said the program was part of a "future trend toward placement of antisocial characters in corrective situations which are not run by the state."

He said inmates within one year of parole eligibility from Walpole, Bridgewater and Norfolk prisons would participate.

Larry Solomon, deputy correction commissioner, said 20 to 25 inmates would participate in the initial stages of the program with a target date for beginning operation two months off.

"Every candidate must pass through a classification board so that the worst addict in the prison system might be within a year of parole, but if he is still a security risk he won't be allowed to participate," Solomon said.

Gov't. cable opposed

CHICOPEE (AP) — A state legislator opposes municipal ownership of cable television systems because "government support of a medium of news would be abhorent."

Rep. Richard Richard LaPointe, D-Chicopee, told the annual meeting of the New England Cable Television Association Wednesday, "It is very doubtful that a government agency would match a private enterprise in responsive ness to the needs of subscribers and accountability for standards of performance."

The group re-elected Robert L. Clark as its president. Clark is general manager of the Lawrence CATV system.

Other officers elected were George Duffy, Stoneham, vice-president Bernard Young, Springfield, Vt., secretary; Harmon White, Laconia, N.H. treasurer.

J. Orrin Marlowe, Springfield, Mass., treasurer of the National Cable Television Association, urged system operators to fight moves to impose a sports backup on cable television. Such legislation, he said, would do serious economic damage to the industry.

Escapee charged

BOSTON (AP) — Police have charged a furlough escapee from Concord reformatory with murder in connection with the shotgun slaying of an East Boston man.

William Francis Bryant, 32, who failed to return to the prison from furlough on Jan. 2, was charged in a warrant issued Wednesday in connection with the Monday night shooting of Arnold G. Grant, 29, in a Beacon Hill apartment. Bryant remained at large Thursday, police said.

Bryant was serving a sentence at Concord for armed robbery, police said.

Marijuana defeated

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts House has overwhelmingly rejected a bill legalizing possession and the private use of one ounce of marijuana.

The proposal that had 15 sponsors was defeated 188 to 31 after a long debate Wednesday.

Supporters contended it's "hypocrisy" to treat marijuana differently from alcohol. Several said there are competent studies showing it's not harmful and doesn't necessarily lead to heroin or other "hard drug" addiction.

Opponents cited studies that indicate ingestion can be harmful and testimony from heroin addicts who had started on marijuana. Rep. Michael F. Flaherty, D-Boston, said police reports on heroin addicts he has studied showed that all started on "grass."

Rep. Barney Frank, D-Boston, supporting the bill said the existing ban is an embarrassment to police and Rep. Melvin H. King, D-Boston, said there has been "de facto" repeal because many police don't want to enforce it.

Rep. Ann Gannett, R-Wayland, said legalizing possession of this small amount of marijuana might keep young persons away from the "sub-culture that circulates the really hard drugs."

Rep. Charles R. Doyle, D-Boston, said this could cause the crime rate to "skyrocket."

Official urges 'reasonableness' in oil refinery debate

NEWTON (AP) — An assistant secretary of the interior urged yesterday that "a climate of reasonableness" be developed in New England so that construction can begin on an oil refinery.

"The technology for building clean, modern, attractive refineries is available," said John Kyl. "The investment capital to finance them is banging at the door.

"What is needed is a climate of reasonableness in which people can work together constructively to resolve their differences over the location and operation of refineries," he said.

Kyl's remarks were prepared for delivery at the annual meeting of Associated Industries of Massachusetts.

Kyl noted that voters in Dracut, an inland community, endorsed construction of a refinery. He said this "underscores the fact that there is no imperative need for a refinery to be located at tidewater, any more than there is an imperative need for ships to be brought alongside it."

Crude oil could be brought into the refinery by pipeline, he said.

"There is actually no reason for a tanker to even come within sight of the refinery it serves," he said.

Kyl also endorsed construction of deepwater terminals where large tankers could unload offshore.

"The potential for spill damage is dramatically less in the case of a few deepwater ports located several miles offshore, where the oil can be brought ashore by pipeline," he said.

One such offshore facility has been proposed by the Massachusetts Port Authority, which Kyl said "deserves credit for its positive approach to a vital need of the state of Massachusetts and the New England area."

Kyl said New England needs a refinery because most of its petroleum now has to be shipped from the Gulf coast.

"The inherent flexibility that is normally available to a supply system where the refineries are located in the market area just isn't there," he said.

The Union of Ashby

By ERNIE KING

Two weeks ago the little town of Ashby located in north central Massachusetts, joined with Barnstabel and other communities on Cape Cod in seeking ways to secede from the Commonwealth. In a standing vote on the secession resolution, the town's people voted 200 to 23 in favor of the resolution. Since it is only a resolution it is not binding but a special town meeting could be called and it could be passed as an article on the town warrant.

Town selectman John Forbes sponsored the resolution which read in part, "to offer our land and buildings for sale which we pray shall cause our Great and General Court to listen and understand our plight." The townspeople do not really want to sell their land but somehow want to make the state listen to their problems.

The problem Ashby faces is the same that other communities throughout the Commonwealth face and that is that they have little or no control on the expenditure of monies given to them by the state. For example if Ashby was given funds to build a new school, the Commonwealth could determine what type of school they are to build and where it will be located, thus boosting the construction cost to a price unrealistic for a town of Ashby's size. When the town votes on how to spend money granted by the Commonwealth it is in reality a rubber stamp vote. The townsfolk feel, and justifiably so, that there is too much state beaurocratic interference in local government.

While there is no precendent for a smaller political unit to secede from a larger political unit, Massachusetts has throughout its history been a hotbed of secessionary movements.

The first morement was made by farmers in the western part of the Commonwealth after the Revolutionary war. The State Legislature in an attempt to pay their war debts to the merchants of the Commonwealth began to levy a heavy tax burden on the farmers. Several attempts were made by the farmers to gain the ear of the legislature but they were all in vain since the government of the Commonwealth was controlled by the merchants.

The farmers finally began violent action against the taxes and farm confiscations by the state. They would interrupt court proceedings and stop local sheriffs from proceeding with a confiscation.

The state legislature in an effort to restore order sent a militia under General Benjamin Lincoln. The farmers responded by banding together in armed groups under the leadership of Daniel Shay, in 1786. The movement was shortlived and when the farmers attacked an armory in Springfield they were repulsed and they fled west toward Petersham. They were later pardoned but soon formed together as a voting block and replaced the merchants with farmers in the state lesislature.

The second secession movement in Massachusetts occurred during the War of 1812. Massachusetts was a Federalist state and was bitterly opposed to the war. Essex county was the scene of many discussions on the subject of Massachusettts seceding from the union.

When President Madison wrote to Governor Caleb Strong asking that Massachusetts release militiamen to go to the front the governor refused. Meanwhile the state legislature took the lead in sending twelve delegates to the Hartford Convention of 1814. Disappointed with the British occupation of the District of Maine and the Embargo Act, coupled with the war, the delegates to the convention tried to get a constitutional amendment requiring a two-thirds vote of the populace as necessary to wage war. A final solution was to secede from the Union but this was a last resort. The war ended while the convention was in progress and the delegates decided not to press for any of their decisions.

Another attempt of call for secession came during the Mexican-American War of 1845. At that time Massachusettts was a Whig State and the Whigs were opposed to the war. The Massachusetts legislature passed a resolution condemning the war and urged all of its citizens to resist the war effort. Again secession was thought of as a last resort.

The only successful secession movement was in the District of Maine which belonged to Massachusetts. Maine had been a part of the Commonwealth since 1620. The movement for independence from Massachusetts began shortly after the Revolutionary war but didn't mature until the War of 1812 when the people of Maine felt Massachusetts wasn't doing enough to protect her when British troops occupied part of her territory. The movement grew until finally in 1819 there was a vote taken in Maine to secede from the Commonwealth and it won by a vote of 10,584 to 6,491. The reasons were many; geographical separation, unequal representation in the state legislature and a vast difference in the economic and political policies of the two areas. The Federal Government upheld the separation because by this time statehood for Maine had become a national issue. Finally in 1820 Maine became a state as a part of the Missouri Compromise. It was admitted as a free state thus ending the only successful movement for secession in the Commonwealth's long history.

Maybe the town of Ashby could take a lesson from the people of Maine and try for statehood as Ms. Majorie Swan of Ashby suggested, secede from the Union and become the Union of Ashby.

The Bluewall incident

By RUDY JONES
Black News Service

For White's, Watergate has brought to light the corrupt and unjust nature of institutions in America, and how easily they can be manipulated by unscrupulous politicians.

For Black's, it's just reaffirming what they, as victims, have always charged this system with. But it seems that the White community, especially students, never learnfrom history, or refuse to correct the wrongs that the system heaps down on its Black population.

A case in point is an incident that took place in the Blue Wall on January 30, 1974 between a couple of intoxicated white boys and two black women, Bridget Porter and Theresa Cooper. Realizing that Black people have never been given fair coverage in the press, one would expect reporters of the Collegian to arm themselves with that necessary historical tragedy and vow as progressive, and responsible members of society whose duty it is to work towards righting the wrongs that have been committed in the past. What happened instead is that on January 31, we find the Collegian coming out with a very insensitive, one-sided, and very biased report of the incident. It is only proper then for a responsible member of this community to present here the other side of the incident.

There has always been an extreme alienation between mambers of various fraternities, and the Black community. This has been so ever since the designation of Mills House as a Black cultural center. Ever since then, there have been (and the police have a record of that) a number of instances where intoxicated members of various fraternities attacked Black students. It is in light of this history that one should view the incident in the Campus Center when James Jourdan and Paul Rodriguez, who had consumed eight pitchers of beer, attacked Bridget and Theresa.

The incident took place about 9:00 p.m. when Rodriquez, in his state of intoxication began to abuse Bridget with his putrid language, because she attempted to clean off the table which was covered with beer and popcorn. According to an eyewitness, Rodriquez told Bridget that "she could get the fuck up if she didn't like the state of the table." When she attempted to defend herself, she was punched in the jaw.

Suffice it to say that Theresa and Bridget have been charged with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon. Bridget had to get her jaw x-rayed when it was found out that she was hemorrhaging.

Theresa and Bridget have tried repeatedly to get Jourdan and Rodriquez charged with assault, but have been told that there is insufficient evidence.

One would expect that inAmericait would be improper for men to fight women. Or is that reserved for the White community? If the tables were turned and it were Black men and White women, we all know what the results would have been - check the jails in America.

Bridget and Theresa will be going on trial on April 17 in Northampton court, merely for being - like so many Blacks - victims of Americanism.

The Black community, and decent members of the white community will rally to the call of these two Black women and see to it that justice prevails.

Supports vet school

To The Editor:

I am writing to you regarding your coverage of the Pre-Vet marathon which took place Saturday, April 6. I realize that it is difficult for a newspaper such as the Collegian to cover every activity which takes place on a campus of this size. However I learned that the coverage which Consisted of one picture, which was made a joke of due to the underlying comment, was small because the purpose of the marothon was questionable.

I do not feel that the lack of coverage should be attributed to the lack of purpose. Otherwise why would the Collegian cover streaking so completely with articles and pictures?

Secondly there was a purpose. The purpose was to bring to as many people as possible the reasons for a College of Veterinary Medicine. To get coverage from newspapers and any other means of publicity that we could to let people know that there was a hearing on April 9 for the proposed Veterinary College. To let people know that they could help to get this bill passed. To make people realize that the lack of Veterinary Colleges and therefore the lack of veterinarians will affect them if it hasn't already done so.

The purpose of going to Worcester and Boston was to get people directly involved.

People must realize that veterinarians are the inspectors for the food they buy. Both veterinarians and medical doctors are responsible for research for the prevention and cure of diseases which affect them. Veterinarians are not just the doctors which take care of their pets.

The purpose of a Veterinary College in New England is to educate more veterinarians and also to bring more veterinarians to New England where it is predicted by the N.E.B.H.E. that there will be a critical shortage of over 1,200 veterinarians by 1980.

I feel the Collegian should consider what is important to the people first, and maybe take a closer look at the values of a newspaper.

Sense of loss

To The Editor:

It has been nearly six years since Robert Kennedy was killed in California. Reading the excerps from his mothers' book, in the "Boston Globe", I still feel a sense of loss and of missed opportunity. A man of compassion and understanding, and most importantly, with the ability to grow, Robert Kennedy had a profound affect on me. The leadership of a man like Robert Kennedy would be invaluable in this time of grave national crisis. Instead, we have the misdealings and underhandedness of Richard Nixon. To think, many people and the press condemned Kennedy because he moved to New York state in order to be eligible to run for the Senate. They castigated and reviled him as an opportunist. In these days of Watergate, somehow, that just doesn't seem so outrageous.

Tax resistance

To The Editor:

On Monday, April 15—Income Tax Day—a protest picket will be held at the Internal Revenue Service's office, 322 Appleton Street, in Holyoke from 10 to 11 A.M. Sponsored by War Tax Resistance, an informal group based in Amherst, the event will include a donation of $300 in refused tax money. The $300 will be divided equally between: the South City Coalition for Social Concerns in Holyoke to assist the educational, housing rehabilitation, and community improvement programs carried out by citizens fo the South City neighborhood; and, the American Friends Service Committee North-South Vietnam Fund to help pay for rehabilitation workers, medical supplies, agricultural and fishing equipment which has been provided to war victims in all parts of Vietnam.

War Tax Resistance gathers together people who have refused to pay some or all of their Federal taxes because of conscientious opposition to the American military policies in Indochina. In some cases, money equal to the amount of unpaid taxes has been deposited in our "Alternate Fund" from which contributions are made to agencies working to meet human needs instead of furthering death and destruction. Previous recipients have been: Sickle Cell Anemia Fund, South City Tutorial Center in Holyoke, and the Bach Mai Hospital Fund.

Why are we back again this Income Tax Day? Nixon's tax evasions. Inequities in the tax laws. Heavy spending for military programs and new weapons systems (such as the B-1 Bomber). Cut-offs of funding for critical areas like health, housing, employment, nutrition, pollution, education. All this, but most important — we protest again because the war and American responsibility for it are not over! There is no peace but war by proxy, bankrolled by over $3 billion this year from American taxpayers (80 per cent of Saigon's budget). There is no democratic process or political freedom in South Vietnam but continued bloodshed and jail for the regime's critics. Tax resistance will continue until American complicity in the war truly ends. Join us on Monday in Holyoke.

Peace,
James Matlack, on behalf of War Tax Resistance

On Solzhenitsyn

I can't wait until next month. Gulag Archipelago is due to be released on the fifteenth of May and I am looking forward to reading it. I understand it's quite long, but I feel it may be one of the most important books to ever be published in the seventies.

I've read several books on communist terror involving their prison system and their KGB. It is known, very well known, that the Russians are more brutal than any other nation in its treatment of prisoners, possibly save the Red Chinese. Books such as John Noble's "I Was A Slave In Russia", and Solzhenitsyn's "The First Circle" and "One Day In The Life Of Ivan Denisovich" are the best examples of documentation I've found. I'm certain that there are others just as good.

Up to now, our government, our presses, our mass media and "the establishment" has ignored this type of information and has pushed for a detente policy with the communist nations around the world. Most of this detente policy has been put into effect by Richard Nixon since he became president in 1969. In the meantime, the populus of the United States had mellowed its attitude towards communism, probably because of the influence of the "liberal" mass media, which has been constantly apologizing for Russia since the days of Lenin.

Since Nixon took office, trade with Russia has escalated. With the taxpayer-financed Export-Import Bank picking up the cost (through loans granted to Russia that are never paid), American businesses have built up Russia and it forced researcher Antony C. Sutton, of the Hoover Institute for War, Peace and Revolution to conclude in his new book, "National Suicide", that 90 to 95 percent of all Soviet technology comes from the United States and the west.

But back to Solzhenitsyn. This is a man who has been living under communism all his life. He renounced it after serving an eight-year prison term for criticizing Stalin in a letter to a friend. The two books of his I've already mentioned are both fictional but, let's face it, this man knows what such prisons are like. It would be impossible for anyone except a communist (who would lie) to refute what he has said. All that happened was he was harrassed. He was not in serious trouble again until Gulag Archipelago was published. This time, it was no novel. This time, it was the truth-straight and direct-about the Russians.

Because of this, Solzhenitsyn might have been executed or imprisoned. But because of the pressure of the West, he is a free man today. He shows that the Russians cannot stand up to pressure from the West. It's just that the West has to have the guts to use it.

I have written on detente before and I feel it is wrong. I see Gulag Archipelago as a turning point. Once again, the truth about communism will prevail and the thousands of American anti-communists will pressure Nixon to top detente and get tough with the Kremlin.

As for the "liberal" mass media (such as the New York Times) which has been constantly promoting communism, they were the ones giving Alexander Solzhenitsyn the big buildup. My guess is that they were hoping for another Boris Pasternak. But they did not get another Pasternak. They got an anti-communist Russian author, a brilliant man, a great writer, and a man who has more guts than you or I could ever think about. They built him up, and gave themselves enough rope to hang themselves with.

Next month, when Gulag Archipelago is published in the United States, it will turn the tide. Let all of us who are anti-communists hope that it does.

UMass 1951 - 1974

In the era prior to Bob Dylan, the Kennedy's Martin Luther King, yes even B. E. (that's before Elvis), UMass was the scene of things the judiciary elements of campus society thought necessary to punish, lest future adults become ne'er do wells. Here reprinted from the Collegian of January 18, 1951 is a report of a trial held by the Interfraternity Council over a charge brought against them for overpartying:

TAU EPSILON PHI GETS SIX WEEKS
SOCIAL PROBATION

Tau Epsilon Phi Pleaded guilty with exceptions to a charge that it violated rules concerning conduct during a mixed gathering at the fraternity house on December 2, 1950.

Brought before the I.F.C. court, at Skinner Auditorium on Tuesday at 3 p.m., T.E.P. was charged with violating article C-4 and C-7 by Professor Vernon P. Helming, Chairman of the Student Life Committee.

Article C-4 reads: "....Guests will be allowed throughout the building at such an event; but it is understood that rooms will be at all times open and lighted."

Article C-7 reads: "The social chairman will see to it, by proper advance notice, that guests leave at the designated closing time. When he ascertained that they have all left, he will report the fact to the chaperones."

In a brief presented by Bill Less for the defense, T.E.P. pleaded for leniency in the light of the events and circumstances involved.

According to the brief, Milton Crane, social chairman for the night. He removed the rest of the records and announced that it was time to leave. Later, upon returning to the first floor he found that some persons not realizing how late it was were still dancing. Again he said it was time to leave and they proceeded to do so.

Then, the brief went on to say, Crane seeing the impatience of the chaperones in wanting to leave, callld up to the third floor. When he didn't receive any answer, he assumed that all had left and reported the fact to the chaperones. Before leaving, Professor Williams decided to check the upper floors where he found: one room occupied by a departing couple; One room with five couples in it; and one room whose occupants were slow in answering a call at the locked door.

After 35 minutes of deliberation the court placed T.E.P. on social probation of mixed groups for a period of six weeks starting January 18.

I have for some time wanted to tell a story about an incident that I witnessed in 1972, in the UMass answer to Watts and Harlem, Southwest...particularly Washington Tower.

In 1951 people caught in a locked room nearly stopped social activity for 6 weeks. Now...

After spending a few hours in UMass' answer to The Bowery, the Blue Wall, I left for Southwest with a friend of mine with whom I planned to spend the night. We arrived at the concrete ghetto about 1:30 and after waiting for the elevator ten minutes or so and ascending to an upper floor in that darkened cubicle (which oddly had the odor of sewage) we arrived at her room.

We prepared for bed in the usual way...facewash, teeth etc. I remember quite distinctly my reaction to the lavatory facilities in that they were characteristically bland like the rest of the building. They were, however, quite in order and not too unclean all things considered. I might add at this point that my friend's room was directly across from the toilet and no more than ten feet separated the two rooms.

We awoke about 9:30 a.m. Saturday. I was the first to get up. I crossed the hall and entered through the same door, marked toilet, that I had used the night before.

I walked in the door. I walked out the door to see if I was in the right place. I was, but I couldn't and still can't believe what I saw.

The toilets were ripped up.

The sinks were twisted upside down.

The mirrors were broken.

The walls that separate toilet stalls were torn down and bent.

There was water an inch deep on the floor.

Seemingly five hundred yards of toilet paper and towel were strung over this junk.

The towel machines had been George Formaned to flatness.

All the showers were on with the drains plugged so that the acquatic atmosphere could be perpetuated.

I guess college students will always have something to rebel against. My big concern is what's next...and how.

More rhetoric than action

According to the Boston Globe, Governor Sargent's schedule on Tuesday April 9 read as follows:

9:30 a.m. Staff Time
1:00 p.m. Staff Time
2:00 p.m. Red Sox Game.
3:45 p.m. Press Conference with Southern Mass. University Trustees.
7:15 p.m. Open Forum at Bishop Stang H.S.

The Red Sox game was cancelled.

Nevertheless the Governor could not find time to meet with a group who had come to defend the rights of Russell Daniels, a mentally ill black man caught in the mesh of injustice.

"More ceremony than issue" was the reaction of the Governor's office to the thirty Russell Daniels supporters who went to the State House on Tuesday. The entire affair turned out to prove the lack of concern on the part of officials in regard to the case.

The supporters waited in the reception room for three hours to meet with Sargent and presented over 700 letters on behalf of the Daniels case and other issues related to mental retardation.

It is clear that Governor Sargent has attempted to pass off this case by burying it in the red tape of bureaucracy.

He has ignored the inconsistencies in the Springfield police reports on the arrest and confession. He has failed to react to local press coverage and the WFSB documentary "Nine Year Old in Norfolk".

And even though the actual jurors for the trial are having second thoughts, the Governor still maintains that the verdict and the sentence hold.

Steve Teichner, an assistant to Sargent, told Alto Daniels, Russell's brother, that the Governor had no power to intervene with the Springfield police. Legally that may be true, but the power of the office to pressure the police through public suggestion would indeed be strong enough to force the police to further explain their actions in the case.

The excuse that the group did not have an appointment is common and in this instance poor. It is obvious from his schedule that Sargent could have found time for at least a short meeting with the group. The body made it clear they were coming, that they were tired of being lost in the red tape of the system and that their aim was to confront Governor Sargent directly on the issue.

Teichner said that "Ceremony is nice ... but it doesn't solve the issue."

The rhetoric of delay is nice too but it's only purpose is to prevent positive action.

And so today, Good Friday, a grown man whom Belchertown State Hospital has admitted to having the mentality of a nine year old sits in prison still, serving a life sentence on the basis of a confession he could not even read.

South African struggle

To The Editor:

The South African and Rhodesian economies are tied inextricably to American and international trade. These societies are able to function, despite the subjugation of black majorities by white minorities, because of this trade.

Mr. Baillieul, in his recent letter to the Collegian, is correct in stating that American investment in South Africa provides a potentially enormous lever for social change. He fails to see that this leverage would be best applied by the departure, or threat of departure, of American investments from South Africa.

Those liberalizing policies that some American companies have adopted (equal pay scales for black and white workers means little if members of one race are predominantly supervisors while members of another are predominantly supervised) were adopted as an attempt to head off the bad publicity these companies recieve for operating in South Africa, publicity that could alienate American consumers. American investments in Rhodesia and Angola receive little publicity, and, as could be expected, American investments in these places are as thoroughly racist as the societies in which they operate. Companies such as GM operating in South Africa could not continue to do so if such operations jeopardized their American market.

*Mr. Baillieul is also correct in noting that the South African government would not hesitate to hold Lesotho and Botswana, black nations dependent on South Africa, economically hostage. A demand for the withdrawal of American investment in South Africa must be tied to a demand for economic and technical assistance (not corporate investment) to these countries to help them develop and control their own economies.

Furthermore, Mr. Baillieul's discussion of the undesirability of violence only serves to obfuscate the issue. I personally feel that it is both immoral and inappropriate to advocate violence as a means to social change from the sidelines, risking neither commitment to the struggle nor exposure to is consequences. The white supremacist societies of southern Africa offer daily doses of violence, repression, and subjugation to the blacks and to those white committed to social justice-living in these societies. These people are already receiving the consequences of violence; their struggle is to bring and end to violence.

Our role is to offer them our support, publicize their struggle, and, by demanding the withdrawal of American investment, aid their cause.

Careers jeopardized

To The Editor:

Are the athletic administrators at UMass so obsessed with the business of making money that they've forgotten what athletic activities are all about? Athletic director McInery and Dean Hischhoff have decided that head coach Tom Dunn's salary will be abolished due to inflation. Is it impossible to compromise? They think so. They'd rather abolish the gymnastics program, which is run on the lowest financial figures believable, than subtract a few scholarships from the God Almighty football and basketball teams in order to support it.

It seems that these people have decided to ignore the personal aspirations of many dedicated gymnasts in order to achieve this end. Many gymnasts chose to attend UMass because of its excellent team. It possesses the potential to rank among the top ten teams in the nation within the next two years. In the past two years it has fostered two All-Americans and has ranked higher than ever in the Eastern League, which is the most competitive league in the nation for gymnastics. It would be an absolute shame to degrade the program, let alone wipe it out all together. To deny the already involved gymnasts and the future prospective gymnasts their hopes and plans for a gymnastics career is coldhearted and hypocritical to the chilosophy of collegiate athletic competition.

All applications must be received in the Amherst Police Department by 5:00 p.m. E.D.S.T., April 29, 2974.

Amherst is an equal opportunity employer and encourages all qualified applicants to apply regardless of age, race, creed, color, sex or national origin.

Gymnasts need help

To The Editor:

Due to administrative manipulations the UMass Mens Gymnastics Team is almost certain to be eliminated as a sport on this campus following the 1974-75 season.

This possibility, due to the financial situation that exists in the Athletic Dept., is unfortunate as it does not accurately reflect the importance or popularity, of a quality gymnastics team on this campus. Doing away with the Men's Gymnastics Team would put an end to one of the most successful, up-and-coming sports this school has known.

For these reasons, I am asking you, on behalf of the gymnastics team, to come out and show support for GYMNASTICS. In the future there will be a table on the concourse level of the campus center where partition signing will be held.

Please come out and support this effort, enough signatures will necessitate the appropriation of funds by the Mass. Legislature in order to cover the necessary coaching positions.

Anyone who has witnessed this exciting team perform on campus must recognize the value of our sport and the importance of its continuance!

Guru Maharaj Ji's friend spreads the word

By SHARON HUGHES
MDC Staff

Mahatma Trivenanand Ji, disciple and personal friend of the 16-year-old "perfect master" Guru Maharaj Ji, Wednesday night said spiritual salvation can be reached by accepting the teachings of the young Guru.

Speaking before 75 people at the Public Health Auditorium, Mahatma Trivenanand Ji outlined the philosophy of Maharaj Ji which culminates in a state of mind he termed "constant satisfaction, divine light, spiritual harmony, and the divine nectar." Trivenanand is touring New England to "reveal by the grace of the master the way to realize love."

The teachings of the "spiritual master" as described by Trivenand Ji are essentially those of the Bible, especially "love thy neighbor", with an added emphasis on the inherently altruistic nature of human beings and their capacity to do good. The role of Guru Maharaj Ji is to unite mankind, who despite their common belief in God maintain separate religions.

"God's divine kingdom is inside all of us. They come from the Bible ... realization is divine harmony. Divine harmony is necessary for spiritual salvation", he said.

Seated on a stuffed chair draped with a white sheet, he opened the speech with an Indian chant emanating "divine sounds." His head was wrapped in sheer, pale pink cloth and he wore a pale pink garment resembling a dress, partially covered by a gray tweed overcoat.

Trivenanand Ji addressed the audience as "Brothers and Sisters" in a strong Indian accent. His speech frequently rambled along in apparently disconnected thoughts.

The first step toward spiritual salvation is believing in God and following the teachings of the Bible, Trivenanand Ji said. In that process a person realizes the potential for happiness and love that exists within the soul.

"Constant happiness occurs when a person realizes God and the happiness within himself, Trivenanand Ji said.

He emphasized that happiness is not an external feeling but one that "arises within people like a well" by relating a story about a UMass Psychology professor who normally "loved seeing flowers" but his mind was full of sorrow because he lost $100,000." In his state of unhappiness the sight of flowers (an external object) no longer made him happy, thus proving happiness exists within people, Trivenanand said.

Although this disciple of Guru Maharaj Ji rarely mentioned his master's name, he implied that the adolescent master is God.

"I am here by the Grace of God, the grace of Maharaj Ji... Like Jesus Christ, the son of God, Maharaj Ji makes people realize their souls."

Anyone can reach the state of "realization" he said, by believing in God and ridding themselves of "pride".

"The spiritual master gives knowledge that some people do not recognize. Unnecessarily people are proud. Unlucky people are proud thinking they've come into this world permanently. Their active, proud mind can be tamed by realization and the sight of divine light."

"Within country of mine, there are enemies of anger and hate and greed. Due to them, people are suffering and do not understand what is happening to them."

Closed eyes at the mike...

By BOB SCHEIER
MDC Staff

The scene was the Public Health Auditorium. The audience looked like a typical cross-section of the UMass student body; some clean cut, some bearded, many in dungarees.

Some of the 75 persons sat with their eyes closed, meditating, and others softly talked with friends, or turned to appraise new arrivals.

The center of the stage had been converted into an altar for the 16-year-old "perfect master" Guru Maharaj Ji.

A chair, standing table, held a blue-tinted picture of the 16-year-old "perfect master."

Six musicians fidgeted nervously on stage behind the microphones, smiling softly at each other, watching the audience, and occasionally closing their eyes and meditating. They played flutes, guitars, and drums.

Then they started to play, and it sounded good. The lyrics sounded more like folk music or soft rock, with gentle riffs on guitar and autoharp.

The musicians played several songs, and it was surprisingly (for me) pleasant. One of the women in the band had an excellent voice, and on the high notes--eyes closed in concentration, hands resting on a guitar in her lap--she sounded like Joni Mitchell. Until, of course, you listened to the words and realized they were about the guru and his message.

For instance: "There is a way to feel eternal peace, and he wants to give it to you..."

After the songs, there were speeches; a thin young man in a conservative gray suit spoke of the need to "focus on love" to rid people of the "visitors of hate and greed..." The main attraction of the night--Mahatma Trivenanand Ji, spoke in a thick Indian accent from a cloth covered chair at one side of the stage, along the same lines.

My subjective reactions were that the entire presentation seemed quite vulnerable to ridicule, if one was so inclined, and also that whatever was being felt by the people who sat with their eyes closed, I didn't feel it.

But beneath that, I felt the need of those who came and sat and bowed and smiled at the speeches and the songs. Beneath the urge to smirk at the whole thing was the uneasy feeling that there were needs felt--and needs met ther in the auditorium--that I didn't understand.

Post cards sent to eligible 18-year-olds

"In addition," said Brand, "we must be certain that a student is domiciled in the state." A domicile is a person's true, fixed and permanent home and place of habitation, where he intends to remain permanently or for an indefinite time. Establishing one's domicile requires proof of residency. Presenting such proof calls for birth certificates, motor vehicle registrations, property ownership or permanent employment in a position not normally filled by a student.

Students currently enrolled at UMass and classified as non-Massachusetts students have been mailed postcards notifying them of the new regulations. If a student wishes to seek reclassification he may obtain "Tuition Classification Appeal Forms" at the Admissions Office, Registrar's Office, or the Bursar's Office.

"This isn't really new", said Brand. "A lot of students appealed their classification before the ruling."

The new regulations are retroactive to January 1, 1974.

The rules are designed to maintain the same level of tuition income for the Commonwealth. UMass admits only five per cent of its undergraduate from outside the state. The new regulations have nothing to do with the admissions policy, which remains the same.

Prof's book eyed for movie

By ALAN ANASTOS
MDC Correspondent

Sam's Legacy, a new novel by UMass Professor of English, Jay Neugeboren, made its debut on bookshelves across America and may become a movie. Neugeboren is an Associate Professor of English and a writer-in-residence here.

The novel is about a small-time gambler who lives in Brooklyn with his father. The latter's lifelong friend, Mason Tidewater, once a star in the old Negro Baseball League, gives Sam his memoirs, thus providing the reader with a story within a story.

Critics John A. Williams, John Collier, Shane Stevens, and Peter Farb have complimented and recommended Neugeborn's latest achievement. Says Williams, "A striking work...smacks of scorching veracity... Ben, Sam's gambling, Tidewater's proud mien, the betrayals, warnings, love scenes, combine together with the writing, which streaks like wind down emptying streets, to make Sam's Legacy a remarkable contemporary work."

Neugeborn said Sam's Legacy has been optioned for a possible movie to Sidney Glazier, who has made such films as Take the Money and Run, The Producers, and Catholics.

At present, Neugeborn says he is anxiously awaiting further reviews on the novel.

Those who are familiar with Neugeborn's work remember Listen Ruben Fontanez, Parentheses, and his 1966 novel Big Man, the story about a Black basketball star and the scandal he became involved in.

Corky's Brother is perhaps his best known work. That collection of stories merited three printings and selections from the book have appeared in nearly two-dozen different anthologies.

Neugeborn has also written articles which have appeared in such publications as Esquire, Mademoiselle, Commentary, Sport, and The New American Review.

When preparing and writing a novel, Neugeborn says: "I often take a situation with which I am familiar, but about which I am curious to know more about. Then I take it from there."

Neugeborn lives in North Hadley with his wife Betsy, who is a painter, and their two children. He reveals that "...there is another on the way, too!"

Farm workers debate cancelled; Lougee emphasizes struggle

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

A debate, concerning the United Farm Workers, that was scheduled to take place yesterday in the Colonial Lounge, had to be cancelled due to unfortunate circumstances.

The debate was part of a series sponsored by the United Christian Foundation called the First Ammendment Series. Every Thursday at 12:15 in the Colonial Lounge the UCF sponsors a debate on some controversial public issue in an attempt to stimulate a public dialogue and foster greater community awareness and action.

Yesterday's debate was between Matt Tackeff, a Collegian columnist and critic of the boycott, and Bernie Louge, a member of the local Juan de la Cruz Boycott Committee. A group of 25 people had gathered to hear arguments concerning support of the UFW boycott, however Tackeff was unable to attend. Instead, Lougee talked about the development of the UFW, their boycott and the picketing activities of the local committee.

Lougee emphasized how the nature of the UFW struggle has changed drastically in the past year. The increasing concentration of agriculture in the hands of a few corporations and the unusually high profit margins of this huge, high-yield industry have generated a national, multi-billion agribussiness complex, he maintained. This coupled with the aggressive union-busting tactics of the Teamsters Union have intensified the struggle of the UFW.

Lougee pointed out the drastically inferior benefits that the Teamster contracts offer the individual farmworker and emphasized how the workers have repeatedly expressed their preference for the UFW by large-scale strikes and walkouts, that protest Teamster contracts.

Lougee said that the UFW, contrary to many reports has consistently supported the rights of the workers of decide the issue of representation for themselves, in the form of free, secret-ballot elections. In fact, the UFW has won 49 of 50 elections held in the past seven years and has had countless requests for elections denied.

Lougee added that there is weekly picketing, Thursday through Saturday at A&P in Northampton and at Four Seasons Liquor Store in Hadley. The presentation was followed by a question and answer period.

Pete Sabey of the UCF said that hopefully the debate would be rescheduled within the next two weeks and that announcements would be forthcoming.

Faculty evaluations may be started

Faculty members will soon be evaluating their department heads and-or chairmen and various academic administrators if a motion passed by yesterday's meeting of the Faculty Senate is implemented.

In other business, the Senate heard a report from Seymour Shapiro on recent budget meetings held by the legislature in Boston, and agreed to the demise of the Individual (Interdisciplinary) Ph.D degree program.

Concerning faculty evaluations, the Personal Policy Committee suggested in their report that these review procedures could be put into effect when a department policy committee or the members of that department's faculty deemed it necessary.

Senator Otto L. Stein commented that, "Others should be evaluated besides the deans, such as the University Accounting Office and those who run the computers."

An amendment to the motion was introduced to place exact figures on how many members of a department would be needed to initiate the review process.

"But a few 'soreheads' could be disruptive to the department if these few members of the department's faculty continually called for evaluation," said Senator Clinton R. Fuller.

The amendment was defeated but the main motion received Fac-Sen approval. Present at recent meetings by the Ways and Means Committee of the Mass. State legislature, Senator Shapiro reported to the Fac-Sen that no new taxes in this election year may mean a definite cut of the educational budget.

"A tight, hard education budget might result in the paring of enrollments," stated Shapiro.

The elimination of merit pay for one year or graduated tuition were other solutions offered by the Ways and Means Committee.

In other action, the Interdisciplinary Ph.D program was voted down after a special report by the Graduate Council to the Fac-Sen revealed the program was ineffective.

Currently there are three master's candidates who wish to enter the program and none presently involved in working for their doctorate.

33% of released inmates still commit new crimes

WASHINGTON (AP) - One of every three federal offenders commits a new crime within two years after his release from prison, according to a new Justice Department survey released Thursday.

The survey concluded that the rate of repeaters for federal prisoners is about the same or slightly less than the figure reported 10 years ago.

Nevertheless, "the fact that it's stayed the same or perhaps a little better means we are making progress," said Norman A. Carlson, director of the Bureau of Prisons.

Carlson said federal prisons are getting a much higher proportion of so-called high-risk inmates more likely to persist in committing crimes than was the case a decade ago.

He told reporters that low-risk offenders more often are being spared prison and put on probation.

Atty. Gen. William B. Saxbe said the survey, which covered 1,800 inmates released in 1970, was the first major study of recidivism-or criminal repeaters-of the federal population in 10 years.

The last survey reported the recidivism rate at 35 per cent while the new one said it is about 33 per cent.

Easter celebration

Last year, over 1000 people gathered together at the campus pond to celebrate Easter.

This year, there will be an Easter Sunrise Celebration held at the pond at 6:30 a.m. Sunday morning, April 14. The speaker will be Paul MacVittie, pastor of the College Church in Northampton. All are invited to attend.

The service will also be broadcast live over WHMP-Radio.

Notes and quotes

The THAD JONES-MEL LEWIS ORCHESTRA will appear at UMass on Friday evening, April 12, at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. A Fine Arts Council Special Event, this will mark the Orchestra's first visit to the Amherst campus.

THAD JONES-MEL LEWIS ORCHESTRA is jazz at its finest. It is "in" jazz, with a special emphasis on sound and feeling. Its membership consists of New York's finest musicians. The response to THAD JONES-MEL LEWIS ORCHESTRA is the talk of the jazz world and the biggest thing to hit in many seasons. Their impeccable musicianship, their excitement, their unique sounds are showcased here for the very first time. Tickets for this event are now on sale at the Fine Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall, and are priced at $2.00 for UMass-Amherst students, $1.00 for others. Special group rates may be arranged by calling the Fine Arts Council Box Office, 545-0202.

Teacher prep.

School of Education teacher preparation programs which will be accepting new students for the fall semester are offering presentations during Undergraduate Day at Marathon. Fall semester room-choosing

Residence Hall room-choosing for the Fall Semester, 1974 will be held in each residence hall during the week of April 16-19, 1974, according to the following schedule:

Tuesday, April 16 - Students planning to live in the rooms that they currently occupying may sign up with their heads of residence on this day.

Wednesday, Arpil 17 - Students desiring to move to unreserved space within the hall they are currently occupying may sign up with their heads of residence on this day.

Thursday, April 18 - Students desiring to move to unreserved space in halls other than the ones they are currently occupying may sign up with the appropriate heads of residence on this day.

Friday, April 19 - Students currently residing off-campus who desire to move to unreserved space on-campus for the fall semester may sign up with the appropriate heads of residence on this day.

Room Deposit Refunds

Students who move-off campus in accordance with the University's housing policy are eligible for a refund of their $100 Room Security Deposit provided they:

1. Do not sign up for a residence hall room during Room Choosing for next semester.
2. Fill out an Off-Campus Address form in the Housing Office, 235 Whitmore Building.
3. If you sign up for a residence hall room during Room Choosing and then decide to reside off-campus you must go to the Housing Office, 235 Whitmore Building, and inform them of your intention to live off-campus before Saturday, July 20, 1974, in order to be eligible for a Deposit refund. Students who notify the Housing Office after this date will forfeit their Deposits. So, make your plans early and notify Housing before July 20.

Grants offered for growth study

Internships offering grants up to $600 plus travel and research expenses are now open to students interested in working on population growth and environmental issues, according to David Baker of the Population Institute.

Students who participate in the Intern Program will work closely with state legislators and agencies in researching and analyzing population-related issues, policies and legislation. Activities of past interns have contributed to such positive results as the creation of a state quality of life commission (Massachusetts), and the development of a population education curriculum for state schools, (Washington).

Arrangements for academic credit are decided between the student and his-her faculty advisor. The program outline is flexible and alternative approaches to the research of population policy will be considered.

Students interested in applying for the September, 1974 - May, 1975 program should request applications from: Mr. David Baker, The Population Institute, 110 Maryland Avenue, N.E., Washington, D.C. 20002

Deadline for application is April 30th.

Dear Aggie

Can't get a date

Dear Aggie,

I am a woman of 20, and consider myself very desirable. But I can't get a date. And the pressure is on. At the advice of my sorority sisters, I frosted my hair and even went to Florida over the vacation to get a tan. I wear low-necked jerseys, and even make by b--bs stick out. I've tried everything, even hanging around the Bluewall. What else can I do0

Signed,
Hard up for a Hard on

Dear HuHo,

To start off with, unfrost your hair and start saving your money for better things. Revert to turtlenecks and cut the padding out of your bra and for goodness sakes, if you're going to "hang out" anyplace, try the Everywoman's Center. You need more than help - you need an unbrainwashing!

No preaching in this letter, just a bit of advice to the author(s), (who are more likely than not, male) - GROW UP and have a little bit more respect for women; not the thousand-year-old stereotype women, but for the people women. In other words, where's your intelligence?

A NOTE TO PUCKERED UP

I did do some looking up of the subject of kissing fetishes and couldn't really come up with much. I did come across the term "fixed idea" and when I looked that up, I came up with this:

> The term "fixed idea" designates the principal part of the complete psychological state; yet only a part- the center, namely, whence it all departs, and whither everything reverts... The mechanism of the fixed idea consists in associations of states of consciousness in a single direction. (In your case, that of kissing)

The author of this bood, The Psychology of Attention associates a fixed idea with all kinds of pathologies, all very extreme, but in essence, maybe the reason you have a kissing fettish is to get attention. Please don't take this as gospel. It's just an idea. The book also mentioned will power, and lack of it in really extreme cases, so I'm sure all you would have to do is try really hard, and within a fairly short period of time, you can get over your craze. Who knows, maybe you'll grow out of it.

Dear Aggie,

I have this problem with my boyfriend. He has this weird fetish. It's what you might call a lettuce fetish. Whenever we go out he wears a psychedelic tie that says, "You hot ticket" on it. Besides that, he wears shoes and socks. What am I going to do???

Sincerely,
Prefers Cucumbers

P.S. Don't say that if your advice doesn't work to send him to you. You always say that. Besides, I want him for myself.

Dear P.D.,

Your boyfriend sounds perfectly normal to me. What's the problem?

Bomber wants fresco redone

ALFONSINE, Italy (AP) — A former United States pilot who regrets the damage he caused during bombing missions in World War II is paying thousands of dollars to have a painting redone for a church destroyed during the war.

But he ordered painter Anacleto Margotti to keep his name secret.

"I don't want to be taken as one who is looking for publicity," Margotti, a 73-year-old artist, quoted the ex-pilot as saying.

Margotti said the man first came to see him at home in August, then returned in September and November when he saw and approved a sketch of the painting.

Margotti said the man told him he was a businessman who often commutes between his home town in Michigan and his European office in Paris. The painter gave his initials as L.F.

The painting, now virtually finished, shows the baptism of Jesus in the River Jordan.

The painting, being done on wood, is virtually a copy of the original "baptism" Margotti frescoed on the wall of the baptismal chapel of the parish church of Alfonsine, an agricultural town between Venice and Bologna.

Alfonsine was heavily damaged by American bombing in World War II and then razed by mines the German troops planted before retreating northward. The church and the town have been rebuilt.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Aries is the new and Capricorn is experience. There are various ways of communicating experience, love and compassion. Through an understanding of astrology, we are better able to appreciate the subtle nuances of our personal energies. Leo is life force and Taurus is the beauty of being. Gemini is the idea and Sagittarius is the philosophy. One person is individuality and a mob is mediocrity. Cancer is protection and Virgo is service. To be yourself is everything. Imitating others is to be nothing. Libra is grace and Scorpio is sensuality. Body awareness is as important as reading, writing and intellectualizing. Aquarius is surprise and Pisces is sweet mystery. The elusive life force runs in a cyclic circle around the zodiac. It is a part of all of us and to what degree depends on us.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Steady progress indicated if you keep goal in sight. Means avoid being sidetracked. One who is timid, brooding might try to inflict you with "blues." Maintain balance, sense of humor. Cancer, Capricorn persons could figure in important ways.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Flexibility now is essential. If you are rigid, you lose. Plan ahead in sense that you have alternatives at hand. Refuse to be upset by coworkers who complain, make demands and insist on having their own way. Social contact could be meaningful in positive sense.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): What appears to be an obstacle could actually be a healthy challenge. Know it and react in direct, specific manner. Accent is on gain received through change, creative endeavors. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio are likely to be in picture.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Collect additional information. Avoid rushing to decisions, moves, judgments. Be sure your knowledge of legal implications is complete. Make inquiries. Member of opposite sex is likely to be involved. If married, mate confides problem. If single, you may seriously contemplate matrimony.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Low key approach is best—study Cancer message. Adjust conditions at home. Be diplomatic. Listen and learn. Relative who appears belligerent merely wants additional attention. Understand and react in mature manner.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Avoid taking unnecessary chances. Member of opposite sex can be impressed by sincerity, not sensationalism. Pisces person and another Virgo could figure prominently. Creative resources are tapped. Confusion now could lead to financial bath. Know it and obtain factual information.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Build on solid base. Avoid taking others for granted. Older individual has more authority than you might imagine. You tend now to surprise or startle many persons. Key is to learn and apply lessons. Money and promotions and prestige are involved.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Study Libra message. Check secret resources, places. Means go out of your way—nothing will be handed you on silver platter. But extra effort will pay dividends. You are just about ready to understand truth about a free loader.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Money comes your way if you throw off fear, doubt. Be confident, direct, creative. Take a chance on yourself. Highlight independence, originality. Welcome new contacts, challenges. One who attempts to bully you will be in for rude awakening.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Cycle is high—aim for goal and make room for yourself at top. Ask questions of one who seems to hold views opposite those of your own. Answers might surprise and be informative. Wear colors which attract attention.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Check Scorpio message. Take round-about way in order to observe from different angle. Be versatile enough to change your mind. Look beyond the obvious or immediate. Sagittarius, Gemini persons are in picture.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Emotions dominate and you can relax and have fun. Romantic interlude is beneficial. Express feelings. Refuse to be blocked, tense and locked away from life.

letter to the Sports Editor

Gymnastics judge knocks AIAW writer

To the Editor:

I have often been impressed by the high quality of sports reporting in the "Collegian", especially with the knowledgeable, informative and impartial job Candy Gross has been doing in her articles pertaining to girls gymnastics. Being an internationally rated gymnastics judge who has judged many of the top teams in United States and Canada, I believe that I have a pretty good overview of the sport as it is practiced today.

To my great dissapointment, Dave Eibel's article on AIAW gymnastics championships in Monday's paper was so far below par for the usual sports reporting in the "Collegian that I felt I had to write this letter.

I was present, as a judge, in both meets he refers to, acting as the superior judge for vaulting at the Eastern Regionals as well as being the only judge from the East selected to go to AIAW National Championships in California. My views as to what went on differ with Mr. Eibel in several areas.

To begin with, UMass girls team did a superb job at the Eastern Regionals and definitely deserved to win. With the same kind of performances in Sacramento the outcome of the meet might have been quite different.

A National competition is usually a very close meet, where one little slip can make the difference between winning or placing at all. With the best collegiate gymnasts competing, it takes luck, the right breaks and practically perfect routines in order to come out on top. UMass team apparently had all these things on their side last year, but, like with many things in life, perfect situations are hard to duplicate.

It is also true that UMass had a poor draw, having to compete in the first round. However, it was a random selection, and somebody had to go first. Teams in the AIAW Championships are not seeded. (Seeding has been voted down at coaches meetings for the last two years.)

Being in the first round, UMass had to put up with a slow rotation, while scorers, flashers and averagers learned their jobs (none of the girls had done anything like this before). Several mistakes were made an averaging the judges scores or flashing incorrect averages. At least two changes affected UMass girls (Linda Nelligans correct vaulting average was 8.8, not 8.75, but Heidi Armstrong's score having been recorded incorrectly, changed from 8.65 to 8.5). There were times when the flasher showed an incorrect score and had to be corrected on the spot. To spectators, looking for excuses, it could have seemed like the judges had changed their scores, which was definitely not the case.

If anyone had reasons to complain it should have been the judges. We were on the floor for 7 hours straight, judging without any breaks and practically having to stop the meet in order to go to the bathroom. Under these circumstances it is not always easy to remain consistent, and scores can have a tendency to start slipping up or down as the meet progresses and fatigue sets in. In order to avoid this, a meet referee is present, circulating constantly during the competition. She is usually the highest rated and most experienced judge of the group. Her job is to see that the scores do not slip off the established standard, which she has helped to set at the beginning of the meet. If the judges slip off, she calls a conference and has all judges justify their scores, asking that they be corrected to conform with the standard once again. The meet referee for AIAW Championships was Karen Patiole, an experienced and internationally rated judge who has represented the U.S. in several international competitions. Any coach could request her presence at a certain event if he or she felt that the scores were slipping up or down.

There is also nothing illegal about coaches protesting scores, and the scores can be changed as a result of the protest. Written protests are handled by the meet referee and an impartial Jury of Appeals. The protested routine is reviewed and all judges involved are asked to justify their scores. If, in the opinion of the meet referee, the scores are out of line with the general standard of the meet, they can be changed, as happened with one of the protests filed by Springfield College, the result of which tied UMass and Springfield for the third place. It is to the credit of consistency of all 16 judges at the meet that the meet referee found less than 10 per cent of the protested scores out of line.

Mr. Eibel gives the judges definitely too much credit by suggesting that, after hours of constant judging and with time for nothing else, we were able to be aware of the 18 constantly changing team scores and influence the average score of a girl sufficiently to change the outcome of the meet! Only a computer (which, by the way, was not used at Sacramento) could accomplish such a feat! Team scores were tabulated in a separate room and running scores announced so infrequently that we had no idea of the final team standings until the end of the competition.

As I mentioned at the beginning of this letter, UMass has a talented girls team who, for various reasons, did not have their best day. In a meet where one almost has to score a 9.0 in order to get into finals (not a common score even at UMass home meets), a small slip can eliminate a team or any girl from contention. Anne Vexler and Jeannine Burger had major breaks in their Floor Exercise routines and failed to qualify for finals. Margie Combs qualified, but fell in the finals and was out of contention, since a fall on the floor subtracts one whole point from the girl's score. Anne and Jeannine qualified for finals on the beam despite a major break in Annes preliminary routine. This in itself was an unusual occurrence, since a major break usually eliminates the competitor. However, both fell off the beam in the finals at least twice, while most of the finalists stayed on. Jeannine did well on the bars both times and earned a well deserved 4th place. The uneven bar routine protested by UMass was found to have an intermediate swing in it, causing the .5 deduction which eliminated it from contention. Among routines featuring Olga Korbut's "back flip" on the bars, back somersaults, front and side aerials on the beam and more than one full twisting back somersault in floor exercise routines, one stood very little chance with anything but an almost perfect routine. Our girls team is good and needs no drummed-up excuses for being third in the Nation. Articles like Mr. Eibel's are much more likely to hurt than help the image of girls gymnastics at the University.

Sincerely,
Kitty Kjeldsen
FIG Judge (Gymnastics)
University of Massachusetts

MDC Sports Editor, Dave Eibel, replies to Ms. Kjeldsen:

It seems to me, Ms. Kjeldsen, that your idea of what constitutes sports reporting and mine differ greatly to put it mildly. The article that I wrote for the Collegian of Monday, April 8th, was an analysis of the Nationals and not a boring, almost useless rundown of everyone's score. In the article, I think I stated quite clearly why conditions made a UMass victory almost impossible.

In your letter above, you admit that UMass did not have the luck of the draw. But you fail to mention, that the majority of schools which are against seedings are the small, colleges with little or no chance of winning the nationals. (This year's vote was 25-10 against seedings) Unfortunately, there are so many more schools who don't have the chance of winning, that seedings will probably never be voted in.

You also imply that the meet was poorly organized by your references to a "slow rotation." The excuse that "none of the girls had done anything like this before," reflects the poor state of the meet. How can you have a national meet without national-class officials? If some of the scorers, flashers and averages had never worked a meet before, they should not have used the meet in Sacramento as their testing ground.

Furthermore, I find your indignation about judging for seven hours ill-founded. That is what you are paid to do whether it's for two hours or seven hours.

Finally, I feel that you are in error when you claim that articles like mine will hurt the image of gymnastics at UMass. The fact of the matter is that any more national AIAW meets run like the one in Sacramento will not only hurt womens' gymnastics on this campus but all over the country. Any more repeats of Sacramento will doom womens' gymnastics forever and prevent the sport from ever becoming truly "big time."

If, as you seem to imply, I presented an unfair view of the meet, I beg to differ. It is you, Ms. Kjeldsen, who seem to be a blind, naive idealist, who feels that everything was "hunky-dory." Until people are honest with themselves, as I was with my reporting, womens' gymnastics will never receive the coverage it deserves. And you won't be able to blame that on anyone but yourselves.

Crew faces LaSalle in home regatta

By BOB ESTELLE

The varsity crew will have their only home regatta of the season tomorrow on the Connecticut. Besides the varsity, UMass will be racing a junior varsity and freshman crew.

Co-captains Rich Clair and Peter Berg will lead the varsity against LaSalle and Imperial College of London, England.

The regatta will be highlighted by the dedication of the team's new shell, the J.P.T. This will take place at 12:00 at the Sportsman's Marina in Hadley.

With crosstown neighbor Amherst also racing tomorrow, the races will be held at times that are far apart from each other. The frosh will race against Mt. Herman Prep of Northfield at 10:30. The dedication at noon follows.

The junior varsity race is scheduled for 12:40 with the varsity racing at 1:20.

There will be a reception following the races for alumni and friends following the races. All who plan on watching should go to the Sportsman's Marina where one can view the races. Bring something warm.

This is the one chance you'll get to see the Dad Vail champs at home. Coach Mike Vespoli expects an exciting race but feels his rowers will win.

Orioles beat Sox, 7-6 in 11

BOSTON (AP) - Elrod Hendricks scored from second base on a wild throw during an attempted double play in the 11th inning, carrying the Baltimore Orioles to a 7-6 victory over the Boston Red Sox, yesterday.

Hendricks opened the inning with a single off the leg of relief pitcher Diego Segui, and after Rich Coggins walked, Bobby Grich hit a gounder to Mario Guerrero.

Guerrero forced Coggins, but the relay to first by Doug Griffin went wild and Hendricks scored.

Designated hitter Tommy Davis put Baltimore on top 6-5 in the top of the 10th with a run-scoring double but Juan Beniquez tied it again for Boston with a home run in the bottom of the inning.

A walk, singles by Terry Hughes and Guerrero and an error by Brooks Robinson gave Boston two runs in the second. A double by Bob Montgomery and a single by Doug Griffin made it 3-0 in the third.

New hoop captains named

A trio of seniors, Jim Burke (Needham), Bill Endicott (Somerville), and John Murphy (Clinton), have been elected to captain the 1974-75 University of Massachusetts basketball team, head coach Jack Leaman announced today.

In commenting on the first time that tri-captains have been selected in the sixty-five year court history of the school Leaman said, "I'm very pleased that the team saw fit to honor these three men. They have been the nucleus of teams that have won two straight Yankee Conference titles as well as appearing in two national post season tournaments. They should know what it takes to be a successful team."

Burke, a 6'3 - 195 guard, has been hampered with injuries during his two varsity seasons but is classified as the team's top defensive standout by Leaman. He was an All League performer while at Needham H.S. A member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity, he is a major in the School of Business.

Endicott averaged 14.6 points a game as a junior during the past season and was a first team All Yankee Conference selection. He received the unsung player award at the New England Coaches banquet held recently in Worcester and is a hotel and restaurant manager major.

Murphy, a former standout at Clinton H.S. was the team's second leading scorer as a junior averaging 15.4 points a game and was also a Yankee Conference first team selection. He is a major in the School of Business Administration.

Gymnmen fight for program

By WALT POWERS

The reactions of the men's gymnastics team to the announced phase-out of their program can be characterized by anger, regret, and above all, confusion.

For Tom Dunn the decision means searching for a new job. His qualifications will make the search an easy one, but leaving a program on the verge of national caliber will be one of the biggest regrets of his career. Gene Whelan, the NCAA All-American, the decision means the almost certain necessity of transfering, a difficult undertaking in his junior year. For seniors Jay Aronstein and Steve Scuderi, the decision means nothing to their athletic careers, yet they were the most vociferous in their anger and the first to initiate movements to change the decision.

"The decision downright pissed me off" said Aronstein. "I can't understand why they did it. I can't imagine them (the athletic department) firing a football coach. In our only meet at the Cage we drew 3500 people this year, yet Sports Information spent only $6.44 on us. The Athletic department has ignored us."

Senior Steve Scuderi feels the loss of a national caliber program will hurt both the university and the Massachusetts high school gymnastics program.

"The UMass program is the culmination of the big state program", he said, and because of the quality of the program, low tuition, and good academic environment, "is the best program for state students."

Even if the decision were to be rescinded and this possibility is always possible, the UMass program will have suffered disastrously. The program has already suffered devastating damage. Dunn had to inform about twenty prospective freshmen of the doubtful status of the program and advised them to look elsewhere. Some of these freshman conceivably could have developed UMass into a national contender.

Perhaps the biggest losers in the decision will be the current freshmen and sophomores. If the decision becomes irreversible they will be forced to transfer, and will lose a year of eligibility.

"It's hard to believe", said freshman Steve Marks, "I feel like a senior."

The recommendation to phase out the program was announced just after Gene Whelan's triumphant return from the nationals and it poses the junior engineering major with some sticky problems that aren't yet resolved. Whelen could use up his eligibility next year, but because of international competition may delay the decision.

Whelan thinks the quality of the UMass gymnastics program and engineering department are excellent, and dearly wants to stay.

According to him though, the Athletic department "is making it difficult".

Movements to reverse the decision began shortly after the decision was announced. They focus primarily on the State allocation of a gymnastics coaching position at the University, and Jay Aronstein says he is optomistic about the chances of success.

We'll contact members of the administration and legislature and ask their support" he said. Aronstein mentioned the organization of a large letter writing campaign from gymnastics supporters to influence legislators. Already petitions are being circulated throughout the campus in support of the allocation of the new post.

Nearly the entire team questioned the way the athletic department handled the matter of the recommendation, even though Dunn admitted he could understand that budget crises would force McInerney to make the decision". Whelan admitted he that he "had an inkling of the situation over a month ago," but Aronstein thought that the decision was deliberately withheld until the season was over.

"It was a strategically good time for them to make the decision", said Aronstein, "because the season is over and there's nothing we can do about it. There had been rumors about this all season, but you can't fight rumor."

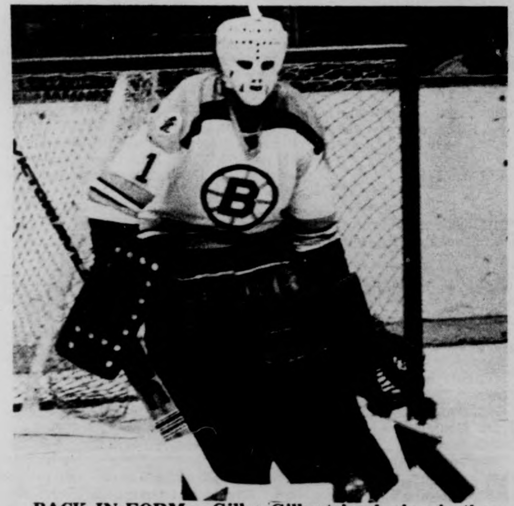
HANGING IN DOUBT is the future of freshman gymnast Peter Lusk who intends like most freshmen gymnasts to transfer if the phasedown decision is final.



BACK IN FORM -- Gilles Gilbert is playing in the playoffs the way he performed at the start of the season. Result: Bruins hold a 2-0 series advantage over the Maple Leafs.

Bruins on top, 6-3
Go 2 up in series

BOSTON (AP) - Phil Esposito scored once and set up linemates Ken Hodge and Wayne Cashman for two other goals Thursday night as The Boston Bruins defeated the Toronto Maple Leafs 6-3 for a 2-0 lead in their National Hockey League quarterfinal playoff series.

Boston goalie Gilles Gilbert, who blanked the Leafs 1-0 in the opener Wednesday night at Boston Garden, turned in another outstanding effort in helping the Bruins to a commanding advantage with the next two games scheduled for Toronto Saturday and Sunday.

Frustrated and held to just three shots on goal in the first game, the high-scoring Esposito line broke loose early. It received plenty of help from Bobby Schmautz, who had one goal and two assists.

Esposito the NHL scoring champion for the last four years, set up Hodge for a closeup goal from just outside the crease at 8:56 of the opening period. Ron Ellis of the Maple Leafs tied the count six minutes later on a 25-foot screen shot.

Schmautz cashed a Gregg Sheppard rebound with both teams shorthanded to put Boston ahead at 15:46, but Davey Keon knotted the count again by beating Gilbert on a wide angle shot at 19:06.

Veteran Johnny Bucyk had jammed the puck past Toronto goalie Doug Favell on a pass out from Schmautz to put the Bruins in front to stay at 3:31 of the second period.

Then, 10 minutes later, Cashman scored the deciding goal after Esposito knocked the puck away from Ian Turnbull deep in the Toronto zone.

Darryl Sittler pulled the Maple Leafst to within 4-3 at 15:01 while the Leafs had a man advantage, but it was Toronto's last gasp.

Esposito connected for his goal on a pass out from Bucyk during a power play at 7:34 of the third period. Sheppard, who scored the only goal of the first game, fired into an empty net for an insurance tally at 19:14 to complete the scoring.

Netmen wreck Rhody, 8-1

By GLENN POSTER

After two days of winter in April, the sun brought out the best in the UMass tennis team. The Minutemen opened their home season yesterday afternoon by handing Rhode Island an 8-1 defeat. The score of the match wasn't even close to the wide margin of play out on the courts.

UMass took all six singles matches. To top it off, each match was won in straight sets. Captain Fred Braley and Bob Schpeiser each had an easy time of it, both posting scores of 6-1, 6-0. Chris Post won his singles match with the same scores, the only difference being that they were reversed: 6-0, 6-1. Don Douglas was victorious 6-2, 6-0. In the other two singles events, Barnaby Kalan came out on top 6-3, 6-2 and Mark Brass had to go into overtime before winning his first set 7-5. Brass had an easier time in the second set, winning 6-0. Said Brass after it was over, "I had a slow start, but it was a strong finish."

For all intents and purposes, the match was over after the singles competition. Just for the record, the Minutemen took two out of three in the doubles. The team of Doublas and Schpeiser defeated URI's Dave Kenney and Grant Palmer duo 6-2, 6-1. The team of David Abramoff and Fred Braley lost the only match for UMass on the day, but it was close. They lost the first set 4-6 and then dropped the second in a tie-breaker 6-7. The other doubles team consisted of two freshmen, John Archer and Kevin Garahan - playing together for the first time. They won in straight sets 7-7, 6-2.

If URI had any excuses going for them, it can be said that this was their first match of the season. Also they lost their entire team from last year and therefore they had a cast of all new faces.

Coach Steve Kosakowski stated that, "the score indicated that the opposition wasn't strong enough. Our team certainly improved from Monday." (a loss to Tufts)

LOVE LOBS - This was the second straight year that the Minutemen defeated URI by an 8-1 margin. They'll go at it again this afternoon against Bowdoin on the courts behind Goodell starting at two o'clock. And the Vermont Catamounts come to Amherst Saturday at one.

Gorillas meet UConn in morning contest

By BEN CASWELL

Tomorrow morning at 7:45 (that's right morning) Garber's Gorrillas will be on their way to Storrs to meet the University of Connecticut in an unusually timed 10:30 game. This is the contest that as postponed from last week and the reason for its early starting time has to do with the availability of referees.

Last year the Gorillas swamped UConn 11-1 but as coach Garber put it, "that was sort of a typical game, we usually have pretty good ones." Even though there is no Yankee Conference in lacrosse that feeling of rivalry still exists. It is there even more so for coach Garber who went to school with UConn's head coach Nate Osur.

In previous games this season Connecticut has a 1-1 record, beating M.I.T. 9-3, and losing to Boston College 10-4. Both are teams that UMass will meet later this season, Boston College in Newton under the lights.

In the injury department defenseman Bill Blaustein is expected to see some action although it is not certain how extensive it will be. He has been practicing with the team in the cage this week.

So the Gorillas will try to overbear Mother Nature tomorrow and plaa another one. In this week's U.S.I.L.A. ratings they had UMass listed as having a 1-2 record rather than 0-2. Apparently they inadvertently assumed that the Gorillas had beaten UConn, either that or it was just a misprint. Let's hope the Gorillas can make that unintended prediction come true.

Next game -- Weds. afternoon, April 17 at 3:00 p.m. right here versus the crimson of Harvard University.

Give the world a little gift today. Blood.

Kissinger states resource plan

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) — The poor and less developed nations need a greater voice in the management of the world economy, but not at the expense of industrialized countries, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger said yesterday.

"The great issues of development can no longer realistically be perceived in terms of confrontation between the haves and have-nots, nor as a struggle over the distribution of static wealth," Kissinger said in a 40-minute address to the United Nations General Assembly.

He sounded a theme of economic cooperation in an address to a special session of the General Assembly, but warned that any attempt by countries with resources to strong-arm the industrialized nations will bring disaster for everyone.

Kissinger outlined six problem areas facing the world and said they can be solved by cooperation and in the realization of global interdependence.

To support this, Kissinger pledged the United States to greater contributions in aid, science and agricultural technology, as well as promising the less developed nations a greater participation in trade and monetary planning.

But while talking of the "imperative" on cooperation, Kissinger pointedly told the less developed nations who hold raw materials, particularly oil, that the industrialized world will not accept pressure.

Any hope the developing nations have of transforming their economies "can only take place with the support of the technologically advanced countries," Kissinger said.

He warned that if those nations possessing needed raw materials try to drive up prices by artifically restricting supplies, the result will be runaway inflation that will

Military coup in Nigeria

LAGOS, Niegeria (AP) — The government of drought-stricken Niger, previously regarded as one of black Africa's stablest if poorest nations, was toppled yesterday in an army coup, Radio Niamey reported.

The overthrow of President Hamani Diori's 15-year-old government was led by Lt. Col. Seyni Kountie, chief of staff of Niger's 2,500-man army, according to the broadcasts from Niamey, Niger's capital city.

In a radio address, Kountie said the army acted to relieve "the catastrophic situation in the country."

"The army had to take its responsibilities. We could not remain with our arms foled" in a situation where the citizens of Niger were no longer assured a meal every day, he said.

The radio reported all was calm in Niamey and said the army was in "full control." There was a report of violence during the takeover, but the radio announcements gave no indication of Diori's whereabouts or condition.

In Paris, the French state television network quoted Kountie as saying in a telephone interview that Diori and his family were under house arrest. "They are being well treated," Kountie told the French network.

Kountie announced the constitution was suspended, the National Assembly dissolved and all political organizations suppressed. He said a supreme council composed of officers would be created soon to head the government.

Kountie said all international agreements taken by the previous government would be respected "on condition that they take into account the interests and dignity of our people."

He called on civil servants and members of the government to return to their jobs on Tuesday.

An indefinite curfew was imposed from 7:30 p.m. to 6 a.m. which Kountie said must be observed "to the letter." He said the curfew would be eased as the situation becomes normal. But, he added, "we do not want to undertake anything in a hurry."

Little is known of the 43-year-old coup leader, a French-trained soldier who became chief of staff in 1973.

The coup brings to 15 the total number of black African countries south of the Sahara under military rule.

Health Services study insurance plans

By BILLY NEMITZ
MDC Staff

A student Self-Insurance plan and a Health Maintenance Organization are the major issues presently being considered by the Student Advisory Board of University Health Services.

In a meeting last week, the Board voted to send two University Health Insurance (UHI) plans up for bid to interested insurance companies.

The first plan in many ways resembles the present UHI policy. However, a number of adaptions have been incorporated into the plan, among them an excess clause, which states that if a student is a beneficiary of another insurance plan, that plan must provide primary coverage, with the UHI plan making up the difference, if any.

Another modification of the present plan would include coverage of all "usual and customary" fees, including surgical fees, for example.

The second plan, a Student Self-Insurance proposal, essentially would mean that Health Services, in conjunction with the Advisory Board, would negotiate contracts with medical practitioners and institutions in the area, providing set fees for hospital and medical services. As a result, the student would be covered for all medical services.

The other subject under consideration is the proposed Health Maintenance Organization (HMO) in the Greater Amherst area. In a Staff Report to the University Health Council, an HMO constitutes "an organization staffed by a group of health professionals which contracts with its voluntarily enrolled subscribers to provide them and their dependents with comprehensive health care services in return for payment in advance of a fixed periodic sum."

The HMO would be open to anyone in the general community. According to present plans, however, the students would not be members of the program. Even so, according to Health Services director Barry Averill, there would be three specific areas in which the students would benefit:

1) It would provide health care for the dependents of students.

2) It would provide a greater number of specialists in the area who would serve students as well as MMO members.

he Student Health Fee, due to the fact that there would be more people paying for University health services.

Due to a lack of time, the Advisory Board decided to wait until Wednesday before discussing the HMO proposal in depth.

Candidate Sacco discusses the issues

By WILLIAM F. O'BRIEN
MDC Staff

George Sacco, the former vice-chairman of the House Committee on Ways and Means answered questions for local newsmen on a variety of issues here last week.

Busing

When asked why he opposed forced busing, Sacco said, "I feel that bringing children into one neighborhood at 9 in the morning and sending them home at 3 is a dangerous move because it has the potential to cause more harm than good to the children involved" . . . "I feel the better solution would be to get more qualified black and minority teachers in the schools that are in deprived neighborhoods. We have to put more money into them and improve them, so the children can receive a quality education, and also I would approve of a voluntary busing program."

Abortion

In addressing the question of abortion Sacco said, "Personally, I am opposed to abortion on demand. This will have no effect on my legal stand and I will uphold the Supreme Court's decision. I will not bring the abortion case before court". . . "I will not allow my personal beliefs to interfere with my job as attorney general."

Sacco said that "My areas of major concern if elected Attorney General would be consumer protection and juvenile care, at present, the Attorney General's office does not have a juvenile division." He feels this is an area which has been neglected.

George Sacco

Prison Reform

In dealing with the whole question of prison reform, Sacco stated "I support rehabilatative efforts over incarseration" . . . "When talking about juvenile care I don't just mean detention centers and prisons, it should be concerned with schools like Belchertown and other social service organizations, Perhaps, if things such as these were watched more closely, problems like Russ Daniels' wouldn't arise."

Addressing himself specifically to the Russ Daniels case, Sacco said "Although I'm not that familiar with it. I feel it should be the responsibility of the Attorney General to look into it and not the governor."

He said, "The judicial system in Massachusetts is in as bad shape as the political system" . . . "I think we have too much government, too many programs and too much red tape" . . . "I'd establish a review board of attornies to examine the arcaic laws Massachusetts has on the books."

He said, "one of the first things that should be changed in the judicial system should be the special justice system. I feel this borders on criminal negligence" . .

"It's almost sinful to think that a judge could practice as a private attorney one day and then judge in the same court the next."

Drugs

When the question of drugs was brought up Sacco said, "We need to take a more realistic attitude towards the problem. For example, we have more alchoholics than addicts in this state" . . . "We should spend more time and effort in the areas where its more of a problem."

He said, "Although I'm not prepared at present to support the legalization of marijuana, I won't be chasing kids on the (Boston) common smoking grass" . . . "Instead, I will be watching the Pharamasutical companies and medical profession more closely regarding the trafficing and dispensation of barbituates and amphetamines which I feel is a serious problem."

This brought up the question of white collar crime. Sacco stated, "Too much time and effort is spent watching poor people for minor crimes, while rich people are exploiting them . . . white collar crime will be looked at just as seriously as violent crimes."

Gay Liberation

When asked about Gay Liberation, Sacco said, "I'm not prepared to take issue on that subject at this time" . . . "I don't feel that the legislature will approve the bill presently before it, calling for the repeal of the sodomy laws" . . . "I do feel that all people, regardless of preference have basic human rights" . . . "That means in housing, employment, and education."

When the question of Impeachment came up he pointed out that he was one of the first to put forth a resolution to impeach Nixon. He said, "Congress is now draging their feet and taking too much time" . . . "To many of them now are exploiting the situation for their own personal benefit."

Sacco supports capitol punishment on limited basis. He said, "It should only be used in cases of the most unconscionable and heinous murders committed against any person in the Commonwealth."

"Inquiry" Program can help

"We think there are a large number of freshmen who become a bit dissatisfied with the study routines of the university, and would like to be in a program that would encourage them to think about what they really want to do, and then encourage them to do it."

To Charles Adams, member of the English Department and director of Project Ten, that program is the Inquiry Program, created two years ago by the Faculty Senate and now serving nearly 100 students as a means of "individual negoiation" of study in the freshman and sophomore years.

A limited number of vacancies will exist for next semester, according to Adams, who indicated that any student currently in their first semester is eligible to apply.

"The program was created to enable students with ideas about what they want to study to be able to move at their own pace and in their own way," Adams says. "The reason we call it the 'Inquiry' program is because we believe that real learning can only begin with the mastery of one or more modes of inquiry."

The program exempts students from all core requirements and offers the possibility of completing the first 60 university credits in as few as two semesters.

Each student in the program works with a faculty advisor to design for each semester a plan of study incorporating course work, independent study, off-campus study, etc. This "contract" is maintained in a personal portfolio into which, at the end of each semester, grades and written evaluations are placed on file.

"The educational idea," Adams says, "is that students should be encouraged to negotiate individually, according to their own needs, in dialogue with a faculty member, with whom they determine the form and focus of their learning."

"When they both feel that the student is ready to graduate from the program," he adds, "the student names faculty to a review committee to discuss with the student the work that has been accomplished in the overall plan of study." Students completing the program are guaranteed 60 credits and junior status.

The Inquiry Program is administered through Project Ten, the residential learning center in Southwest. Faculty advisors in the program include Joe Burroughs in human development, Joan Chandler in anthropology, Tom Arny in astronomy, Allen Hoffman in physics, John Clayton in English, Ken Fox in history, Bob Cole in economics.

Students interested in entering the Inquiry program next semester and who are currently in their first semester of study should call David Hoffman at the Project Ten office, 5-0492 or 5-0871, for an appointment this week. The application deadline is Friday, April 26.

Collegian meeting tonight on "black affairs" editor

The staff of the Daily Collegian is scheduled to meet tonight to consider creation of a post for a black affairs editor in a move apparently aimed at stemming allegations that the paper is racist.

After two weeks of negotiations with black students, the newspaper's board of editors and Publishing Board have both approved the post in principle and have officially urged a change in the Collegian constitution to make the post permanent and elected yearly.

A Constitutional change requires a vote of the more than 200 staffers of the newspaper, requiring tonight's meeting.

CORP, a black campus political organization, issued a statement last month condemning The Collegian's alleged racism and asking the editors to create a black review board to read and censor copy on black affairs before publication.

The board was to include members of CORP but editors resisted the proposal.

"They wanted an editorial post," Collegian editor-in-chief Karen Lynch said yesterday. "They feel that whatever they say can be ignored because it's not legit, not official.

Rudolph Jones and Michael Patterson, spokesmen for the CORP group seeking staff endorsement of the proposed "black affairs editor," were unavailable for comment last night.

The eight-member Collegian board of editors approved creation of the post last Tuesday but did not set specific details, according to Lynch.

But at a regularly scheduled meeting of The Collegian's publishing board last Thursday, which includes at-large undergraduate members, a motion to ask the newspaper's staff for a Constitutional change to institute the post of "black affairs editor" passed 6-0.

Averill named as treasurer of ACHA

Barry W. Averill, director of campus health services at UMass was named today as treasurer of the American College Health Association. The nationwide organization elected Averill to the post during its 5-day annual meeting here. Members of the association include physicians, nurses and other campus professionals responsible for health care and medical services for most of the nation's 9 million college and university students.

Averill served as assistant director of Amherst's university health service from 1967 until his appointment as director in 1972. Prior to joining the University of Massachusetts staff he had served as assistant director of health services at the University of Kentucky at Lexington and later as assistant dean of the Kentucky university's Medical School.

Active in the affairs of the college health association for a number of years, Averill is currently a member of its executive board, chairman of its Administration Section, and head of a committee developing uniform reporting procedures for the nation's campus health services.

Students agree that Senate apathy exists

By MICKIE HALL
MDC Staff

Umies do not seem to care about the student senate. Why? Members of the student body were randomly chosen and asked to comment on this question. Their answers follow:

"The only time people are interested is when something directly effects them," according to Gary Thomas, a senior living off-campus and majoring in B.D.I.C.

"The average student doesn't realize the amount of power and authority the student government has."

A junior woman with a major in English and living in Orchard Hill felt that the students do not believe the student government is important.

She believed that matters of this sort go in fazes. At times six or seven students are running for positions in the student government and at other times no one could care less. Students fluctuate between active and inactive periods.

"I don't think the student senate achieves that much," commented Michael Whitman, a sophomore honor student living in Field. "The students have a general apathy towards student government. They are more interested in their own lives."

Whitman added that as an interest on campus the student senate would probably rate low. It is a borning subject to most students.

"The student senate is comparable to a nonentity in the fact that it does not directly influence the lives of the average UMie," stated Nick Macchio, an off-campus sophomore majoring in English. "It is a body that takes up most of its time arguing politics and procedures and in the meantime getting nothing done. No one is concerned about the student senate because they accomplish little that effects the daily life of the student."

"The issues of the student senate don't seem directly related to the students," said Donna MacKay, a junior living in Chadbourne and majoring in physical education. "Our senator doesn't even make contact with the dorm."

Ms. MacKay added that the Collegian covers the senate well, so student apathy is not due to lack of coverage. She felt students are apathetic about government in general.

"Many students consider the UMass a resort and don't want to be bothered with such matters as student government," according to John Lastella, a sophomore member of Kappa Sigma with a major in business. "Special interest groups in the only ones that seem to take an interest."

"Students don't feel they are directly effected by the workings of the student senate when in fact they wouldn't be riding around campus on shuttle buses if it weren't for the student government," commented Gail Berger, a junior living off-campus and majoring in B.D.I.C.

Ms. Berger felt that for the most part students are busy with their own lives and feel they are effected more by the government in Washington D.C. than the one that exists on the UMass.

Of all the students interviewed only one was unaware that Nick Apostola is president of the student senate. This is due in part to his increased publicity as of lately. However, not one of the students knew the name of their student senate representative.

SW racism struggle progresses

By B.J. ROCHE
MDC Staff

Last Spring, the Southwest Assembly approved a proposal setting among its main goals an active fight against racism. A year has passed since that time, and opinions of progress in the area are mixed.

Ken Hale, Driector of the Center for Racial Understanding in Southwest, sees the progress made not in terms of numbers, but in the fact that the Center is reaching people. Through courses, film series, and workshops, the Center seeks to make people aware of their personal racist tendencies as well as those of institutions around them. "To evaluate now would be counterproductive and misleading," he said, citing some of the problems involved with the situation.

This is the first year the Center has had a full time staff with adequate work resources. Thus, the people working at the Center had to make adjustments within the organization before they could begin working with students. "A group like this must 'gel' before being fully effective, and that sometimes takes years," he said. Another problem, as Hale sees it, is that racism is not a subject people like to deal with, particularly when it involves a change in personal attitudes. A large part of the Center's work lies with the student, who must realize to some extent, the fact that racism exists and that something must be done about it. Once the attitudes have changed, behavior will change.

The student situation itself presents another problem to the Center. The personal problems dealt with in classes and workshops pertain mostly to small situations, such as dorm living, rather than dealing with situations on a Global level. The amount of productive years after graduation will far outnumber the amount of time spent in Southwest, and this, Hale feels, is more important.

Despite these problems, the basic outlook is optimistic, however. "It would be senseless to be here if it weren't," Hale said.

The Southwest Women's Center has a Task Force involved with racism. A racism weekend had been in the planning process, but due to a lack of facilities and other activities in Southwest, the weekend had to be cancelled. Education regarding racism at this Center focuses on Third World and white women and racism. Julie Adams, a Head of Residence at Mackimmie House and a member of the task force sees the Women's Center as being supportive of women's efforts to deal with racism. "In this way," she said, "we are dealing with things not being dealt with anywhere else." Her viewpoint is also one of optimism.

The student evulation is not as enthusiastic, however. Southwest Assemblyperson Nancy Indorf stated that she thought "There has been no change. Southwest is more stagnant and middle class than ever." She blamed the lack of progress on the lack of money and the docility of Southwest students. Ms Indorf also contended that as a result of the quick turnover in Southwest, it is difficult to develop an effective program to raise the awareness of students. Assembly person Wylena Walker agreed with this evluation, saying that another problem is the background of students. "People don't know how to deal with other people, and when they don't know, they won't ask," she said. Earl Brown, co-ordinator of the Malcolm X Center, and an assemblyperson as well, also cited the problem of background. He said he saw no change at all in general atmosphere.

Some students suggested a type of orientation program for Freshmen as a means of improving the atmosphere, butthe problem of money then arises. Due to the legislative cutbacks for the University, the Centers in Southwest are being asked to cut back 20 per cent on funding.

According to a RATE project conducted in SW last fall, there has not been progress at all, and in the eyes of one official, "Things are getting worse." For some, evaluation is too soon, for others, it is not strict enough. The problems are complex and deal with everything from the student population to the buildings they live in. One student summed up the situation — "When they built Southwest they forgot the people who live here."

Playwright explores black culture

By PAT GRUNDY
Black News Service

Actor, Director, Playwright, Mungu Abudu is currently directing a one act play written by Alice Childress called "Mojo." Mungu, a graduate student in the Theatre Dept. came to the UMass campus rom California State University-San Jose. He states that, "the play very aptly explores the nature of love relationships among black people and touches on the question of where older black people fit in the scheme of the resurgence of cultural nationalism."

"I've been involved in theatre for the past eight years and I believe that theatre for black people should be neither propaganda nor entertainment but rather an educational experience presented in an aesthetically black way," Mungu says.

The talented director-writer has written two plays: The Contract and And, both of which deals with a Black student in a university system and hopes that the Theatre Dept. will produce it next year.

"Mojo" opens Thursday, April 18th, and runs through the 20th. The lovers are played by a "mean" actress from Sacramento, Pat Grundy and Ralph Hawkins, football player turned actor, and doing a dynamite job. Steel companies to compensate groups

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nixon administration used the signing yesterday of a historic job discrimination settlement with nine major steel companies to serve notice that it will take similar action against other industries.

Undersecretary of Labor Richard F. Schubert said that in industries where race and sex discrimination exist "we will be knocking on their doors and moving forward against them as we did with AT&T and the steel industry."

Schubert declined to identify the next civil rights targets, but government sources said these are likely to be the copper and aluminum industries.

The sources said the copper and aluminum companies have the same discriminatory job seniority system as the steel industry, and "it will be easier to convince them of the changes needed to be made."

The voluntary agreement negotiated with the United Steelworkers union and the nine companies which produce 73 per cent of the nation's steel calls for payment of $30.9 million in back pay to about 40,000 workers, mostly blacks. About 4,000 women also will share in the payments.

In outlining details of the pact, Atty. Gen. William B. Saxbe said it "marks a new day." The NAACP and a major women's rights group sharply criticized it as inadequate.

A spokesman for the nine steel firms said terms of the agreement, entered as a consent decree in U.S. District in Birmingham, Ala., "represent an equitable settlement and eliminate the need for protracted litigation."

U.S. and the world

In addition, administration officials estimated it will cost the industry another $25 million to $30 million the first year alone in wage adjustments aimed at elevating minority males and women to equal standing with white males in similar jobs.

It is the largest job discrimination settlement in the nation's history, surpassing the $38 million agreement negotiated last year with the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

The $30.9 million in back pay will be distributed to 34,449 blacks and Spanish-surnamed male production and maintenance workers hired before 1968, to 5,599 women employes and to minority and women employes who retired from those jobs in the past two years. Payments will range from $250 to $3,000.

The union voluntarily agreed to contribute a share of the payments.

Israeli, Syrian ministers tour front line zones

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Israeli and Syrian defense ministers toured the explosive Mt. Hermon range yesterday as their armies' tanks and artillery blazed away at each other along the 40-mile Golan Heights front.

At the United Nations, Egyptian sources said Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger will travel to Cairo as the first stop on his effort to arrange a military settlement between Israel and Syria. Kissinger's schedule already includes Israel and Syria. It is to begin in about two weeks.

The Egyptian informants also said Cairo was deeply concerned about the situation on the Golan Heights and would not stand for increasing Israeli attacks against Syrian positions, particularly those beyond the current truce lines. But they did not say what steps Egypt might take.

The Tel Aviv command said Defense Minister Moshe Dayan visited Israeli positions on the strategic mountain range on the northern tip of the front. It said a Syrian bombardment erupted during his visit, wounding two Israeli soldiers, but that Dayan was unhurt.

Radio Damascus said Syria's defense minister, Maj. Gen. Mustafa Tlas, made a quick trip to the forward command headquarters of Syrian forces on the 9,000-foot snow-clad slopes of Hermon.

seriously damage their own economies and virtually destroy many countries already in deep trouble.

There was a strong implication in the address that ideology must be overlooked in the interest of world economic development and Kissinger indicated the world has no fear that the United States call for cooperation is really a plan for dominance by a "Condominium" of Washington and Moscow.

Kissinger's six-point program included:

—Action to insure a more equitable supply of oil and other energy products while preventing an inflationary price spiral.

—Steps to end the cycle of raw material surplus and shortage.

—Creation of a better balance between food production and population growth.

—Efforts to keep poorer nations from being destroyed by dramatic shifts in the supplies and prices of raw materials like oil.

—Greater use of science to meet the problems of unemployment and hunger in the developing nations and improved birth control technology.

SHOOTINGS IN SAN FRANCISCO

Series of "gold tooth" attacks brings 17th victim

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The "Zebra-style" shootings of white persons on the streets of this city have claimed their 17th victim and police said yesterday they were without clues in the five-month series of unprovoked attacks.

In the largest manhunt in San Francisco history, police searched for a black man with a distinctive gold tooth who opened fire on two white teenagers Sunday night. In each of the shootings, the victim has been approached by a black man who opens fire with no warning and for no apparent reason.

Ward Anderson, 18, and Terry White, 15, of San Francisco were reported in satisfactory condition at San Francisco General Hospital after surgery for a variety of bullet wounds.

Police said a black man, about 30, with a beard, mustache, and distinctive gold tooth pumped two shots into each of the teen-agers as they were hitchhiking at a bus stop Sunday night at Hayes and Fillmore streets.

Inspector Frank Falzon said the assault at 9:20 p.m. "fit the Zebra-style shootings" that began Nov. 28 and have methodically claimed 11 dead and six wounded. Many persons have been afraid to venture out alone at night in the area where the shootings occurred.

Police have designated the series of unprovoked shootings "Operation Zebra." They launched the biggest manhunt in the city's history after a senseless murder spree Jan. 28 in which four persons were killed and another seriously injured.

At a news conference, Chief of Inspectors Charles Barca said, "These are senseless, vicious killings . . . the people doing this are sick people, mentally disturbed, sick.

"We have no idea why these shootings were done. We're not any closer to nailing a suspect than last November," he said.

All the "Zebra" victims have been shot on the street by a gunman who made no robbery attempt. In each case, the gunman was black, the victim was white and there was no apparent motive.

White told police he was approached by a black man as he was waiting for the bus. Before any words were exchanged, he said the man drew a gun and fired twice. White said the gunman then turned and fired at Anderson. Witnesses said the gunman then fled on foot.

Barca said he believes the gunman fled the area in a vehicle — possibly driven by an accomplice. He said at least two persons have been involved in the Zebra killings.

Hospital officials said Anderson was hit twice in the abdomen and White was hit in the chest and abdomen.

About 20 minutes after the double shooting, another teenager told police he was approached by a black man who asked for a match, then suddenly produced a shotgun. Michael Green, 19, said the man fired at his head but missed.

Patricia Hearst named in SLA's Frisco bank heist

The affidavit, quoting an unnamed person, was filed following the yesterday morning robbery of a bank by four heavily armed persons in which two bystanders were seriously wounded.

It says that a person pictured in photographs taken during the robbery "appears to be Patricia Hearst" based on that person's knowledge of her.

"Patricia Hearst also appears in one of said surveillance photographs together with another person holding what appears to be a semi-automatic carbine trained in the direction of Patricia Hearst."

The affidavit further says, "Affiant does not know whether Patricia Hearst was willing participant in said robbery; however, affiant believes that if she was not a willing participant Patricia Hearst is a material witness to said bank robbery as well as the aforementioned kidnaping." said.

Vincent Greely, security officer at the Hibernia Bank in San Francisco, said the robbers claimed to be members of the terrorist group which calls itself the Symbionese Liberation Army, but there was no way to confirm that.

Greely said two white women, one black man and one white man escaped with $692.51. But the FBI said there was more money involved than that. Asked about the FBI statement, Greely said his figure was correct.

"The people came in and said they were members of the SLA," he said. "They told people to lie on the floor and then they went to the tellers' cages and took the money . . . they were in and out within two minutes."

There was nothing from police or the FBI to substantiate who the robbers were, or to connect them with the SLA, a group which authorities say is heavily armed, multiracial and consists of 25 males and females.

The SLA has claimed responsibility for kidnapping newspaper heiress Patricia Hearst in Berkeley Feb. 4 and for the murder last Nov. 6 of Oakland Schools Supt. Marcus Foster. In the SLA's last communique on April 3, Miss Hearst renounced her family and said she had joined her captors as an armed comrade.

Greely said the robbery was photographed by two security cameras in the bank. He said FBI agents had taken the film and were processing it.

Asked about any possible SLA connection, Charles Bates, chief FBI agent in San Francisco, said: "We've had reports similar to this from all over the country in holdups. We are working like mad on this."

He said he wanted to stress that the FBI was investigating a bank robbery. "We are showing a picture of everyone we think could be involved in a bank robbery, but I'm not saying who we're showing pictures of," he said.

Witnesses said the robbers hit the bank quickly and moved with military precision while inside.

And if you're late?

WASHINGTON (AP) — So, you've rushed to meet the midnight deadline for filing income taxes, spoiling your Easter weekend, and worrying yourself to a physical frazzle in the process.

But what were you risking if you had taken your time and filed your tax returns a day or two late?

Not much, says the IRS, which indicates that returns filed only a little late will not result in a big penalty for the taxpayer, and perhaps no penalty at all.

Nevertheless, midnight on April 15 was the tax deadline and the taxpayer who filed late cannot be absolutely sure he won't be penalized. To be on the safe side, said an IRS spokesman, he was best off filing on time.

The IRS said five million taxpayers filed their returns after the due date last year, but noted that this included 900,000 persons who had been granted extensions for filing, plus military personnel and other persons overseas who also received extensions.

High court hears pornography cases

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court grappled yesterday with applications of its most recent decision on obscenity, with at least some indication that local communities will be setting their own standards.

A decision is not expected until late June. The court heard oral argument on two obscenity cases yesterday in which the question of applicable standards plays a key role.

One case questions the standard to be used when applying the federal law against mailing obscene material. The other deals with a decision holding the R-rated movie "Carnal Knowledge" obscene by the standards of Albany, Ga.

The arguments were heard after the court announced its decisions. In one, it agreed to consider whether a person charged with selling obscene magazines may refuse to produce them in court on grounds of self-incrimination.

In a series of 5 to 4 decisions last June, the court discarded a national standard for judging obscenity but left doubt as to what was to replace it - local or statewide criteria.

At yesterday's hearing, Justice Potter Stewart said he felt the standard was local.

White House hinders outside contacts

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the wake of Watergate, the White House has quietly stiffened the guidelines for its own staffers who deal with federal regulatory agencies.

A memo circulated last September to President Nixon's White House staff and the Domestic Council requires now that any contact with an independent regulatory agency must be detailed in writing to the White House counsel's office.

Staff members must also consult with the counsel's office before making any contacts. Often they are told there should be no contact made, according to White House sources familiar with the system.

The new guidelines were drafted after White House chief of Staff Alexander Haig Jr. asked Leonard Garment, then White House counsel, to review Nixon staff contacts with the regulatory agencies such as the Securities and Exchange Commission, Federal Communications Commission and Interstate Commerce Commission. Until then, the guidelines consisted of an admonition of caution that had been issued early in the administration.

"But there were some problems in the past as a result of no records," said an official who asked that his name not be used.

Garment's review at Haig's direction was undertaken, said the official, because of Watergate and the spotlight it threw on numerous White House operations. He declined to cite any specific cases that had caused problems.

But an example might be contacts that were made with Securities and Exchange Commission about the financial activities of Robert Vesco, a major contirbutor to the 1972 Nixon campaign. Former cabinet officers John N. Mitchell and Maurice H. Stans are on trial in connection with the Vesco SEC matter. Also involved was former White House counsel John W. Dean III, who was not charged in that case and testified for the prosecution.

Although the members of regulatory agencies are appointed by the President, the agencies themselves are supposed to be independent of the administration, unlike other government departments such as the Department of Labor or Department of Health, Education and Welfare. In some regulatory agencies, the law requires a near-balance in the political affiiiations of commissioners.

High voter turnout expected in Michigan

SAGINAW, Mich. (AP) — Stirred by an unprecedented presidential visit and a high-voltage political scrap, voters were expected to turn out in unusually high numbers for Michigan's special congressional election today.

Voter turnout for such elections is generally below 25 per cent, but county officials in the Republican stronghold of the 8th Congressional District predicted a turnout of almost 50 per cent of the district's 213,600 voters.

President Nixon, who is being made the issue of the election by Democrat Robert Traxler, put his prestige on the line last Wednesday by coming here to campaign for James Sparling Jr., 45, the Republican candidate.

A GOP defeat in this district where a Democrat has not won in 42 years could have an affect on some Republicans' view of Nixon and his Watergate probiems, some observers say. And they say it could be indicative of what may happen in this fall's elections.

The last time the district sent a Democrat to Congress was in the Depression year of 1932. But in four previous special congressional elections this year, Democrats took three seats away from the GOP.

The election is to replace former Rep. James Harvey, a Republican, who resigned last February to accept a federal judgeship. Harvey held the seat for 13 years and won with more than 59 per cent of the vote in the last election.

Nixon took almost 62 per cent of the vote in the district in 1972.

Sparling was an aide to Harvey and is a former Saginaw newspaperman. Traxler, 42, is an attorney and a state representative.

"The only issue in the campaign that is paramount is who can best serve the 8th District," Sparling said.

But Traxler is calling the election "a referendum on Nixon's policies and moral leadership" and said the President "is the real, the only issue."

Both parties brought in heavy political artillery to help their cause. Republican Senators Charles Percy of Illinois, considered a possible 1976 presidential candidate, and Robert Griffin of Michigan were among Sparling's campaigners.

Democratic Senators Henry "Scoop" Jackson of Washington, another possible presidential contender two years from now, and Philip Hart of Michigan campaigned for Traxler.

The 8th District comprises Saginaw, Bay City and the top half of Michigan's Thumb, which is bordered by Lake Huron and Saginaw Bay. Its population is a cross-section of factory workers, farmers, city dwellers, suburbanites and commuters.

Democrats concentrated on plants and factories in Bay City and Saginaw, while Republicans hoped to coax undecided city voters and rural Republicans to the polls, which are open from 7 a.m. EDT until 8 p.m.

The President steered clear of industrial areas, where the vote normally is Democratic, during his visit to the district. It was the first time a President has campaigned in the area.

Mitchell defends himself as "absolutely not guilty"

NEW YORK (AP) — Former Atty. Gen. John N. MItchell swore before a federal trial jury yesterday that he was innocent of any influence-peddling on behalf of international financier Robert L. Vesco.

On trial with onetime Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans on criminal conspiracy charges, Mitchell was asked at the close of direct questioning by his attorney!

"Are you guilty or not guilty."

"Absolutely not guilty to any of those charges," Mitchell said.

Mitchell's only admission of intervention on behalf of Vesco was that after he left the attorney general's office, he once checked with the Justice Department to find out whether a perjury case was being prepared against Vesco. He said the answer was no.

Shortly before the lunch recess, Mitchell went under cross-examination at the hands of Asst. U.S. Attorney John Wing.

Mitchell, 60, and Stans, 66, are accused of obstructing a Securities and Exchange Commission fraud investigation of Vesco in exchange for Vesco's secret $200,000 cash contribution to President Nixon's 1972 re-election campaign.

The charges against the two consist of a single count of conspiracy, two counts of obstructing justice and six counts each of perjury before the grand jury that indicted them last May 10.

Rocking gently backwards and forwards in the witness chair, Mitchell was led through the text of the six perjury counts and then was asked after each one:

"Do those answers to those questions reflect your best good-faith effort to recall the facts?"

"Yes, sir, absolutely," Mitchell replied each time in an effort to convince the trial jury that any errors in his grand jury testimony were due simply to lapses of memory. The government claims Mitchell and Stans perjured themselves in an effort to cover up dealings with Vesco.

Mitchell testified that in late spring or summer of 1972, Harry L. Sears, a self-described liaison man between Vesco and Mitchell and Stans "Asked me if there had been a reference from the SEC to the Justice Department in connection with the alleged perjury charges that involved Mr. Vesco. I checked somebody and found out there had been no reference to the Justice Department."

Students walkout to support teachers

PLAISTOW, N.H. (AP) — About 50 pupils at the Timberlane Regional High School walked out of classes yesterday morning and vowed to walk picket lines with striking teachers if a dispute between the teachers and the school board was not settled. Two-thirds of the district's 150 teachers have been on strike for six weeks seeking a master contract from the board.

Bernedette Gatti, a 17-year-old national honor student, said the students were protesting the board's latest rejection of teacher proposals.

The teachers scaled down their demand for binding arbitration to advisory arbitration and said the board would retain final approval over any contract. Money is not an issue; the teachers are seeking a master contract.

Miss Gatti, a senior from Plaistow, said students "hoped to gain more support but that there was little preparation for the walkout."

She said that Supt. Robert Crompton met with students before the walkout and "more or less threatened or intimidated the students."

She said he advised them that they could not picket on school property; that graduating seniors would be required to meet their course obligations; and that students under 16 years of age would be considered truant.

Miss Gatti said she has already been accepted by the University of New Hampshire and was willing to go to summer school to make up any lost credits.

"We're very orderly. We are good students and not rouble-makers. Two of us are national honor society students. We have never gone against any type of authority before," Miss Gatti said.

She said the students were frustrated that they had not been able to meet with the school board for a discussion. They have attended several board meetings but were not allowed to speak.

She said they would picket until they talked with the board or the dispute was settled.

The "Concerned Students of Timberlane" believe the board could do more to end the strike than it has. Miss Gatti said.

Housing help needed

BOSTON (AP) — Nearly one in every four Massachusetts households is in need of some form of housing assistance, according to a report released by the state Department of Community Affairs.

A summary of the report said some 400,000 Massachusetts households are in need of some form of housing, rental or mortgage assistance.

The study said that 71 per cent of the 400,000 households in need could best be served by rent or mortgage supplements, while the remaining 29 per cent are in need of either rehabilitated or newly constructed housing.

The figures are based on a formula, from which the department concluded "that all families and individuals for whom no adequate housing exists within a cost of 25 per cent of income are in need of some form of assistance."

The report determined that 56 per cent of all households needing assistance were families, while the remaining 44 per cent were elderly, the summary said.

Brown accepts 2100

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Brown University is sending out 2,100 letters of acceptance to candidates for next year's freshman class, but only expects 1,150 of them to register in the fall.

James H. Rogers, admissions director, said letters of acceptance were sent to 1,300 men and 800 women out of a record 9,400 applicants. The applicant pool was rated the highest in the school's history in terms of test scores, he said, and the students accepted showed combined math and verbal scores 12 points higher over last year's class.

Less hair on police

FITCHBURN (AP) — Grooming regulations prohiting beards and hair extending more than one-half inch below the hairline at the back of the head have been issued for the Fitchburg Police Department by Chief Francis R. Roddy.

Roddy said he issued the regulations Thursday "to promote neatness and discipline within the department and to generate public respect for department members."

The rules ban sideburns wider than 1¾ inches at the base and longer than the bottom of the ear, and they prohibit hair protruding farther than 2 inches from the top or sides of the head.

You're serious about photography.
So is the Canon F-1.

To you, photography is more than a hobby. You may never want to become a professional. Yet, your photography is as important a means of self-expression to you as your speech. You demand the same excellence in your photographic equipment as you do of your photographic skills.

The Canon F-1 is the camera that can fulfill any photographic task to which you put it. It can stand up to your ability in any situation.

Naturally, a great camera like the F-1 won't ensure great results. That's up to you. Yet—it's nice to know that your camera can grow with you as a photographer.

Part of the reason for this is the F-1 system. Since it was designed in totality, it offers total performance. There is nothing "added on" in the F-1 system. Everything works as it was designed to, and integrates superbly with everything else. You'll spend less time worrying about operating the camera than in shooting. And that's what creative photography is really all about.

Controls fall into place under each finger. It's no accident. Professionals who depend on a camera for their livelihood have a deep regard for the F-1's handling. It's amazing how much a comfortable camera can improve your work.

Sharing these lenses and many of these accessories are the new Electronic Canon EF, with fully automatic exposure control, the FTb, now improved with all exposure information visible in the finder, and the TLb, great for a second camera body or for getting started in Canon photography. Canon. For serious applications. For serious photographers.

Isn't it time you got serious?

The Third World and the media

By MICHAEL PATTERSON

Brothers and sisters, I don't know if all of you are aware of it but there is a conflict going on right under our very noses. If I may get your attention for just a minute I'd like to explain the situation.

The Daily Collegian, a White oriented newspaper has come under attack by the Black community for being just what it is, a racist newspaper.

This state of affairs is by no means of recent development. Last year Black students had to take over the office of the Collegian for a day in order to air the views of the Black community on the brutal murder of protesting Black students at Southern University, Louisiana.

Just a few weeks ago, the Black student organization called, Corp., which describes itself as an organization dedicated to positive, effective change charged the Collegian with overt racism in its coverage or rather non-coverage of Black Community events.

The Collegian isn't the only campus media charged with neglecting the Black community. Members of the Black Mass Communications project said they felt that WMUA wasn't fulfilling its obligations to the Black Community. That obligation is the providing of sufficient air time on the station.

This situation is not confined to this campus but is a problem internationally. Black people have been systematically exluded from the media since the beginning of modern mass communications.

There is a steady flow of communication from the white community to the Black community but no flow going from the Black community to the white world or the Black community.

Recently there has been an effort, a halfhearted effort but nevertheless an effort on the part of the major newspapers, magazines and broadcast media to recruit qualified third world journalists.

Brothers and sisters involved in the various aspects of mass communications here on campus have been trying to bring about some effective change in the media here at UMASS.

Since the Collegian is the most segregated and White oriented media vehicle on campus (the Collegian has an almost all White staff) we have been mostly concerned with it rather than the radio station.

Several possibilities have been considered to improve Black news coverage in the Collegian. One is the creation of a permanent post for Black people at the Collegian.

The posts would be a Black affairs staff at the Collegian, headed by a Black affairs editor and Asst. Editor. This issue will be voted on Tuesday night.

Therefore on Wednesday, we will know whether the Collegian is the "Free and Responsible press" they claim to be. Check this paper tomorrow to find out the results of the voting. If the Collegian is a "Free and Responsible" press we'll need some help with articles, etc. The present is a time for struggle. The future is ours.

Michael Patterson is a Black News Service Commentator.

Four years of anger and the Collegian

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

The Daily Collegian is the most powerful student institution on this campus. As such it is a natural target for people's anger and frustrations, and in the last few weeks has caught a lot of grief for its handling, and lack of, Black news.

It is not something new. The Black community and the Collegian have had a running feud for at least the past four years. There has been much anger expended over the Collegian, most of it justified.

The Collegian is a fine cross section of the white campus. Every religion, class, ethnic background, philosophy and style you might find anywhere else on campus. There, are of course, some idiosyncracies particular to journalists, but nothing a non-journalist is liable to notice at first glance. The people there, or at least the 15 or 20 that form the hardcore, work hard, either by choice or necessity, simply to produce a newspaper everyday. The staff starts to gear up for the day's effort in the early afternoon, and shuts down at midnight or after. As, by necessity, the primary purpose of a day's work is simple production, the Collegian often lacks, as is lacked all over campus, introspection, analysis, a comprehension of exactly what it is a newspaper should be, and do.

It is hard to believe they do not know what they are doing, but it is true.

While there is more thinking along those lines now than there has been in the past, there is not enough, and not among enough people, as witness the Bromery cartoon, Collegian slang for the McGilvray cartoon of February concerning Chancellor Bromery.

No one involved in the printing of the cartoon was out to knock Bromery's race, or anyone else's, and, I am fairly certain, that's not why McGilvray drew it. It was printed, and I'll hazard to guess, drawn, out of a lack of what is called consciousness, the understanding of people, events, and ideas beyond those each of us works with and from. It can also be called insight.

None of those involved in printing the cartoon really thought it would offend anyone, certainly not to the extent and depth it did. As in all Collegian actions that have offended the Third World on this campus it was done innocently. That may be hard to believe, and sometimes I find it hard to believe that "they" are not aware of what they are doing, but it is true. Innocently, because new ideas and thoughts must be learned; they come too few out of the sky.

Most everything the Collegian has done they have caught flak for from the Black community and it has, to one degree or another, surprised them. They have not meant to do it.

When the CCEBS banquet wasn't covered last fall it was not because someone decided the Collegian was going to ignore Black news. It was because the news editor couldn't find anyone on the staff to do it, which I'm afraid says something about at least part of the staff (but not that they think up ways to insult the black community). Some refused because it was a Black event. Reporting for the Collegian is a voluntary gig and many reporters only cover stories that catch their interest. Other reporters were simply busy.

Some of those who refused to cover the banquet because it was a Black event did so because they didn't want to deal with the "niggers." But others refused because they did not want to take the risk of getting something wrong and having to catch hell for it from the Black community. (The reputation of the Collegian being what it is in the Black community there is not much of a leeway for error.) Or they refused because they were scared. That's racism of another sort, but less virulent than the former brand. it is perhaps the result of a new White stereotype of Black people, the sound of a 12 gauge shotgun shell being chambered. Probably it is necessary to offset years of Steppin' Fetchit.

None of that, however, is an excuse or reason for letting the story go uncovered. The editor-in-chief if need be should have been in the Ballroom with a paper and pencil getting the story, because you can be damn sure that if it had been a White event of comparable importance it would have been covered by somebody. No one at the Collegian, at least no one running the show at that time, understood that it was an important event for the Black community (It celebrated the integration of this universiiy which once had more African students than Afro-Americans) and lacking that understanding they could not see therefore that it was an important event for the White community too. They just saw it as another news story.

It is not simply color. Rather, being in and being out, a question of experience.

Then there are the reactions by the Collegian to the protest over the Bromery cartoon. The statements and editorial and following Monday were half-assed apologies that read as though the Collegian saw nothing wrong with the cartoon and would do it again if they got half the chance.

Well, they didn't see anything wrong with the cartoon, and being a little dense and paranoid on the subject of criticism they probably thought the people complaining were trying to censor them.

They saw nothing wrong with the cartoon because they have never been out. They have been in their whole lives. They have never gotten screwed for merely existing and do not realize that someone, who has had to dig their way through the minefields the people on the inside layout, might get very angry when they see the local media, especially a professed liberal media, dishing out to its readers something that looks suspiciously like what was blocking the road a few miles back.

The problem is not the color of someone's skin. Most everyone around here is sufficiently liberal not to let the superficial differences bother them. It is not simply that some have white skins and others black. If that was all, we would be home free. What we have, among other things, is a culture gap. That may seem obvious, at least a lot of people pay lip service to it, but it needs pointing out.

First off, being White means believing in the system. That doesn't mean blinding yourself to how it screws half the people most of the time, for the list of screw jobs it hands out is endless. Rather, it means having the faith that somehow it will all work out, and it ain't going to screw me too badly, because, after all, I'm part, aren't I? That's believing in the system and part of the belief being that when the going gets rough one can slide to the bottom and, to the best of one's ability stay, out of the system's way. No matter how alienated you might feel, if you're White, you can always opt it.

Most of us come from families a respectable distance above the official "poverty line" and have had lives free of all but the usual hassles that shrink in impact when everyone has them. We can all expect to get some sort of job when we get out of here, with no more trouble than the next guy, and believe, probably naively, that if we are any good we will get by, if not fly by.

Simply, we have a gut feeling we belong, and that ultimately we will be taken care of, because no one has ever told us differently.

Well, that's not the way it is in this country if you're black. Now everyone nods their head here in agreement and thinks no more of it than that passive, rote learned head nod (unless, of course, you're Black). But right here is the culture gap, a gap in perception and experience, the difference between geing in and being out. All you ins think about what it would be like to be out. OUT. Like if you were walking to school one morning five years ago and a few kids from the next block beat the hell out of you for just being there. For existing.

Ever wonder why the early freaks became a bit more liberal, then a bit more radical, as their hair grew out? Well, they found out what it was like to catch hell for walking down the street, or going into the wrong restaurant. (There is a diner I know in Amarillo, Texas all you latter day hippies should visit.) Of course, they could always cut their hair off, but they did catch some of the vibes.

All of this may make me sound suspiciously like your run of the mill guilty white liberal. I'm not, I don't feel very guilty. (I may, however, be a liberal) It is just that if you get slapped around and cut out of the action for the crime of being born, you lose whatever faith you might have in the existing order and look twice at the people in it.

In the past years the Collegian, in its sometimes knowledgeable, sometimes foolish way, has tried to integrate its staff. For many reasons, too long and complex to go into here, it have never worked. Right now it is being attempted again by people from the Black community and the Collegian editorial board. While only the first steps towards a real union have been taken, and those with much accompanying trouble, it looks as though it may succeed. I should not say may, however, for it must succeed. The running feud over the Collegian was too long the day it started.

Only the first steps have been taken, the acid test is yet to come.

Obviously, a Black and White staff is the only way, beyond the goodwill of whoever is running the paper from year to year, to insure there will be continuous Black input into the newspaper for quality and quantity, input that will, it is hoped, unify and not divide the newspaper and its staff.

Don't anyone think, though, that it will be wine and roses from here on out, because coming now is the real test of everyone's rhetoric and good will. Right now, and continuing for a time, the burden of proof will lie heavily on the Collegian. Not the organization, but each individual in it.

One more word. Ultimately, if it works, no one will benefit more than yourselves.

Too many editors

Tonight there will be a full staff meeting of the Collegain to elect what is to be known as a "Black Affairs Editor." This job is being opened in the hope of creating a better relationship between the Third World Community and the Collegian.

The ideology of this new editor is a fantastic idea. However, the creation of a Black Affairs Editor is not going to solve all the problems of the Collegian.

If we are to create a Black Affairs Editor, then in the same realization of equality to each other we must elect a Women's Affairs Editor, a Slavic Affairs Editor, a Married Student Affairs Editor, a Non-Student Affairs Editor, etc., etc., and so forth. We are all individuals, so why not all of us become editors? Let's have the mast head have all 20,000 of our names on it as editors of something or other.

We could demand this if the Collegian were a business that was not fulfilling the needs of the community.

But the Collegian is not a business. It is a co-operative. Which means that it is run by the students, with the students, and for the students, or however the cliche goes. Therefore to demand that this newspaper become more attuned to the problems of sexism, racism, or non-biased partisanship is to demand that of yourself. After all, it is your newspaper.

You, too, can become a reporter.

After all, it is your newspaper. How many times have you heard that statement? People shrug this last thought off by claiming that the Collegian is not around when it is needed. Well, in a co-operative society you cannot expect people to do your work for you. If you are so conscious of what is newsworthy or what is not, then write the goddam story yourself. And you can even use the typewriters in the office. After all, they're yours to use.

You, too can become a columnist.

A columnist is not a person who submits one opinion. A columnist is dedicated to submitting an opinion on a regular basis. It is just an opinion, and anyone who takes that opinion as gospel is a fool.

You, too, can become involved.

If you think that this newspaper is inadequate, then it is your fault. Get involved. Write a story. Take some photographs. Do some creative layout. And if you're really serious about making the Collegian a "free and responsible press" then perhaps you, too, should become an editor.

Kennedy's the man

When politicians make statements, people get suspicious. The "Nixonite" mentality has set in more than ever, and people are getting used to the cliche, "You can't trust a politician." While many times such suspicion is more than justified, sometimes we tend to look too far.

The most obvious example of this lies with the Senior Senator from the State of Massachusetts, Edward Kennedy. Most people presume that since Kennedy is a Kennedy he is destined to run for the Presidency. Many of these same people carry this "destiny" theme one step further to a tragic conclusion. So according to these people Kennedy is destined to run for the Presidency and get killed.

Last week while touring Europe, Kennedy said some very chilling things in an interview published in a West German newspaper. He said that he was aware of the possibilities of death if he ran for the Presidency. These possibilities bothered him, and he was concerned. But he was keeping his options open at this time; not declaring himself for the Presidency, nor withdrawing his name from consideration. He made some other remarks concerning his son't tragic illness, and dismissed the rumors that he and his wife were on the verge of splitting up. Ted Kennedy has a lot of things on his mind; only a few of them seem to concern the Presidency of the United States.

So he lives a double life. On one hand he goes through the motions of a Political Candidate: Speaks in Alabama next to George Wallace asking for a "United Democratic Party": Speaks in New York with a Civil Rights organization demanding that "Civil Rights", and the struggle for them, not be abandoned. He moves mystically through crowds; and deals firmly with party bosses. Whatever else is murkey, one thing is clear: Ted Kennedy is the only candidate in the Democratic Party who can unite the centrist-labor-ethnic wing with the new left-youth McGovern wing.

Ted Kennedy can win the Democratic Nomination. He can win the election in '76. He has a good voting record. He would make a good President. With this in mind, I rationally conclude that he should run for President. There really is no one else at this time who "captures" my imagination. Having Senator Jackson win the election, would be like dancing to Guy Lombardo on New Years Eve . . . for eight years. Humphrey is a man of the Past; McGovern is having a hard enough time getting back in the Senate from South Dakota; Mondale is a man whose time . . . has not come yet. Of course there are others . . . Benston, Byrd, Muskie, and the man who runs for everything . . . Vance Hartke. However only Kennedy has the tools, the brains, and the name that provide him with a link to a more memorable past, and the youth that lets him give hope for a more progressive future.

But life is not rational. And while Ted Kennedy would probably make the best President in '76, none of us can ever quite guess what kind of pressure, fears and dreams mar his sleep. So those who "know" what Ted Kennedy is going to do in '76 should stop playing Jimmy the Greek. Ted Kennedy is a man with ambitions, and a man with doubts. The combination of these two makes it tough for anyone to break down into odds or statistics . . . especially when you are dealing with a man who doesn't want to become yet another statistic.

Canal Zone: Panama's Religion

By MIGUEL ANGEL RIVERA

The Canal Zone has been a matter of dispute since it was built, and I would dare to mention it was like that even before. As everybody knows, Panama was a colony of Colombia. As every colony does sooner or later, Panama started fighting for her independence.

The USA government was holding conversations with Colombia to build up the Canal. But, Colombia would not accept the conditions in the contract. The USA government decided to help Panama free herself from Colombia. In that way, USA government would assure the use of the canal zone because it would have been, as it was, the prize paid for USA government backing. Does it look like manipulation or utilitarianism?

Panama obtained her independence. The chess moving was started; the always-working campaign of more jobs was set up for Panamanians by USA government. The contract was signed in Washington by a person who did not represent anybody in Panama. He wasn't even a Panamanian. Most Panamanian statesmen began to fight against that action. A diplomatic war has been waged ever since because Panamanians do not agree to the contract; it seems they have a right to decide what to do with a land that belongs to them.

Since Panama was a young country and had not tradition in terms of such contracts, USA went into an abusive action. Still not completely unified, Panama was trying to come out of the colonial trauma. First, Spain; then, Colombia; now, USA government . . . in a perfumed way.

Back in 1964, a very important event took place in the Canal Zone. The story goes back to 1962, when Chiari and Kennedy signed an agreement that would allow the Panamanian flag to fly in the Canal Zone.

Students from the Canal Zone, backed by some American parents, raised the American flag alone in a war monument, thus violating the agreement between Chiari and Kennedy.

Panamanian students received permission to celebrate a protest, and they raised the Panamanian flag while singing the Panamanian Anthem. The police stopped 200 students who were protesting; and only five of them were allowed to go up to the war monument. They were attacked by the Zonians. They took from them the Panamanian flag, they ripped it, and stepped on it. The police helped the Zonians.

Panamanian students went back to the Zone's boundaries throwing stones to the Zonians. A Zonian army came with machine guns, rifles, and tanks. More Panamanians got together. The shooting started. Around 11 Panamanians were killed, two or three Zonians were also killed. (I do not have the exact number.) 400 were wounded on both sides.

That event is important for the Panamanian people because now they are together linked by one common cause: the recovery of their Canal Zone. It is now a religion in Panama. The product in terms of political relationships has been cold war . . . and, sooner or later, a "hot" one.

The whole world, as a general attitude, has expressed hopes so that a new contract can be worked out. All Latin American governments are on that line.

Kissinger knows he has got to deal with it or trade with Latin America will not be satisfactory for USA government and the American people. On the other side, it is ridiculous to call Omar Torrijos a "communist". First, because he is just another clever populist politician. Secondly, because communism is not synonimous to crime anywhere.

Anyway, it does not take much science to realize that a contract "in perpetuum"' lacks sense. The Panamanians want, need, and eserve their Canal Zone as much as USA government wants, needs, and deserves Washington, D.C.

''Salt'' childish for attack Maharaj Ji

To The Editor:

While reading Thursday's Collegian I came upon "Below The Salt" and thought that the editors had decided to print their April Fool's edition after all.

On the front page was a nicely written article by Jerry Lazar about Guru Maharaj Ji. The effect of the article was ruined by a picture of the Guru, childishly depicted with a beard, moustache, and other markings. I feel this was unnecessary and in very poor taste.

Even worse was the caption. It read, "The Idiot Bastard Son." What gives anyone the right to call someone else an idiot? Is he an idiot because he has given over six million people more happiness than they have ever known before? Or is it because he wants to bring peace to the world? And a bastard? I can assure you that Guru Maharaj Ji's father, Shri Hans Ji Maharaj, and mother, Mata Ji were legally married. To me this invalidates the whole absurd statement.

It is too bad that the editor of "Below the Salt" can not find anything better to do than draw moustaches and beards on a man he knows nothing about. Maybe he should learn to do layout in his excess time. Speaking of layout, I was glad to see on the last page a heading entitling it "The Last Page!" Now when I pick up a Collegian on Thursdays I can easily find where the toilet paper ends and the newspaper begins again.

Jews and the double standard

To The Editor:

In the aftermath of the terrorist attack at Kiryat Shimona, Israel killing 18 Israelis and leaving 16 more wounded, I am struck by the prevailing silence. The world community has turned its head, as it has traditionally done, from the all too familiar sight of Jewish blood. With the bittersweet taste of Arab oil on their lips, the leaders of Japan, England, France and now many African countries bare as much of the responsibility as the attackers themselves.

When Israel retaliates, which unfortunately has also become a tradition, the world will then cry out and denounce the atrocities perpetrated by the "notorious" State of Israel. This performance by the "humanitarian" nations of the world has been enacted again and again in the Security Council of the UN.

As a Jew already embittered by the treatment of Jews around the world, I probably should not be so stunned by this latest event. It is just another example of our tenuous existance to be absorbed into our collective psyche.

Israel has few comforts to offer its immigrants and no commodities such as oil to offer energy-thirsty nations of the world. Golda Meir, in one of her lighter mements said that God has quite a sense of humor to give the Jews the only piece of land in the Middle East with no oil. I sometimes think that the killing will only stop when a dead Jew learns to bleed petroleum. To those in the world community who turn their heads because their humanitarianism is nourished only by petroleum products, I'm sorry. Jews only bleed blood.

''Non Traditionals'' organize, expand

To The Editor:

Last semester, Non-Traditional Students was loosely organized with the intention of providing support for what we then termed 'non-traditional students'. We felt then, as we do now, that the large community of UMass students who are not coming here directly from high school frequently have perspective and problems that the university is not always equipped to deal with. Our major purpose is to offer group resources and group support to any student who is unwilling or unable to relate to the University in the traditional manner.

This semester we became an RSO group, and in the course of trying to generate publicity found that our somewhat more formal organization was creating problems in terms of defining our bounds. In order to make our existence generally known and offer a valid group experience it has frequently been necessary to define the scope of the group's activities and potential membership. We are acutely aware however, that no single definition can adequately explain the flexibility of the group of include all of the students we would like to reach.

At this point we are primarily interested in informing the community of our existence.. and in expanding active membership with a view toward next fall when a well developed resource group can be most valuable. We would particularly like to recruit members who are willing to share their time and experience with other students who will probably feel as confused, frustrated and angry as you felt when you first came here. For more information, please call Jane Holappa at 253-5276, Joe Beals at 549-1311, or write Non-Traditional Students, RSO 370, Student Union. Our meetings are at noon on Wednesdays in the Suffolk Room in the Student Union, first floor across from the Hillel office. If we can help you, or if you would like to help us, please feel welcome.

Collegian not money maker...

To The Editor:

This is in reference to Susan Mulcahey's reply to Bill Ballou's column. Despite her intellectual pretensions and her use of phrases like raison d'etre she seems unable to comprehend a simple point. The Collegian does not want to make money, it is merely trying to cover its operating expenses. A major source for this has been undergraduate fees yet graduage students have been free to help themselves to copies of The Collegian. Although I agree with the point that she made in an earlier letter that graduate students should be allowed a more active role in the paper if they are to fund it, the remainder of her arguments seem to stem from an inability to handle personal criticism and are only superficially connected to the issue of Collegian funding. I suggest, in the future, that she limit her criticisms to spelling errors which she is very good at detecting and avoid discussion of concepts which she is unable to understand.

WOUNDED KNEE TRIAL

Yesterday: AP testifies

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — A photographer for The Associated Press testified yesterday that he had given information on one occasion to FBI agents at a roadblock outside Wounded Knee during the village's 71-day occupation.

James Mone, a photographer in The AP's Minneapolis bureau, testified at an evidentiary hearing which has interrupted the trial of two American Indian Movement leaders in St. Paul. He said he had responded to questions about how many people were inside Wounded Knee and had given details of statements made at a press conference by Indian leaders.

After his testimony, Mone was suspended from duty by West Gallagher, president and general manager of the AP, who issued this statement:

"It is apparent from his own testimony in court today that AP photographer Jim Mone acted improperly as an impartial newsman. It is against Associated Press policy for any AP man to be involved in any way in any news story. Under the circumstances, Mone has been suspended from all further duties with The Associated Press."

Mone testified that an FBI agent had asked him at a government roadblock on March 12, 1973 about how many persons were inside the besieged village.

"I'm quite sure I discussed an estimate," Mone said, adding he believed he said there were about 350 to 400 persons in Wounded Knee that daY.

"And I believe there was the usual conversation 'did you see any guns' " Mone said.

Mark Lane, defense attorney for two AIM leaders, asked Mone, "You felt it was a stupid question."

"Oh sure," answered Mone. "I believe they asked numbers and I may have given them a figure." Mone said that if he had answered the question, he probably would have estimated about 60 weapons.

Dennis Banks

An FBI Teletype report entered in evidence last week quoted an unidentified source who had left Wounded Knee March 12, 1973 as saying he had observed 200 to 300 weapons, including rifles with scopes and an estimated 350 to 400 persons in the village.

Mone testified that he relayed to agents other statements about use of liquor and drugs in the village, which Indian leaders had made at a press conference. Mone said he had added personal observations about problems of control in the village.

At 3 months: unpredictable

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — The Wounded Knee trial which passed the three-month mark last week has been as unpredictable as the occupation of the small Indian reservation last year. The court case already has taken more time than the 71-day incident.

Russell Means

"Something new seems to come up every day," U.S. District Court Judge Fred Nichol remarked during a recent session.

The trial has been a three-act drama to date: a month to pick a jury, a month of testimony from 25 government witnesses, and four weeks of a special hearing, with the jury excused, to determine defense charges of an illegal wiretap at a road-block phone. The latter could result in a dismissal of charges.

The case's length has not affected the spirit of Dennis Banks and Russell Means, accused of ringleader roles in the much-publicized armed occupation of Wounded Knee, S.D., last spring. To them, it's the government that is on trial for "illegal acts prior to and during Wounded Knee."

Banks and Means are the first of six leaders to face trial in connection with the siege that began the night of Feb. 27, 1973, when more than 200 armed members and followers of the American Indian Movement AIM drove into the village of 400 residents on the Pine Ridge Reservation in southwestern South Dakota and claimed it as their own.

The occupation continued until May 8 with federal officers and the militants exchanging gunfire almost daily during the first month. Two of the insurgents were killed; and at least nine person, including a U.S. marshal and an FBI agent, were wounded.

The trial of Banks and Means was moved from Sioux Falls, S.D., to St. Paul on a change of venue requested by the defendants.

It took almost a month to pick a jury. Then the prosecution went to work, calling Bureau of Indian Affairs officials from the reservation, the parish priest at Wounded Knee and federal officers to attest that Banks and Means played key roles in the takeover and occupation.

The defense team, led by civil rights attorney William Kunstler and author Mark Lane, introduced about two dozen motions aimed at dismissal.

A motion filed in mid-March put at least a temporary end to the main trial. It accused the government of illegally monitoring the lone telephone into Wounded Knee.

Conte poll says 37% for impeach

WASHINGTON, D.C. — 37 per cent of the respondents to a poll by U.S. Rep. Silvio O. Conte (D-Mass.) conducted during January and February want the House to impeach President Nixon immediately.

Results of the poll were released last week by Conte, who represents Amherst as well as most of western Massachusetts. The poll was by mail to households, not individuals, according to a press aid in Conte's office.

The poll dealt with impeachment and President Nixon's performance in office. Conte said in a statement that 28,611 were returned.

Responding to one question, 37 per cent said they believe the House should vote to impeach the President immediately. Thirty-three said they believe the impeachment probe being conducted by the Judiciary Committee should continue.

Twenty-nine per cent of those responding to the same question said they believe impeachment proceedings should not continue—while 16 per cent believed the "allegations of impeachible offenses are without merit and impeachment proceedings should be dropped."

Reflecting a decreasing, but still noticable fear of an untried process, thirteen per cent said they thought the danger to the country and its image from impeachment would be too great to withstand.

Answering another written question, twenty-nine per cent of the respondents said President Nixon is doing a "fair" job in foreign affairs, while twenty-seven per cent said his performance was "good". Both the excellent and poor ratings on foreign police recorded twenty-two per cent response.

The poll was conducted before Henry Kissinger.

The poll was conducted before Sec. of State Henry Kissinger's dissappointing trip to Moscow, and before the new flaring-up of violence in the Middle East.

Answering another questions, sixty-nine per cent of the respondents said President Nixon is doing a "poor" job in domestic affairs.

In announcing the results of the poll, Conte said he would reserve personal judgement on Nixon and impeachment because he will sit as a "juror" in the House if the Judiciary Committee passes an impeachment recommendation to the full House.

In the story Wednesday, "Media to Discuss Interaction of Races" the first paragraph should have read "Black, white and Spanish-American interaction in the campus media," instead of "Black and white Spanish-American interaction in the campus Media." The Collegian apologizes for the error.

HOW DO YOU THINK MOST PEOPLE YOUR AGE DIE?

It's not drugs.
It's not suicide.
And it's not cancer.

It's automobile crashes.

More American people between the ages of 15 and 25 die in automobile crashes than in any other way.

At least half of those deaths are alcohol related. And the drunk drivers who cause most of them are under 25. Sometimes, many times, they kill themselves.

One of the most dangerous things you can do is get drunk and drive home.

You can change it. You have to.

You march against the war. You fight for clean air and clean water. You eat natural foods. You practice yoga. You are so much for life. And you are so much against killing.

It would be unthinkable for you to wittingly kill another human being.

So then, why is this happening?

This is your key to unprecedented calculating capacity. Only Hewlett-Packard offers it.

It lets you "speak" to your calculator with total consistency, because it lets you load data into a 4-Register Stack. This means: (1) you always enter and process your data the same way, no matter what your problem; (2) you don't have to re-enter data; (3) you can see all intermediate data anytime.

Our HP-45 is one of two pre-programmed scientific pocket-sized computer calculators with this key. That's one reason it's the most powerful pre-programmed pocket-sized scientific computer calculator. Here are three of many others:

1. It's pre-programmed to handle 44 arithmetic, trigonometric and logarithmic functions and data manipulation operations beyond the basic four (+, −, ×, ÷).

2. It lets you store nine constants in its nine Addressable Memory Registers, and it gives you a "Last X" Register for error correction or multiple operations on the same number.

3. It displays up to 10 significant digits in either fixed-decimal or scientific notation and automatically positions the decimal point throughout its 200-decade range.

Our HP-35 is the other. It handles 22 functions, has one Addressable Memory Register and also displays up to 10 digits in either fixed-decimal or scientific notation. It's the second most powerful pre-programmed pocket-sized scientific computer calculator.

Both of these exceptional instruments are on display now. If you're looking for unprecedented calculating capacity for your money, by all means see and test them.

Obscenity Commission dies, lack of interest sighted

BOSTON (AP) — Like hounds exhausted by an elusive quarry, members of the Massachusetts Obscene Literature Control Commission have finally decided that their 15-year hunt for law-breaking pornographers is fruitless.

The commission, which has been virtually inactive for at least two years, is dead.

The unpaid panel still exists on paper, apparently because no one has the interest in eliminating it. But its seven members, including Chairman Joseph Zabriskie, have all resigned and interviews with a number of them reveal a pronounced lack of interest in the commission's revival.

The Obscene Literature Control Commission was established in 1958 to act on citizen complaints. It once received small appropriations for clerical expenses and travel for commission members.

But the money, along with the members' interest, ran out long ago.

Zabriskie, a psychologist for the Department of Youth Services, served until late last year. His term had officially expired in 1971 but he continued on as a holdover until he decided it was no longer worth it.

Several other commission members interviewed said they resigned one and a half to two years ago, but never received any official confirmation from the office of Gov. Francis W. Sargent.

Rabbi Earl A. Grollman of Belmont, one of the three clergymen on the commission as required by its original statute, says he attended only one meeting after his appointment in 1970.

"It was apparent the commission wasn't going anywhere," he says. "And bedies, obscenity never was one of my great interests."

He apparently was appointed because a rabbi he knew in Worcester quit the commission and was asked to suggest a replacement.

The Rev. Francis S. Strykowski of Salem, whose commission term-like that of Rabbi Grollman — does not actually expire until 1975, says the monthly meeting notices he used to receive stopped about six months ago, apparently around the time Zabriskie quit.

"I never really had time for this sort of thing anyway," Father Strykowski says.

The commission's last official audit by the office of Auditor Thaddeus Buczko was published late last year, covering the period March 14, 1973 to Nov. 8. It was brief, and somewhat inaccurate.

The audit said, "The Commission continues to hold regular monthly meetings . . ." This has not been true at least since 1971.

Those who attended the last regular meetings recall that most of the issues centered on "adult" literature, sent through the mail, that ended up in the hands of youngsters.

This was a particular annoyance to Sen. William X. Wall, D-Lawrence, the commission's designated legislative liason. But, according to one former commission member, Wall was the only legislator who knew the panel existed.

Zabriskie says he now refers all calls about the commission to the office of Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn. But a spokesman for Quinn says he has never heard of the group.

ACADEMIC SENATE IS "HARMLESS" is what a staffer writing in the Cal State U. at Fresno Insight says: "If you're hunting out corruption in local government, don't bother with the Academic Senate. It's completely harmless. However, you might learn a lesson in governmental management by sitting in on one of their meetings.

"The Academic Senate consists of about 100 professors who make the cut and dry (sic) decisions affecting the future of this campus, and ultimately, the future of America. Occasionally, a Monday afternoon wil roll around when they can work up a quorum, so they decide to meet..."

Shakespeare said it: "There's nothing new under the sun."

ANIMAL LOVERS at Brooklyn College came to rescue of 14 dogs who were slated for the gas chamber because of overcrowding at a local animal shelter, recently.

The Kingsman repooted in a page one piece that when the campus radio station made known the problem, contributions poured in to the tune of $200. It was just enough to resuce 14 dogs who were subsequently given away on campus.

The newspaper headline read, "Call It Puppy Love."

Which is what we need more of, these days.

OUT OF THE MOUTHS OF BABES in Academe comes the word that unionization is "in."

TAs (teaching assistants) at the University of Michigan appear to have less trouble making up their minds about joining a union than their seniors, who undoubtedly have more hangups. The UM TAs recently voted two-to-one to accept the Graduate Employes Association as their sole bargaining agent.

And 60 per cent of them showed up to vote, too.

Buzz-on

CONWAY, N.H. (AP) — A South Boston, youth who drank a pint of vodka without stopping died yesterday at a hospital here.

Leo Casey, 16, had been in a coma since Saturday when he attempted to drink the alcohol without pause on a $3 bet from friends.

The youth was discovered unconscious in a motel here Saturday morning where about 80 high school students from the South Boston area had gathered for a weekend outing.

Police said they discovered the boy when they went to the motel to check that all the youths were registered.

PIZZAS TOO!!

Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner and Smith will never be like this.

That's you, landing more than a million dollars worth of jet aircraft at 150 miles per hour, within 3 seconds and 200 feet.

That's you after an invaluable education, the finest there is, compliments of tthe Navy.

That's you with your wings of gold, with all the prestige and privileges of a Naval Officer and aviator.

Merrill Lynch can be pretty exciting in a different way.

But right now you've got that one chance in your life to swing wide as the sea, and as high as the sky.

If you're going to be something, why not be something special?

Maralhon four days from finish

By DAVID HANRAHAN
MDC Special

Sheila Inderlied paced her office. John Lee was checking his audio visual gadgets. Cars arrived outside.

Time: 8:30 a.m. yesterday. Place: School of Education Hills House. Event: Spring 1974 Marathon of educational lectures, seminars and other events.

Pacing aside, neither overcast weather nor Patriot's Day kept a moderate turnout to yesterday's marathon, a twice annual event held by the School of Education to promote educational innovation. By late afternoon yesterday, Ms. Inderlied, the event's coordinator, said a large crowd had attended the more than fifty one, two or three hour "happenings" in the Hills, a converted dormitory.

Lee, the man in charge of furnishing the over 400 "event presenters" this week with audio visual aids, was checking his lists to make sure everyone was taken care of.

At 9:00 a.m. in room 21A two young men from an alternative school in Setucket, New York told of the school they direct for disruptive and non-motivated students.

In 226 Timothy Knowles began a discussion on "Functional Sensitivity: Programs serving Black Undergraduate Students". Down the hall in room 121, George Pierce and Jody Pierce, age five, were organizing a three-hour hike as part of a program called "Outdoors as a Classroom."

The day proceeded. Noon drew near. Robert Diamond, Groton schools superintendant asked whether education has to be "good or bad" in a seminar. Topics ranged from "How to get a High Quality-Complete nutrition for 25 cents a Day" to finding out what life is in prisons.

Still four days from the finish, the Marathon continues today and this week open to the public. For those who want to think, talk and be educational innovation for a day there are no requirements, no fees, no demands. A schedule of Events is available at Hills House or the School of Education building behind Womens' Phys. Ed.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

forecast

Persons born with Venus on the Ascendant, in the Second or Sixth House, or those born under Taurus and Libra, may have one eye larger than the other. When Venus, by transit, conjuncts Saturn, many Taureans and Librans feel a sensation of having their throats tighten.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent is on romance, creativity, personal magnetism. Popularity rating could soar. More persons relate to you, talk to and about you. Members of opposite sex are captivated by your charms. Obviously, you can win friends and have wishes fulfilled.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Sense of accomplishment heightens. You build toward home, family security. Those close to you show affection, kindness and understanding. Relationships with professional superiors improve. You could get sought-after assignment.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Good lunar aspect coincides now with journey, correspondence, special studies, intellectual attainment. Be selective. See in light of actuality. Throw aside wishful thinking--and superstition. Pisces, Virgo could be involved.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Investments, ways to get most for money are likely to be featured. Capricorn individual could help show the way. In personal matters, relationship intensifies. If married, you rediscover mate. If single, you could be serious enough to consider marriage.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Finish rather than begin--find better ways of communication, distribution. Aries, Libra persons are in picture. Contract or special agreement commands attention. Be sure you are not asked to give up something for nothing.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): The way you work, your routine--these areas are subject to change. The more creative you are, the better the results. Means don't feel wedded to past. Innovate and originate. Be independent without being arrogant.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Favorable lunar aspect now coincides with love, creativity, associations with persons who have "young ideas." You are able to express, to imprint your own style. Trust hunch. Timing is on your side. Meaningful coincidences occur, resulting in gain, profit.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Wardrobe, furnishings are in picture. Decorations, appointments connected with home require attention. Contract made now could develop into meaningful relationship. Your life style will change for the better--if you so permit.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may be receiving surprise visitor. One who seemed cool now shows ardor. Don't be caught off balance. Evaluate situation. You have right to hold yourself in high esteem. Apology is due and you receive it. Be gracious without being weak.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Emphasis is on collections, payments, income possibilities. Personal investigation is essential. Take nothing for granted. Ask questions. Give full rein to intellectual curiosity. Money is involved. Some people want something for nothing--from you.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Cycle is high--take initiative. Be confident. New contracts, challenges, opportunities are featured. Surprise due in connection with home, family. You will feel better, stronger, more inspired. Taurus, Libra could be involved.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Much that happens is obscured. People tend now to talk to you in riddles. See beyond the apparent--get behind the scenes for a closer look. Your ability to know without official confirmation is stressed. You know without knowing. Your instincts take over and are reliable.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are independent, have desire to multiply earnings--more so than do most persons. You love beauty, artistic endeavors--your voice is unusual and throat conditions, at times, present a problem. April--this month--could be your most significant of 1974. Taurus and Libra persons are drawn to you. You are intriguing and opposite sex finds you a challenge.

SWWC seeks teachers

The Southwest Women's Center Curriculum Committee, in preparation for course selection, has issued its policy and direction statement, and is presently recruiting teachers and new courses for next semester. The listing is not final, and since the Center encourages collaborative efforts, it is urged that people apply together. The policy, in addition, states that "it should be understood that the Southwest Residential College includes women of varied socioeconomic and ethnic backgrounds and that the courses submitted would be addressed to the entire community. We believe that the issues of racism and sexism are inseparable and our new program relfects this belief."

A tentative list of courses is as follows: Women in Movements for Social Change, Revolutionary Societies and the Role of Women, Women in Journalism, The place of Women in the Economy, The Experience of Third World Women in America, Sexism and Racism in the Public Schools, Women's Theatre, Women's Center Practicum, Women's Counseling, Women Look at the Law, Women Look at Religion, Women in Africa, Our Bodies-Our Selves, and The Lesbian Experience.

An additional course offering, entitled Women Look at Mental Health, will include field work at local counselling and Women Centers.

Pre-registration will be held later in the semester; people interested in teaching a course or proposing one of their own are asked to contact the Women's Center, in Mackimmie House, Southwest.

Abuses discussed

"Intercollegiate Sports: Who Profits?" is the title of a program for this Thursday, April 18, from 12:15 to 1:15 in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

The speaker will be Eric Kjeldsen, UMass instructor in P.E. and former coach at the University. The discussion will explore the potential abuses of intercollegiate athletics in their impact on athletes and colleges. A series of recent articles, including one series in the New York Times, has been predicting that scandals in athletics would become a major news story in the near future.

The program is one in the continuing First Amendment series sponsored by the United Christian Foundation.

Soviets discussed

The Committee for Human Rights in the Soviet Area will sponsor a forum on Solzhenitsyn and Sakharov tomorrow at 8 p.m. in Thompson Hall 106.

Slavic Languages Professor Laszlo Tikos will disucss the exiled Soviet writer and political dissident Alexander Solzhenitsyn in "More About Solzhenitsyn." Economics Professor Vaclav Holesovsky will talk about the Soviet nuclear physicist and political activist Sakharov in "And Who is Andrei Sakharov?"

An open discussion period will follow the talks and the public is cordially invited. The Committee for Human Rights in the Soviet Area was founded a month ago by a group of faculty, students and staff at UMass.

The committee is now mounting a national drive through letters to Congress, statements to the press, forums and other means to establish the Soviet area human rights problem as an issue of concern to the American people.

Women in real estate

Carol Kucha, a UMass business graduate and presently a licensed real estate broker, will conduct an informal discussion on career possibilities for women in real estate. The discussion will begin at 8:30 p.m. in room A-210 of the Graduate Research Center.

Africa to be studied

Students and faculty members from African countries are cordially invited to attend an informal meeting tomorrow at 4:30 p.m. in Room 917 of the Campus Center.

The purposes to organize a series of informal meetings open to all members of the campus community interested in Africa, past, present and future.

The African Students' Association is sponsoring this organizational event. Co-sponsors are the Foreign Student Advisor's Office and the International Training Program of the College of Food and Natural Resources.

Refreshments will be served.

Off-campus housing office opened

Through a joint effort of the Commuter Assembly, The Office for Non-Resident Students and the Financial Aid Office, an office for Off-Campus housing, is in the process of being formed on an experimental basis. The proposal originally drafted by Larry Gendron with the assistance of Randy Dahl, calls for the office to be open for 15 weeks, from May 20 to Sept. 7.

The office would be responsible for assisting anyone who has a need to secure housing off-campus. Listings of available units; houses, apartments, and rooms, will be compiled. A list of students looking for roommates will also be available.

A person wishing to use this service will fill out a form stating his or her needs and a counselor will then find the listings for all available units which meet those needs. This will help to reduce the amount of running around involved with finding houses. Telephones will be available for the individual to call landlords and information concerning bus transportation, leases, car pooling, home purchasing and other concerns of commuters will be available.

Final details are now being worked out and more information will be available soon. Anyone who has suggestions or wishes to be involved in this project should contact Larry Gendron at the Commuter Assembly office or Randy Dahl at the Office for Non Resident Students.

Meeting for Daniels

An organizational meeting will be held tonight in Webster Main Lounge at 9:00 concerning Governor Sargent's April 20 conference to be held here. The subject of the conference is the developmentally disabled citizens of Massachusetts. Supporters of Russ Daniels plan to return the "hospitality" shown by the Governor on their visit to the State House Tuesday.

Plan your life

A Life Planning Workshop will be offered today in the Campus Center from 6:30 to 11:00.

If interested, call the Student Development Center, 545-0333, and leave your name and telephone number with the secretary or call Barry Collamore at 253-3613 for more information.

Piano music tonight

At 8:00 p.m. tonight in Herter Hall the Valley Chamber Players will present a program of twentieth century piano music.

Pianists Paul Larson, Elizabeth Quiriy, Margaritta Kincannon and Stephen Jaffe will present a unique program featuring works by Cowell, Bartok, Looen Rush, Stephen Abram Jaffe, and Rober Godin.

The Valley Chamber Players, organized in 1973, are composed of students, faculty, and other semi-professional musicians in the five college area and have for the past two years presented unusual programs featuring especially old and new music.

The concert is open to the public without charge.

SW to elect officers

Southwest Assembly will hold their seventh annual elections for new officers, Thursday. The meeting will begin at 7:30 a.m. Both nominations and elections will take place at this meeting. All SW undergraduates are eligable to run, and all SW students may attend the meeting. Only their representatives may vote.

Craig Sanderson is the only known candidate for president. Women's Center is still considering whether to put up any candidates, as is the Black Caucus.

Larry St. Cyr, president, announced that the Student Government Association presidential candidates will be speaking at the meeting in order to introduce themselves and get support.

The SW elections are being held early this year because a "quicky colloq" will be offered to the new officers. The colloq would help orient the officers to their duties and responsibilities as well as the procedures involved in the Assembly and SW Area.

Yoga has power

Paul Wilson, karate instructor, yoga master and healer, will give an informative seminar on the practical power of spiritual healing at noon today in the Marks Meadow Gym. This is a marathon sponsored event. He will also speak this evening at 7:30 in the Converse Hall Assembly room, Amherst College.

Alcoholism panel

The second lecture of the Student Volunteer Services film and lecture series will take place tonight at 8:00 p.m. in Hasbrouck 134. The topic is alcoholism and will be discussed by a panel consisting of: Harry Byorglund, alcoholic coordinator and ward manager of Rutland State Hospital, also on Board of Directors of Worcester County Alcoholic Council; William Smith, graduate student at the University of Massachusetts who has successfully gone through the program at Rutland Hospital; Dr. Chittum of the University of Massachusetts infirmary who will speak on the physiological effects of alcohol on the body and the nervous system, as well as the extent of alcoholism and amount of detoxification done that he has come into contact with on this campus. The Secret Love of Sandra Blaine, a movie on the effects of alcoholism on women, and Time for a Decision, a movie about alcoholism in men, will be shown.

AFSC to discuss Asia

Women's Weekly Happenings has announced that Irene Johnson, a member of the American Friends Service Committee and a Petersham resident, will lecture here Wednesday.

Ms. Johnson recently returned from an extensive visit to Asia. Countries she visited include India, Indonesia, Laos, Cambodia, Vietnam, and The Phillipines, where she spoke with local women about their progress and their problems. Her lecture, "Conversations With Asian Women", will be highlighted by slides she took.

Ms. Johnson's lectures will be held at 11:30 a.m. and 2:30 p.m. in room 917 in the Campus Center. Women's Weekly Happenings is an on-going program of the Everywoman's Center of the University of Massachusetts. Further information may be obtained at the Center in Goodell Hall or by calling 545-0883.

Prepare for a job

In April, there will be three workshops on job preparation:

Today — Interview Preparation (focusing on basic dos and don'ts and the questions asked in an interview).

April 22 — Resume Writing and Resources (focusing on what goes into a good resume, where to find job information on campus, and how, basically, the Placement Service on campus works).

April 29 — Interview Preparation (same as April 16 for those who missed the previous workshop).

All sign-ups are in the Student Development Reception Area, Berkshire House, room 213. Workshops will be held in room 307 Berkshire House. Interested persons welcome; limit 10 per workshop.

1776 shot fired again in reenactment

BOSTON (AP) — The shot heard round the world on April 19, 1775, was fired for the 199th time yesterday as Bay State residents staged their annual Patriot's Day festivities, which since 1897 have included the running of the Boston Marathon.

The celebration actually began on Sunday with the traditional-reenactment of the hanging of two lanterns in the steeple of Old North Church to commemorate Paul Revere's historic signal that the British were on the way.

This year, the lanterns were hung by Revere's great-great-great-great grandson, Joseph Warren Reynolds, 9, of Concord.

Although Revere's ride through the countryside was made on April 18 and the battle of Lexington and Concord took place on April 19, the Patriot's Day holiday is generally observed on the day of the marathon.

Runners from throughout the world participate in the race from Hopkinton to Boston.

Old North Church was the focal point for memorial services in the city to pay tribute to American Revolutionary War figures.

Yesterday morning, the Battle of Lexington was staged on the Green, followed by the placing of a wreath at the Minutemen Memorial at Buckman Tavern by the Lexington Minutemen.

Would you hire you?

Of course you would.
You work hard. And you're good at it. Like most Americans.
But, if all of us did just a little better, we'd wind up with better products, better services and even more pride in the work we do.

America. It only works as well as we do.

If Nixon resigned

Brooke would grant immunity

BOSTON (AP) — Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass., says if President Nixon agreed to resign, that would be enough to warrant granting him immunity from prosecution on Watergate related charges.

Brooke said such an arrangement would have to be accompanied by a bill of particulars outlining the charges to which he would admit guilt.

He said this would be similar to the procedure followed when Vice President Spiro T. Agnew pleaded "no contest" to charges in return for a recommendation of leniency.

In a television interview Sunday night, Brooke reiterated his earlier call for the President's resignation. "I still believe on balance that the country would be far better off if the President resigned," Brooke said.

The senator claimed that the price of stepping down from the highest office in this country "would be a penalty that would meet any crime that could have been committed."

Brooke said if the President refuses to comply with the House Judiciary Committee subpoena for Watergate tapes and documents, the Congress may impeach him for contempt of Congress. Brooke added that could be detrimental to the country, because all other Watergate related issues might then be ignored in the Senate trial.

Brooke commented on WKBG-TV's "Point of View" program.

Baseball JV's sweep UConn

By BOB HIGGINS,
MDC Sports Staff

The UMass junior varsity baseball team opened their season in impressive fashion yesterday as they swept a doubleheader from the University of Connecticut 5-4 and 9-6.

"I thought we were ready before, but I wasn't sure," remarked Coach Jeff McKay after the games. "But now I'm sure. We're going to have a great year."

They started out like they were going to blow UConn out of the park in the first game. After pitcher Jim Bedard mowed down the first three UConn batters, the Minutemen went to work. John Kearney led off with an infield hit, Charlie Johnson singled to right center, and Steve Wright followed with a walk. Bill Tremblay then singled to left, and the score was 3-0.

The Minutemen should have had a few more runs in the third, but a rally was cut short by an incredibly bizarre play that had the official scorer's head spinning. The first three batters reached base on an error by the shortshop, and two walks. Bill Tremblay then hit a pop-up directly above home plate. The home plate umpire waited until the ball was coming down before invoking the infield fly rule, leaving the runners up in the air on what to do. The pitcher dropped the ball, threw out the runner who was trying to get back to first. The first baseman then threw out the runner going to third, and the result was a triple play. Amid the confusion that followed, the umpires decided that one run had scored, and it was 4-0, UMass.

But UConn came back with two runs in the fourth and two more in the fifth to tie the game up. Finally, in the bottom of the seventh, UMass scored another run to win the game. The hero was Steve Wright, who singled home Paul Abramowicz from second, and the game was over.

Connecticut looked like they would turn things around in the second game, scoring three runs in the first inning off starter Mark Santini. UMass came back with two in their half of the first, only to have the Huskies regain the lead in the second with two more runs. Not to be outdone, the Minutemen scored seven runs in the bottom of the second, making the score 9-5. UConn added on run later, making the final score 9-6.

Jim Bedard pitched extremely well in the first game, although he began to tire as the game progressed. He was relieved by lefty Dave Tewhill, who held UConn scoreless during his brief stint. Although Santini was wild during the first two innings of the second game, Chris Kirby came on and gave up only one hit during the last five innings.

Brown trips chimps, 16-6 on turnovers

By TOM CROWLEY

Falling prey to turnovers, the JV Lacrosse team lost to Brown, 16-6, here Saturday.

Staying close to Brown for the first quarter, the junior gorillas were out-scored in the second period, 5-2, and ended the half down, 8-4. But Brown came out shooting in the third quarter as they out-scored the UMies, 6-1. Brown then just played out the game to its conclusion.

The attackmen of Brown were responsible for most of the damage, with Steve Swendoff getting 4 points and 4 assists and Nick Schofield got 7 points.

The UMass goalies, Tim Harney and Bob White, could not be faulted as they played a good game. The defense did not do as good as it should have and had trouble controlling the ball and with ground balls.

The offense showed some life though. Steve Charles had 2 goals and an assist. Jack Dacey scored on a 35-footer and Mike Alott, John May, and Peter Lyons also scored for the Minutemen. Dave Lewis had some good feeds and assists. The first midfielders, Bobby Graham, Rick Walsh, and Larry Heton, performed well in the contest.

The next game for the JV lacrosse team is home Wednesday against Harvard.

Judo for mind and body

By BILL STEVENS

Judo is more than a combative art and competitive sport. Like other oriental martial arts, it is a way or path to perfection of self and the world. "Ju" can be translated to mean gentle, yielding, flowing, flexible. "D" means path, direction, process (to perfection). Judo can be referred to an zen in motion, action in passivity and passivity in action.

Jigoro Kano, Judo's founder, developed judo from jujitsu, which was an ancient form of self-defense developed in China and Japan. Kano studied several forms of jujitsu. He was a master of Tenshin Shinyo jujitsu, which emphasized throwing techniques, and Kito jujitsu, which emphasized body attack and fighting of body and arms. The more dangerous techniques were eliminated or revised by Kano. His aim was for all judoka to practice this art safely, without deliberate intention to maim or kill the opponent, but still have practical use as self defense.

Physical conditioning, mental conditioning, and self defense become natural results of judo practice. Maximum efficient use of physical and mental energy with mutual welfare and benefit for all. Perfection of self is the first step in the evolution and perfection of mankind. "Ju" teaches a flowing with people, ideas, events, that enhances mutual welfare and benefit. Judo is a process of being. By giving way, "ju", we discover our own path or "do". Judo becomes more than the physical activity in the dojo (judo hall), it becomes an extention of ourselves to the universe.

Returning is the motion of the Tao.
Yielding is the way of the Tao.
The ten thousand things are born of being.
Being is born of not being.
(from Tao Te Ching)

Judo techniques or "waza" are broken up into three main categories. Throwing techniques, holding or mat techniques, and striking techniques. Throwing or Nage-Waza are further classified into hand, hip, leg, side sacrifice and rear sacrifice techniques, or throws. Matwork consists of holddowns, strangulation grips, and elbow joint locks. Atemi waza, or striking methods are only practiced in formal judo exercises called kata.

Ukemi, falling practice, is always taught to the novice judoka first. Ukemi teaches the beginner not to fear being thrown. Letting the physical body and ego "give way" to this fear and be thrown forcefully without injury or pain. This is the first way to learn "ju".

The sensei (instructor) introduces a movement to be practiced. The judokas pair off and fit in for the throw repeatedly without throwing. They concentrate on off balancing, the opponent and proper form. Form practice is done slowly at first, concentrating on form and balance, then faster as the body blends into the movement seemingly without effort. This practice is called uchikomi.

Sutgeiko, throw away practice, is the next step after uchikomi. The judokas pair off and move around throwing each other as forcefully and fast as possible, without losing form, timing or using unnecessary strength. No resistance if offered by the person being thrown. The thrower gets timing, movement, and form practice; faller learns how to flow with thrower and has valuable ukemi practice. There is a whirlwind of action in throw away practice, both thrower and fallers' minds remain alert but passive, open to react instantaneously. Strictest attention must be paid to the moment, the movement, the do. As the judoka perfects his-her technique, the body can move unconsciously into a throw, with "no mind" as in Zen meditation.

Hodge, Esposito below par

Ailing B's grateful for series breather

Phil Esposito "Felt Lousy"

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Bruins, back home after sweeping the Toronto Maple Leafs four straight in their quest for the Stanley Cup, are grateful for a breather before the semi-finals.

The early completion of their quarterfinal series, which ended Sunday night with a 4-3 overtime victory, will give several ailing Bruins a chance to get ready for their western opponents next week. Chicago leads Los Angeles 3-1 in their West Division quarterfinal in the National Hockey League playoffs with the fifth game of the best-of-seven series set for Tuesday.

Ken Hodge, who scored the series winner Sunday, is still having some problems with a torn cartilage in the collar bone and a groin pull, both injuries suffered in regular season games.

Linemate Phil Esposito, NHL scoring leader, has been slowed by a siege of flu that started with a head cold last Tuesday.

"I've felt pretty lousy ever since," Esposito said Sunday. "I've been dragging. I think with a couple of days to take care of this thing I'll be okay."

The only healthy member of that line was Wayne Cashman, who gave a consistent performance throughout the series.

While the series with the Leafs was not the most exciting ever played, goalie Doug Favell of Toronto was impressed with the Bruins play.

"From what they showed us I'd have to say they'll go all the way," he said Sunday night in the dressing room. "They have all those scorers and they have everybody skating. You have to think of them as the eventual winners."

Favell was the Toronto goalie in three of the four games.

"They're a tough team to beat and they could go all the way," Toronto coach Red Kelly said. "I thought they were tiring late in the game and, maybe if we had won, we could have given them more trouble."

No game, mucho rain

No, it was not the Day of the Dolphin yesterday but if Chestnut Hill was indeed as wet as they say it was, then the poor marathon runners might as well have worn their swimming trunks instead of flats.

For it appears that the Newton area was bombarded with a re-enactment of the "forty days and forty nights" routine that proved deadly to most of the earthly creatures at the time.

Well, granted it only rained for a few hours but that was certainly enough to fill the potholes in the outfield of Alumni Field at Boston College where the Minutemen were scheduled to play the Huskies of Northeastern in a doubleheader yesterday.

It was, I guess, what you could call a fitting end to a terrible weekend all-around weatherwise. It seems these holiday weekends are always like that nowadays, doesn't it?

The only thing is that Monday was a beautiful, if I could underline that here I would but I can't so I won't, day save for all the puddles reflecting the sunlight.

So when I awoke I thought to myself, and this is at 6 a.m. for all you sleepy heads, what a day for the ballgame. Fat chance. As I pulled into Boyden at about 7:45 I immediately started looking for Coach Bergquist to see what the story was.

It seems as though the Boston College baseball diamond is the run-off slope for the artificial surface Alumni Stadium football complex. For it is always so soggy, making for a slow infield.

It seems to be the same old story wherever you go... football gets the money and the baseball squad gets the tobacco field IF the Agricultural Science Department will condescend to giving up the all-valuable plot of land.

Upon talking with Bergquist I learned that the doubleheader had been reduced to a single game encounter and that even that may be in jeopardy.

Catastrophe number three was about to befall the baseball squad as they learned that the bus requested for 8:15 had, in fact, been requested on the written order form for a 9 o'clock departure.

Sure enough. True to the company's word the bus pulls in front of Boyden at 8:45 and Smitty and myself board in hopes of a long day of baseball and scenic travel along the Mass Pike.

Ring... Ring... Ring... "Hello, Coach Bergquist speaking." The other end speaks meekly, "Hello Dick. It's 'no go, give it the red light', or whatever you want to call it. At any rate, the game is off due to a lake for a field. Sorry."

"Can we play tomorrow?" asked a frustrated Bergquist.

" 'Fraid not, (pause), nope... We all have to play Tufts in a tuffy. Get the joke, Dick?"

And that was all she wrote for this Monday, Patriot's Day of 1974.

It will now be up to Bob O'Connell (Assistant A.D. at UMass) and his counterpart at NU to put a mutually suitable date on the calender for the two schools to meet again.

As the gang of well-dressed UMass students, somewhat of a rarity these days, broke up their little party at Boyden, Bergquist offered to practice INSIDE for anyone who wanted to take a few raps at the old Jugs pitching machine.

UMass will now have three games to reschedule in an already tight period of time, leaving them with 21 games to play between now and the last day of the season when they face Dartmouth in a doubleheader on May 18.

Crewmen breeze to two easy victories

By BOB ESTELLE

Despite the threat of a rainstorm, the UMass Crew won their regatta with LaSalle and Imperial last Saturday.

The day started off with the two freshman crews taking on Mt. Herman Prep of Northfield in a two mile race. The first frosh took an easy victory with an 11:11 time. Mt. Herman followed much later with an 11:47 time and the second frosh crossed the finish line at 11:48.

The jayvee race followed and they, too, won an easy race with LaSalle, finishing the 1500 meter race with a time of 6:42 to LaSalle's 7:13. Racing in the jayvee boat were Bob Norton, Dick D'Addario, Bill Vose, Rob Hopkins, Kevin Connor, Rich Jamara, John Moynihan and Jim Bouzianas. Mark Lyle was the coxswain.

The varsity race was also the scene of an easy victory. Racing against LaSalle and Imperial College of London, the race got off to a bad start when the rain started coming down. Then, after a false start, the race started with UMass pulling away from the competition by a length during the first two hundred yards. They used the remainder of the race to pull even further away and finished with a 6:23 time. Imperial finished with a 6:45 time and LaSalle finished in 6:55.

Cash HR helps Coleman beat Red Sox, 1-0

BOSTON (AP) — Veteran Norm Cash smashed his first home run of the season and Joe Coleman pitched a three-hitter in the Detroit Tigers' 1-0 Patriots' Day baseball victory over the Boston Red Sox Monday.

The triumph snapped a three-game losing streak for the Tigers.

Coleman, 2-0, has given up only five hits in his last two outings. He beat the New York Yankees 4-1 in Detroit April 11 on a two-hitter.

Cash's home run came in the fifth inning off Boston starter Reggie Cleveland, 0-1, who was making his first American League appearance since being traded by St. Louis in the offseason.

Boston threatened to score in the second inning when catcher Bob Montgomery led off with a walk and Bernie Carbo was hit by a pitch, but a force-out at third base and a double play got Coleman out of the jam.

THIRD BASEMAN John Seed awaits throw in BC game last Sunday. Yesterday's encounter with NU was rained out.

UMass, NU rained out

By MDC Staff

Rain, rain, go away, come again some other day. Well it left for Monday's scheduled UM-Northeastern doubleheader at Newton.

But in leaving, it left puddles everywhere and especially on the baseball diamond at B.C. where the game was to be played.

Northeastern's baseball field is being reseeded after being torn up while the new football field was installed at NU.

Consequently all NU's home baseball games are being played on other college diamonds in the Boston area.

To date no make-up date has been set. The Minutemen now have three rainouts to make-up before the season ends on May 18. They also have 18 regular seson season games to play in that time.

The squad will be at home Wednesday afternoon as they host Springfield College in a single game.

Golfers sink Yale by three

By RICH SEVIERI

The UMass golf team opened their season by downing previously undefeated Yale, 395 to 398, last Thursday at New Haven. The match had been originally scheduled for UMass's snowbound home course, Hickory Ridge, but the playing conditions forced coach Fan Gaudette to move the match to New Haven.

"I knew we would be giving them the big home course advantage," said Gaudette, "but it was important that we play." Gaudette was pleased with the victory on a course that half of his team had never played.

Howard Turban, a transfer student from Houston playing in his first match for UMass, led the Minutemen over the (6-0) Yalies with a 76. Turban lost 3 strokes to par on 17 and 18. The double bogey, finish put him 4 over par for the day on the demanding New Haven course.

Joe Artmman, who is rated the Minutemen's number one player, had a 78. John Lasek and Rick Olson chipped in with a pair of 80's. Dave Crochmal broke into the lineup with a solid 81. Dave Kern had an 82 thanks to a disastorous 9 on the 18th.

Coach Gaudette looks for Turban and Artman to develop into 2 of the top collegiate golfers in New England this Spring. They're both high caliber performers," said Gaudette, I can't say enough about them."

Today's scheduled match at New Hampshire has been cancelled due to unplayable conditions in the north country. Coach Gaudette will use the rest of the week to experiment with some of the non-starters.

Around the Cup: The mintjuleps are probably still flowing in ante — bellum Augusta. A South African wears the green coat emblematic of the Masters Championship, while the black professionals still await their first invitation.

Gorillas ninth in nation

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Massachusetts, Brown and Harvard remained in the top 20 this week as coaches voted on the best major college lacrosse teams.

Maryland retained the top spot, while Virginia dropped from second to third, replaced by John Hopkins in the runner-up position.

Washington & Lee was ranked fourth, followed by Cornell, Navy, Hofstra and Rutgers.

The No. 9 spot was occupied by Massachusetts and the No. 10 post by Brown.

Rounding out the top 20 were: 11. Penn; 12. Army; 13. Princeton; 14. North Carolina; 15. Bowling Green; 16. Air Force; 17. Penn State; 18. Yale; 19. Bucknell; 20. Harvard.

Irishman Cosack wins Boston Marathon

By DAVE O'HARA
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Neil Cusack, a 22-year-old East Tenessee State University student from Limerick, Ireland, wore down a record field of 175 starters with a blistering early pace and won the Boston A.A. Marathon Monday in the second fastest time in the 78-year history of the Patriot's Day classic.

Slender, bushy-haired and sporting a knob of a black beard on his chin, Cusack left the field a shambles as he covered the 26-mile, 385 yard course from Hopkinton to Boston in 2 hours 13 minutes, 39 seconds.

He was just 40 seconds off the record pace with less than two miles to go, but then eased up, missing the course mark of 2:10.30 set by England's Ron Hill in 1970.

Tom Fleming, 22, a graduate student at William Patterson College in New Jersey, suffered another heart-breaking setback, finishing as runnerup for the second year in a row. Fleming improved his time from 2:17.46 to 2:14.25, but it was in vain.

Jerome Drayton, a veteran distance runner from Toronto, who holds the Canadian marathon record, was third in 2:15.53.

The first four finishers bettered the winning time of Jon Anderson of Eugene, Ore., last year. Anderson won in 2:16.03, but did not return to defend his title.

Finland's Vilho Paajanen found the early pace too much and settled for fifth in 2:16.15. Bernard Allen, a British student at the University of Maryland, and Cusack broke from the huge pack at the noon start with Rosa, Fleming and others in hot pursuit.

Former UMass cross-country stars Ronald Wayne and Tom Derederian both put in yeoman performances.

Wayne, now a member of the Oregon track Club, finished 8th with a time of 2:16.58.

Derderian, a resident of Amherst finished in thirtieth place with a time of 2:25.23.

Women's winner

BOSTON (AP) — The first woman to cross the finish line in Monday's Boston Marathon was Michiko Gorman of the Los Angeles Athletic Club, a Japanese American whose time set a course record.

Mrs. Gorman crossed the finish line in two hours, 47 minutes and 11 seconds, a record for women entrants in the Boston marathon.

Mrs. Gorman's husband Michael told newsmen that she had worked out for the race very hard, "getting up at 5 or 5:30 every morning."

He called his wife's performance "unbelievable, fantastic."

Top 14 finishers

BOSTON (AP) — The top 14 finishers in the 78th Boston A.A. Marathon Monday:

Gorillas execute UConn, 16-3

By BEN CASWELL

Despite the very early and relatively uncomfortable bus ride to Storrs and also the weather and field conditions which are nothing enjoyable, Garber's Gorillas still managed to play some good execution lacrosse both offensively and defensively and came up with an impressive 16-3 pasting of the University of Connecticut.

Intermittent drizzle marked the warm-ups and the first quarter and this made the field quite slick but that did not keep UMass from running the ball well throughout the game. The Gorillas got on the scoreboard first and fast on an unassisted goal by attackman Harry McVey. He came around the net from the left and beat his defenseman with a good fake and shot. McVey then assisted on the next socre as he fed cutting midfielder Hirsch Seidman out in front who quickly put it pas the UConn goaltender. The first quarter scoring was then finished up by McVey again as he made a pretty over-the-shoulder backhand shot after a feed from Jeff Spooner.

In the second quarter the rain stopped but UMass did not. Attackman Andy Scheffer made it 4-0 again with an assist going to McVey. Then UConn finally got on the ledger with an unassisted goal on a very impressive rush and finish by one of their defensemen. Jeff Spooner than got his first of five goals for the day on a quick and pretty feed from Peter Connolly. The first half scoring was rounded out by Hirsch Seidman with his second of three goals on a good high hard shot which beat the UConn goalie over his left shoulder. The assist went to Spooner.

Penalties in the first half were somewhat lopsided with Connecticut getting one call and Umass having seven whistled on them. Even though the penalties went as they did UConn seemed to be playing a much more physical game than the Gorillas and that was because they just could not keep us with some of the execution finesse that UMass was exhibiting. A big factor in the execution part of the Gorillas' game was the fine passing by goalie John "O.J." Rutledge. He had only seven shots on him in the first half, six of which he saved, but his pinpoint passing to breaking midfielders downfield really got the UMass attack off and running which is what they need to do to score.

The second half was all UMass as they scored 10 times while UConn hit twice (both of which were relatively of the cheap variety). Hirsch Seidman picked up his third "hat trick" goal early as he took it in alone and beat the goalie with a very hard, well placed shot. Jeff Spooner then scored up high on a feed from McVey and Jack Moran and Peter Connolly quickly followed with some nice out front passing with Moran putting it in. Connolly then finished the scoring for the third quarter with this first goal of the season as he tipped in an errant Connecticut pass.

As the fourth quarter started so again did the rain and for the rest of the game it came down quite hard. Again this did not deter the Gorillas one bit as they continued to pound the UConn netminder. McVey got the UMass 11th and 12 goals on good hustle plays which were the result of bad passes by the UConn defense. Of the remaining four scores, three were by freshman attacker Jeff Spooner (who had five goals and two assists on the day). One of them was an unassisted play while of the other two, one was assisted by Andy Scheffer, and the other by George "Bee" Peraino who also scored his first of the season on an assist from defenseman Rich Lally. Next game — tomorrow, versus Harvard University, game time, 3:00 p.m.

Netmen nip Bowdoin, 5-4

By GLENN POSTER

At one PM last Friday afternoon, the UMass tennis team had a match scheduled against Bowdoin. It started on time. At six-thirty play was concluded with the Minutemen capturing their second straight victory, 5-4. It was truly a hard earned win, as the final score went right down to the wire.

An indication of what was in store for the team was the fact that of the six singles matches, four went the full three sets. Chris Post, seeded sixth, took three hours to win in singles, 6-4, 3-6, 6-1. On one rally in that match, Post and his opponent hit 118 balls. (Even the raisin man would have lost count). Believe it or not though, 118 was verified by a few people who witnessed the marathon set.

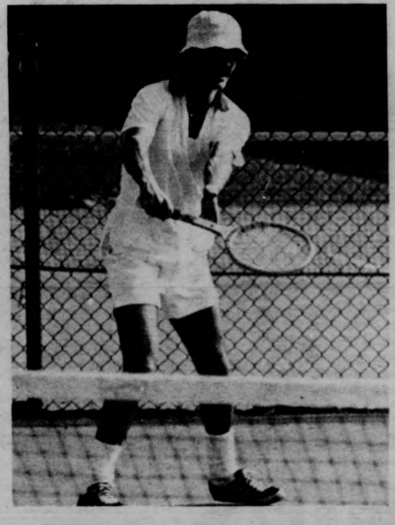
Don Douglas, seeded second, won in straight sets and Mark Brass, playing in the number three slot, won in three. Bob Schpeiser, Barnaby Kalan, and Fred Braley lost in their singles competition. So after the singles play had ended, the match was dead even, 3-3.

The number one doubles team of Schpeiser and Douglas went to three sets before coming out on top. However, the number two tandem of Brass and Kalan lost in three. The whole days' action was now in the hands (or rackets) of the number three duo, Captain Fred Braley and Dave Abramhoff. They lost their first set. They won the second. In the third and deciding set they fell behind, but rallied to win."

The entire squad of each team watched the final forty-five minutes of that doubles match with the outcome still in doubt. According to Coach Steve Kosakowski, "The team played close to its potential. It was a helluva match as they were facing a damn good team."

The University of Vermont came to town on Saturday despite prior warning that they shouldn't bother because of rain. Coach Kosakowski stated, "Their coach wanted to come because they have one helluva team with good balance. And their team will be back for the next three years." Needless to say a half-hour after play began, the match was called off.

LOVE LOBS — The Minutemen now stand at 2-1 on the season following the triumph over Bowdoin. They will be seeking their first road victory when they take on the State University of New York at Albany this afternoon. It will be a busy week as the team will be at home tomorrow to host New Hampshire. On Thursday they travel to Cambridge to take on the geniuses of MIT and to Springfield on Friday to battle American International.



CHRIS POST stands ready to receive one of 118 balls during one rally in Saturday's match. His singles event took three hours.

On the inside:

- •Crewmen win twice
- •Golfers dump Yale
- •Lacrosse team 9th in national poll
- •Tigers tame Sox 1-0

End of an era

While the Bruins were strangling the Leafs' playoff hopes in Toronto last night, in the first step towards the Stanley Cup, a far more important event was occuring that same afternoon at Madison Square Garden in New York.

For those of you that missed weekend action in the Stanley Cup Playoffs, the Montreal Canadiens and New York Rangers are tied at two games each in their series. The advantage rests with Montreal since they have the game in hand, but the series really is irrelevant to the Canadiens' situation.

To put it simply, the "dynasty" is finished.

The Canadiens are not like the team of old. In Sunday's game in New York they blew a three to one, second period lead. That's alright for inexperienced teams like the Atlanta Flames but uncharacteristic of the type of hockey we've learned to expect from the Canadiens.

Team captain Henri Richard may have been exaggerating things when he said that the Canadiens are "no better than an expansion team," after a humiliating defeat suffered at the hands of the New York Rangers. But the Canadiens don't have it any more.

The Canadiens farm system, once powerful enough to stock an expansion team and make the playoffs in its first season, has been depleted beyond recognition. Tony Featherstone, Bob Murray, Michel Deguise, Germain Gagnon, Dave Gardner and a flock of other good players are gone. When Sam Pollock calls up Al McNeil in Halifax to find out about the stars on the Nova Scotia Voyageurs, he can't even get a line.

There's nobody who can be counted on down on the farm.

The Canadiens finished second this year because the Rangers choked at key moments and the Leafs just weren't consistent enough. With Ken Dryden gone, and the Mahovlich brothers rumored to be leaving in a package to the WHA Toronto Toros, things have never been bleaker for the Montrealers. The team in general is getting older with no sign of new blood in the farm system, and because draftable amateurs will be spread around among 18 teams starting next season, they won't pick up enough good players to regain the niche of superiority they once owned.

Scotty Bowman will undoubtedly be gone come next year, as the club's management finds that it must satisfy its critics in the French press in Montreal. They'll find out that neither a Frenchman, nor an Englishman or anybody can perform miracles with the team. They'll just have to face facts. Every team faces a lean period every few years, and after so many Stanley Cups, so many first-place finishes, and so few years out of the playoffs, the Canadiens' time for lean years has come.

And to be quite honest, I'm happy about it.

Jaworski subpoenas 63 more Nixon tapes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Special Prosecutor Leon Jaworski asked federal court yesterday to issue a suboena for tape recordings of 63 presidential conversations, saying the White House has ignored his repeated requests.

He told the court the tapes and written material about the conversations are needed in the coming Watergate cover-up trial.

Jaworski filed a motion with U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica saying he has received no definitive response to his requests and "I . . . feel obligated to seek these materials by suboena."

At Key Biscayne, Fla., a White House spokesman said there would be no comment until the legal paper had been reviewed.

Many, but not all, the conversations already have been subpoenaed by the House Judiciary Committee for its impeachment inquiry. That subpoena is returnable on April 25. The White House said it will let the committee know what it will supply soon after Congress' Easter recess ends on April 22.

Jaworski asked that the subpoena cover conversations on 27 specific days, beginning June 20, 1972-three days after the Watergate break-in-through June 4, 1973, a day when President Nixon listened to some key tapes.

Most of the conversations were face-to-face or by telephone either with H.R. Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman, Nixon's principal assistants and two of the seven men charged with conspiring to obstruct justice in the Watergate cover-up. Some also were with Charles W. Colson, another top White House aide who is among those indicted.

The trial of the three men, and co-defendants John N. Mitchell, Gordon Strachan, Kenneth W. Parkinson and Robert C. Mardian, is scheduled Sept. 9 before Sirica.

"Information now available to the government indicates that each of these materials contains or is likely to contain evidence that will be relevant and material to the trial of this case," Jaworski's motion said.

Jaworski said he asked the President's Watergate lawyer, James D. St. Clair, for the tapes and related documents on Jan. 9 and March 12.

Democrat victor in Michigan

By CARL P. LEUBSDORF
AP Political Writer

SAGINAW, Mich. (AP) — Riding tide of urban support, Bob Traxler captured Michigan's special congressional election Tuesday night, defeating a Republican for whom President Nixon campaigned.

Traxler's victory, the fourth by a Democrat this year in five elections for previously Republican seats, ended a 42-year GOP hold on Michigan's 8th District and cost Republicans their second district in the state this year.

A heavy majority for the 42-year-old Traxler in his Bay City home and a smaller margin in the city of Saginaw enabled him to withstand a surge for Republican James Sparling Jr. in the Saginaw suburbs and the district's rural areas.

"From all indications," Sparling told applauding supporters, "Mr. Traxler has won."

With 255 of the district's 296 preceincts counted, Traxler had 50,895 votes and Sparling had 43,824.

In earlier special elections this year, three of four traditionally Republican districts went Democratic. Surveys in those areas showed public opposition to Nixon's handling of the Watergate scandal and other problems contributing strongly to the GOP setbacks.

The White House hoped a Republican triumph after Nixon's campaign trip here would demonstrate renewed presidential popularity and ease impeachment pressure in the House.

A state representative who called the election a "referendum on Nixon's policies and moral leadership," Traxler scored heavily in his home of Bay City, while Sparling led in normally Republican rural areas.

But the 45-year-old Sparling's margin in the Thumb, the region of small towns and farms where Nixon campaigned for him last Wednesday, ran behind that polled in 1972 by former GOP Rep. James Harvey, whose resignation forced the year's fifth special House election.

In the earlier contests, Democrats won longtime GOP seats in Pennsylvania, Ohio and MIchigan, the latter the Grand Rapids seat held for 25 years by Vice President Gerald R. Ford. The GOP victory was in California.

1500 UMies, Bromery wake up 'in the dark'

By LARRY CARPMAN
MDC Staff

Nearly 1500 UMass students along with Chancellor Bromery woke up to darkness yesterday morning after a main electrical line failed at 1:24 a.m.

"We simply lost one leg (line)," said Herb Moulton, electrical foreman for the Physical plant. "It's a mystery why it happened," he said, "but it could have been caused by the lightning storm we had on Sunday night."

The blackout affected the four-dorm Orchard Hill area plus Brett House, the Infirmary and Chancellor Bromery's home.

"The Infirmary was our prime concern," said Moulton. "We switched it over to another line at 2:20 a.m." he said.

Power was restored to the remaining affected area at approximately 10:00 a.m. after a "process of elimination" found the damaged line at 7:45 a.m.

"The line is now only temporarily fixed," said Moulton who was awakened at 1:30 a.m. at his home in Ware when the Physical Plant learned of the power failure.

Edward Dziuba, Head of Work Control at the Physical Plant, said the line involved is an old line "probably dating back to 1950."

In the Orchard Hill dorms the power failure caused loss of water pressure while the Infirmary also lost its phone service which is interlinked with the power supply.

"We didn't get any calls about people trapped in elevators," Moulton said. "I guess we were just lucky it happened so late at night when people were sleeping."

Many students on the Hill reported being late for their morning classes because of powerless alarm clocks.

Also, Chancellor Bromery said in a telephone interview he and his family ate breakfast at a nearby restaurant because of the power failure.

Black Affairs post created

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

In a virtually unanimous vote the Collegian staff last night approved the creation of a new editorial post for Black affairs. The legality of the decision, however, may be challenged.

The 50 to 4 vote on the new post followed over two weeks of discussion between Collegian editors and members of the Black community.

In a surprisingly short, early evening meeting, the staff passed one amendment ordering the creation of the new post and two others changing the command structure of the newspaper. There was little debate on the issues. Most discussion was limited to explanations of and questions about the three amendments.

The new post, Black affairs editor, will be filled by next week according to Karen Lynch, editor of the Collegian. Lynch said last night she will soon be receiving the names of Black students interested in the position from CORP, a Black student organization, and will appoint one to the position.

The challenge to the vote is being planned by William Ballou, former Collegian news and sports editor and present issue editor. Ballou said he is for the new post in principle but claimed that the number of staffers voting Tuesday night did not constitute a quorum, or 50 per cent of the staff, as required by the Collegian constitution.

Ballou also pointed to changes made in the amendment during its processing in two earlier stages. He added that he considers the amendments too important to be challenged at a later date by discontented staff members.

Ballou's charges were denied by Dean Tucker, executive editor of the Collegian, who said "The voting body, as the constitution allows, declared that there was a quorum present." Tucker said there were "at least" 50 Collegian staffers present, and added there is no official staff listing.

Among the reasons given at the meeting for the creation of the post were the lack of Black input into the Collegian, the inherent discrimination present in an all white organization and the need for Black mass communication and journalism majors to learn the technical skills involved in newspapering. There was no negative debate.

The three amendments passed created the post of Black Affairs Editor, changed the number of editors needed to approve a motion by the newspaper's Editorial Board and changed the Collegian command structure.

The latter two amendments made the new editor a member of the newspaper's Editorial Board, a governing and decision making group composed of all full editors; made the photo, sports, fine arts, and Black affairs editors responsible to the news editor and changed the number of editors needed to approve a motion by the Board of Editors from six to seven. As of last night's action there are nine members on the Collegian Editorial Board.

Society, technology, and controls

By WILLIAM F. O'BRIEN
MDC Staff

How society controls technology and how it should, was the question speakers addressed at the third symposium on Technological Threats and Promises at Amherst College yesterday.

Joe West, the executive director of Western Electric said "The university and the corporation have strong interdependence on each other".....“The university in the form of money and jobs and the corporations in the need for research and knowledge."

West considers himself "a champion of technology" and says "nuclear power is our only answer to economic energy."

He stated some of the advances of technology that have helped in many areas from agriculture, to medicine, to computer circuiting. West said that "before pesticides, malaria was a killer disease, now it is just a nuisance."

Although he is in favor of technology he admitted that there are many ways in which it can be misused. He said "Technology in itself doesn't have ethics of good or bad, its man himself who this burden falls on"..."Technology can be as good or as bad and have as many variations in between as there are people."

West pointed out that "Technologists are products of their own environment" .."what makes them tick and decide their limits is a combination of their background and their own goals."

He also spent some time in discussing the role government and people play in determining the use or misuse of technology. West said "To the extent that technology is employed by the government in many organizations, it is up to the voter to decide which officials should be elected to decide on the proper use of technology."

In summerizing, West said there are four main points to consider when deciding how society uses technology. "One, technology has been most powerful and successful in fullfilling the goals established for it, two, irregardless of the cost of it, the contributions we have gained from it, by far outweigh the cost. Three, in spite of the massive positive contributions we have received, we are now becoming aware of some of its negative effects. This must be realized as a problem and dealt with immediately. Four, the technition is influenced by other people and will be a product of his environment. We must further realize that there is no technology that can't be used or misused."

NORMAN BRINBAUM (left) and JOE WEST (center) speak at the technology symposium at Amherst College yesterday. An unidentified spectator leans over to speak to West.

In conclusion...West said, "We must have an informed and enlightened public".."This is an area where the university has some of the responsibility"..."technology is only another form of knowledge."

The next speaker Norm Brinbaum said "what we really lack in talking about technology is an educated public."

Brinbaum, a professor of sociology at Amherst College went on to say, "There have been two main schools in the criticism of technology the liberal school and the socialist."

He compared the liberal school to Galileo looking back on his inventions. Who said "Knowledge should bring about new human expansion and not exploitation."

In taking issue with the "counterculture Solution" as Brinbaum calls it, "the problems of technology can't be solved by the distruction of it".."this is regressive and can't solve anything."

The Amherst professor, in reply to Mr. West of Western Electric said, "Most scientists are employees of large corporations and are discouraged from being very autonomous ..."They are generally influenced by a command hierarchy".

"There are no free markets today. Brinbaum said, "they are controlled by the large corporations."

When considering the reformist argument that "Regulatory agencies should have their power increased in order to keep tighter control over the technological corporations". Brinbaum said, "Its been our experience that they (regulatory agencies) tend to become integrated in the corporations and end up giving lawyers more work and don't solve very much" .."Increasing regulatory agency powers would also, only tax the now overburdened American political system."

"In discussing the revolutionary view point" Brinbaum said "the revolutionary students of the sixties are a good example".."The students of the sixties have been absolved into the labor force by now and have not had any effect on corporations as of yet"..."at least, not compared to the effect they had in the sixties as students."

"At least", said Norm Brinbaum, "the rise of consumerism has brought about a new concept of public interest."

Dave Inglis, Professor of Physics from UMass, said "My view points are not much different from that of Mr. West's concerning the environment".."no matter how much we criticize, we must all agree, we enjoy our standard of living.

Black singer's life theme of 'Lady Day'

By LAVINIA BROOKFIELD
Black News Service

Of all the recent "fanfare", the sudden popularity and publicity about Billie Holiday's life, there is perhaps one controversial play that presented a truer picture. It is entitled, "Lady Day: A Musical Tradgedy".

The New Africa House Choir will present a concertized version of the play "Lady Day: A Musical Tradgedy", under the direction of Dr. Horace Boyer and Paul Carter Harrison. This version of the play depicting Billie Holiday's life will be presented on Friday April 19, at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom of UMass. Admission will be free.

"Lady Day" was originally presented in 1972 at the Chelsea Theater in Brooklyn, New York. Written by Aishah Rahman, present director of culture affairs at New Africa House, the concertized version will consist of songs and some excerpts of drama illustrating the songs. Therefore the entire play will not be presented. According to Sis. Rahman, Paul Harrison, who also directed the original play, will be using the talents of several students to portray Billie Holiday.

There are factors about the content of "Lady Day" that sets it apart from other accounts of her life presented in the past. First, as stated by Aishah Rahman, "Most people came to the play thinking they were going to see an imitation of Billie Holiday. A somebody who tried to sound like Billie Holiday, or a somebody who tried to look like Billie Holiday, or a somebody who sang Billie Holiday songs. We stayed away from that because we were not trying to evoke the past. A lot of people were astounded because they thought they were going to take a trip back into the thirties, forties, and fifties".

The music of "Lady Day" is unique for a number of reasons. When musician-composer Archie Schepp was asked to help with the music, he immediately consented and also brought in such musical greats as Cal Massey, and Stanley Carol who has just formed Strata East. Sis. Rahman considers that the play was great for its music because of the people working with her. With the exceptions of two standard songs used as background, all songs are original compositions. Aishah Rahman wrote most of the lyrics for the songs. Prof. Archie Schepp, a composer in his own right, also added some songs to the score. Contained within the musical score are the last two songs written by the late musical giant, Cal Massey; "Looking For Someone To Love" and "What Would I Be Without You?"

Because its authoress and musical composers deliberately avoided imitation and nostalgia, the message and reality of "Lady Day" are its most significant aspects. This is what led to the controversy about the original presentation. When asked if she felt she had captured the real essence of Billie Holiday's life, Sis. Rahman replied, "I feel that I have captured the essence of her life. I did three months research on this play. I spoke to people who knew her, the old showmen, Honi Cole the manager of the Apollo, and the old musicians in the band who worked with her. They told me that I had captured the essence of her life, and these are the people I went to for criticism".

With regard to the controversy over the play among critics Sis. Rahman further commented, "It was the only thing in all current fanfare about Lady Day, I feel my play was the only one that really captured the true essence of her life and of course the white critics were enraged. It told the true story of Lady Day. They were angry. I had kept all the critics and what they said. You must realize that when you expose the hypocracy, they can't look at it".

One critic was remembered as saying, "That's not the Billie Holiday I knew." According to Aishah Rahman the critics came to see a tragic black lady singing these sentimental songs. She emphasized the fact that Billie Holiday was "just like you or me, or like any other black artist out here trying to make it, and capitalism killed her. I gave them the real life story and they were enraged. The play was very controversial and people either loved it or they hated it."

The play, however, is not only controversial because of its content, but also because of its style and its esthetic. Sis. Rahman tried to write a musical in the Black tradition where the music would be an organic part of the part. It is not the old Broadway formula where music is used to underline drama.

Friday's Performance will include portions of the play and thirteen selections by the New Africa House Choir accompanying several lead vocalists. Mrs. Althea Waites will sing lead vocals for seven songs. Other choir members singing leads will be Beareathe Reddy, Johnetta Bagby, Jeff Bates and Walter Howard.

Gay ruling due in NH

By TOM LARNER
The New Hampshire

DURHAM, N.H. — A New Hampshire judge last week agreed to rule on whether homosexuality is a mental disorder.

The ruling by Stratford County Superior Court judge Charles J. Flynn could become the basis for a UNH limit on the activities of the Gay Students Organization (GSO).

The decision, if it happens, would conflict with an earlier decision in the U.S. Federal District Court in Concord, N.H.

The judge's decision to rule was contained in an order handed down recently which denied a declaratory judgement on the rights of homosexuals sought by the UNH trustees and by the GSO.

The decision by judge Flynn to rule is a defeat for the GSO, in the view of the Director of the New Hampshire Civil Liberties Union.

"I'm not sure this is an important issue," said David Hamlin, civil liberties director, "the mentally ill don't lose first amendment rights."

SVS lecture focuses on alcoholism

By ALISON SIMCOX

Alcoholism and its effects was the topic of the second lecture given by Student Volunteer Services. Two films, "America on the Rocks" and "The Secret Love of Sandra Blain" were shown followed by a panel discussion. Janice Goldman from UMass Student Volunteer Services headed the panel consisting of Dr. Chittum, UMass infirmary, Ted Smith, a 26 year old former alcoholic, Sandra Baker, AA, and Harry Bjorglund, Rutland Hospital employee.

It was perhaps significant that only a handful of people attended. That alcohol is a real and possibly growing problem at UMass as well as other colleges and universities across the country was substantiated by all on the panel. Lack of publicity was not ruled out as the reason for such low attendance.

The two films dealt directly with alcoholism as a sickness, to be recognized and cared for as any other disease. Both emphasized an immediate need to reduce its social acceptability by viewing alcohol as a potentially dangerous drug instead of merely as an intoxicant. As with any other disease prevention and educating the public to recognize early signs are the best methods of attack.

America on the Rocks cited some of the few known statistics known to date about the use of alcohol in this country. 70 per cent of adults are estimated to be regular drinkers, 9 million of these are alcoholics. This figure is somewhat arbitrary due to a large number of self-deceiving alcoholics. By self-deceiving is meant those remaining unaware of their habit as a real problem. A woman in such a state was the subject of the second film. One drinker in ten potentially will develop a problem requiring attention. It is an illness clouded in masks, covered with a mantel of respectability. Overt, "Skid row" alcoholics only represent 5 per cent of the total. Uncovering the hidden 95 per cent of the iceberg is what each film sought as the neccessary start to a confrontation with the number one killer in America today.

The panel spent much time analyzing what constitutes alcoholism. An ensuing debate helped to show with what variety of perspectives the problem could be confronted. At present an effort is being made to secure a grant from the NIAAA for the institution of an education program on the UMass campus for both students and faculty.

School of Ed. opens week featuring "alternatives"

By DAVID HANRAHAN
MDC Special

Five years ago the terms "open education", "integrated day" and "values clarification" were unfamiliar terms to the average person. Today, at the Spring Marathon sponsored by the School of Education, these concepts were taken for granted by most Marathon participants.

In the past the main focus of educational symposiums seemed to be an effort to sell ideas and concepts designed to "humanize" our educational systems; todays programs were attended by people who had "bought" these concepts and who were now interested in finding ways to practically implement these ideas into their classrooms.

One theme which consistently ran throughout the presentations was a desire, on the part of many participants, to develop more effective strategies for dealing with educational problems which were "affective" in nature. Sid Simon, the author of Wadjaget, a book which takes a negative view towards current grading techniques practiced in our schools, presented his ideas in two seminars.

His first presentation was an attempt to explode the myths current in our society about the necessity of grades. Mr. Simon cited studies conducted in the early 1900's in which different teachers, selected randomly from various schools around the country, were asked to evaluate identical English papers.

The researchers discovered that these different teachers were not at all in agreement as to what constituted a "good" paper. In fact there was a wide enough disparity in the teacher's evaluations to lead the researchers to conclude that "grading" was based more on the personal idiosyncracies of the teachers than on the actual performance of the students.

Simon's second presentation, entitled "A Look At Values Clarification" dealt with giving people an insight into their own feelings through a series of exercises designed to "put them in touch" with themselves and others. This experience proved to be a valuable one to those who attended.

Phonothon hits $26,252; $35,000 goal within reach

In seven nights of phoning, students have raised $26,252 from alumni. With six more sessions of phoning, the $35,000 goal set for the month-long Phonothon should be attained. Over 250 students have participated in the Phonothon to date.

In the team competition, McNamara in Sylvan is on top with a figure of $6,710. Cashin and Brown are in second and third places respectively. Crabtree at $2,327 is only $100 away from third place, and Chadbourne is fifth with $1,915.

In the individual competition, Todd Manent of Cashin is in the top spot with $1,650, ahead of many dorms. Barbara Wright of Brown is holding down second with nearly $1,000.

The Phonothon will continue through Monday and Tuesday. It will also be held on the last two Sundays of the month at 12:30 p.m. All events are in Memorial Hall.

Bus service meeting

The Commuter Assembly will be holding an open meeting for all commuters to have their say. On April 17, from 12 noon to 2 p.m., we will have facilities set up in the commuter lounge with available petitions to sign, to determine how priorities should be set for next year. We need numbers! We need signatures! And above all we need you!

This meeting will also avail the opportunity for you to make your gripes publicly known.

Perhaps you have suggestions on how to improve our lounge facilities; or maybe you've been thinking about worthwhile community projects you'd like to see implemented. This is your chance to voice your bitch or lend your support.

Bring your lunch. Bring your friends. Bring your ideas.

Technology and controls

"However, I do take issue with the way Mr. West bypassed over the major threats of over technologicalization." Inglis said, "I consider those the population explosion and the possibility of nuclear war"..."although verticle escilation of nuclear arms seems to have stablized, horizontal escalation is growing at a rapid rate".

Inglis said, "the more countries with nuclear capabilities"..."the greater the chance of a nuclear war."

Inglis said "Nuclear power is not the only means of economic energy".."the public has put so much money into nuclear power research, that it is almost impossible to experiment with solar power, which could possibly be a feasable economic solution for cheap power."

"Another problem in slowing down technology" Inglis said, "is that scientists in industry don't take a broad view of their work and have more to say than people who are not in the industry"...

One example of how this happens is the defense department of the United States. Inglis said "scientists outside the establishment have been trying to get arms control as a matter of foreign policy for years, but we have been outshouted by the department of defense."

Irwin Welber, the last speaker, and a member of the Bell System made the remark, "I think we've learned by now that nature is the best guide of itself."

Calley sentence cut in half

WASHINGTON (AP)-Secretary of the Army Howard Callaway yesterday suspended half of Lt. William Calley's 20-year prison sentence for murdering at least 22 Vietnamese civilians in the My Lai massacre.

The action will make Calley eligible for parole within six months because he has been in confinement for more than three years, almost one third of his remaining sentence of 10 years, an Army spokesman said.

The Army said that Callaway acted because "sufficient mitigating circumstances exist to warrant clemency."

In a statement, Callaway said: "There are mitigating circumstances indicating that Lt. Calley may have sincerely believed that he was acting in accordance with the orders he had received and that he was not aware of his responsibility to refuse such an illegal order."

The Army secretary also said that Calley "is but one of many who were involved in this affair."

An Army spokesman said the case went to the White House Monday. President Nixon has said he will personally review Calley's case and make a final decision.

Callaway said, "there is no reasonable doubt in my mind that he perpetrated the acts for which he stands convicted."

These acts of murder and assault against unarmed civilians "cannot be condoned or forgotten" Callaway said.

Technically, Callaway upheld Calley's 20-year sentence, but remitted 10 years of it.

The Army secretary said his clemency action "must serve the requirements of justice, meet the legitimate needs for sanction against such conduct by individual soldiers and, without violating society's higher needs, accord Lt. Calley an opportunity to return to society as a productive member."

A spokesman said that Calley's dismissal from the service which also was part of the sentence, "will be accomplished as soon as practicable."

Calley has been free on $1,000 bond since late February after nearly three years under house arrest at Ft. Benning following his court-martial conviction on March 29, 1971, of premeditated murder.

Calley originally was sentenced to life in prison at hard labor, but the commander of the U.S. 3rd Army reduced that sentence to 20 years on Aug. 20, 1971.

Heavy fighting continues on Golan Heights front

By The Associated Press

Artillery fire raged along the entire Syrian-Israeli front yesterday for the 36th straight day and Israel said one Israeli soldier was killed and two were wounded.

Reports from Damascus said the Syrians have set up a forward command headquarters on a section of Mt. Hermon in their control. Observers said this could mean new attempts to recapture the peak.

Associated Press newsman Hal McClure reported from Mt. Hermon that Israeli reinforcements encountered Syrian cannon fire as they made their way up the slopes of the strategic mountain at the northern end of the Israeli-Syrian ceasefire line.

On a clear day, the peak commands a view of the entire 300-square-mile bulge captured by Israel during the October war, and of the Syrian capital of Damascus 23 miles away.

Israel says that Syrian forces have tried three times to storm one of the Israeli posts. Sunday saw the heaviest fighting on the Golan Heights since the autumn war.

Syrian President Hafez Assad returned to Damascus yesterday from a five-day visit to Moscow where he signed long-term agreements for economic, technical and cultural cooperation. But reports said he had also received a promise of arms and equipment.

Newspapers in Beirut, Lebanon, said the Soviet Union has already supplied Syria with MIG23 jet fighters and pledged early deliveries of MIG25s and ground-to-ground missiles.

He was named to replace David Elazar, who resigned after being formally blamed for Israel's unreadiness for the October war.

U.S. and the world

Students celebrate Niger military coup

LAGOS, Nigeria (AP — Students were reported celebrating in the streets of Niamey, capital city of drought-parched Niger where a military coup replaced the civilian government. The Niamey airport remained closed yesterday, one day after the coup, and communication with the outside world was limited to official radio broadcasts from Niamey and sources outside the country.

Reports from Dakar, Senegal, said students had taken to the streets to demonstrate support for the new government, and Niamey broadcasts said "the present expressions of joy are legitimate, but it is important that they should be held in calm and dignity to show our maturity."

There were conflicting reports of the fate of ousted President Namani Diori and his family.

Diplomatic sources in Paris said Diori's wife was killed resisting arrest by soldiers. The sources said Diori himself and Boubou Hama, president of the National Assembly, were under house arrest.

But radio broadcasts from the Niger capital monitored here made no mention of the whereabouts or condition of Diori, who ruled the former French colony state from independence in 1960 until he was toppled Monday morning.

Jaworski subpoenas

On April 11, Jaworski informed St. Clair he would seek a subpoena in five days "to secure a prompt and fair trial for the government and the defendants."

He noted St. Clair had told him the prosecutor's office would receive all material turned over to the impeachment inquiry but "I have emphasized repeatedly that our request is in no way tied to the requests of the House Judiciary Committee. The requests are distinguishable both factually and legally."

The subpoena would be the fourth issued against the President in the Watergate affair.

Jaworski's predecessor, Archbald Cox, went to Sirica last year and eventually obtained a subpoena for nine tape recordings.

FBI names alleged SLA mastermind

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Donald D. DeFreeze, the alleged mastermind of the terrorist Symbionese Liberation Army, was named by the FBI yesterday as the mystery man who led heiress Patricia Hearst and three other women in a violent bank robbery.

Policy said the previously unidentified man shot and wounded two passers-by as he fled the bank with his band of female followers.

A federal arrest warrant said DeFreeze, an escaped convict who took the name "Cinque" after an African chief, was being sought for federal bank robbery. Bail was set at $500,000.

Thomas Padden, a special FBI agent, signed an affidavit stating that he and an unnamed associate of DeFreeze had identified the escapee from a photograph taken by a bank security camera.

A police investigator said yesterday the robbery may have been staged to show off Miss Hearst as a "converted" member of the SLA.

"We are discussing the possibility very thoroughly that this was a staged job to show off Patty Hearst as a member of their ranks, " said Police Capt. Mortimer McInerney.

A federal warrant issued Monday night identified Miss Hearst, 20, as a carbine-carrying member of a heavily armed gang that robbed $10,960 from the Hibernia Bank's Sunset District branch Monday and shot two passers-by.

The warrant seeks her arrest as a material witness and set $500,000 bail. Warrants on robbery charges were issued for three other women who burst into the bank. Police said the robbery involved about nine persons in all, including others in a getaway car.

Reached yesterday in La Paz, Mexico, Miss Hearst's mother, Catherine, said: "It's all so bizarre I can't believe it." The Hearsts were scheduled to return to their home in Hillsborough later from a 10-day rest in La Paz.

"We are not ruling out the possibility that she Miss Hearst was a willing participant," said Charles Bates, FBI special agent in charge here. "On the other hand, there is evidence she was not."

Bates said an automatic camera in the bank which pictured Miss Hearst holding a sawed-off semiautomatic carbine also showed that "there was a gun held by another person on her."

U.S. Attorney James L. Browning agreed, adding that he thinks this is "the first time in the annals of legal history that a kidnap victim has shown up in the middle of a bank robbery."

Cambodian troops cut off by rebels

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — An estimated 3,500 Cambodian troops were reported either stranded or cut off from Phnom Penh by rebel Khmer Rouge forces yesterday along the Tonle Sap River northwest of this capital.

A government naval convoy sent up the river with supplies came under attack from the banks at several places. One vessel was sunk and another was damaged while unloading supplies. In South Vietnam, the Saigon military command reported a six-hour battle in the central highlands south of Pleiku with a casualty toll of about 250 dead or wounded.

About 2,000 Cambodian government troops and 24 armored vehicles were stranded at Kompong Luong about 20 miles northwest of Phnom Penh and under daily artillery bombardment, according to field dispatches. They had been sent up the river in an attempt to retake the 17th century royal capital of Oudong, which fell to the Khmer Rouge last month.

But military sources said that objective had been abandoned and that the Cambodian high command now is concerned with saving the relief force.

Oil companies telling truth on supplies, Simon says

WASHINGTON (AP) — The major oil companies apparently are telling the truth about their supplies, based on audits by the Federal Energy Office, energy chief William E. Simon says.

Simon said that the ongoing energy office audits of refineries have turned up no evidence that oil companies are lying about their inventories.

In an interview, the energy chief said that the government has made giant strides in convincing the American people that the fuel shortage is real. "We're still going through the scapegoat phase in this country," he said.

But Simon added that congressional hearings and government investigations eventually will remove much of the emotion from the debate and Americans will realize the energy crisis is real.

Simon, who is expected to be named treasury secretary later this week, said that first-quarter profits of the oil companies as well as second-quarter profits will be embarrassing to the oil firms.

He also said that with the end of the Arab oil embargo, conservation efforts by Americans are continuing. "I am optimistic that demand will not explode," he said.

Simon declined to discuss specific questions about economic policy, but he did say that wage-price controls have introduced distortions and inequities in the nation's economy. But he said he wouldn't rule out the possibility that one day they might be reimposed.

He said he subscribed to President Nixon's statement that the American people are taxed enough, but he said the tax system is in constant need of study to make sure it is equitable.

The price of gasoline will rise only a few cents a gallon on the average nationally, but there will be significant regional price increases in areas or by oil companies that depend heavily on imported oil, he said.

That is true even if it is assumed that imports will peak at about 7½ million barrels a day this summer, he said.

Court rules civil servants can be fired for criticism

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government has a right to dismiss Civil Service employes whose public comments impair the efficiency of the agencies they work for, the Supreme Court held yesterday.

The 6-3 decision upheld the language of the Lloyd-LaFollette Act which permits dismissal "for such cause as will promote the efficiency of the service."

The court said its decision would not prevent speech that was constitutionally protected. Instead, Justice William H. Rehnquist wrote, the act prohibits "only that public speech which improperly damages and impairs the reputation and efficiency of the employing agency, and it thus imposes no greater control on the behavior of federal employes than are necessary for the protection of the government as an employer."

The act's language was attacked by dissenting justices as overly broad, thus having a "chilling effect" on the exercise of free speech.

The majority "offers no guidance...as to what conduct is or is not punishable. The court's answer is no answer at all," said Justice Thurgood Marshall, joined by Justices William O. Douglas and William J. Brennan Jr.

Marshall predicted that uncertainty as to the scope of the law would indeed have a chilling effect. "For every employe who risks his job by testing the limits of the statute, many more will choose the cautious path and not speak at all," he said.

In another segment of the decision, the court held 5-4 that employes are not entitled to a trial-type hearing before dismissal. The present requirement for such a hearing after dismissal is sufficient, the court said.

Clyde M. Webber, president of the American Federation of Government Employes, said the decision did not "serve the dictates of equity for federal workers."

Webber said he had hoped that the court would demand a pre-dismissal hearing as established already under the policies of nine federal agencies. Various agencies had no comment on the decision.

Some 90 per cent of federal employes are under Civil Service. Their numbers reach into policy-making areas of government.

Yesterday's decision was prempted by a suit launched by Wayne Kennedy, who was fired from his Office of Economic Opportunity job in Chicago.

Kennedy was dismissed after accusing two other employes of offering an OEO grant as a bribe in return for a statement from a community action program official against Kennedy and another employe.

Joining Rehnquist in finding that constitutional requirements were met by a post-dismissal hearing were Justices Harry A. Blackmun, Potter Stewart, Lewis F. Powell Jr. and Chief Justice Warren E. Burger. On the free speech question, Justice Byron R. White joined the majority as the sixth member.

Mitchell testifies

NEW YORK (AP) — Former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell testified yesterday that he pigeonholed a memorandum by financier Robert L. Vesco which was intended for the White House. He called the memo "a crude attempt to use muscle."

"Did you consider this an effort to obstruct justice?" Mitchell was asked.

"No, I did not," he replied.

"You had been the top law enforcement officer in the country."

"Yes," he agreed.

"But you didn't think it was relevant to let Mr. Casey know what was going on here?" asked Asst. U.S. Atty. John Wing, referring to William Casey, the Securities and Exchange Commission chairman at the time.

Mitchell testified: "I came to the conclusion it was a very crude attempt by Mr. Vesco, if he was the author of it, a crude attempt to use muscle in this SEC matter...

"The contents of this memorandum made no impression on me except that I was incensed that Vesco would try to use such crude pressure on this administration."

Louvre bans Picasso

PARIS (AP) — The Louvre has indefinitely postponed an exhibit of paintings from Pablo Picasso's private collection and art experts say the reason is that several works may be fakes and others only of minor interest.

"The Louvre is terribly embarrassed," Raymond Cogniat, a critic and former French high commissioner for fine arts, said in an interview.

A spokesman for the Louvre called the questions about authenticity and quality "gratuitous" and said the exhibit was put off because of legal problems with the inheritance.

According to Cogniat, however, the museum's claim is an excuse. The real reason, he says, is the Louvre's traditional policy not to permit exhibits of doubtful or mediocre works, even if they reflect the taste of an acknowledged master.

House OK's budget

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts House gave initial approval to the state's $2.74 billion budget last night after making only minor changes in the version reported by the Ways and Means Committee.

Approval came on a 187-20 roll call.

Several members said they would offer further amendments at the next stage of the debate beginning today.

The changes adopted yesterday deleted $645,063 from the Department of Youth Services and the Youth Services Board. A $1.66 million item dropped at the printers was restored.

Youth Services head says death not agency's fault

BOSTON (AP) — The State Department of Youth Services said yesterday that deaths of youngsters assigned to the agency's care "should not be exploited as an avenue of public debate over departmental philosophy."

The Associated Press reported this weekend that a upcoming report of the legislature's Post Audit Committee will focus in part on the deaths of some 30 youngsters who had been assigned to DYS care.

DYS Commissioner Joseph M. Leavey said in a statement Tuesday that the department provided the House Ways and Means Committee "a complete explanation of these deaths" last November.

"Recently, however, some people have found it in their own interests to raise this issue again," the statement said.

Only one of the youths, Leavey said, was in a Youth Services facility at the time of death. He had been stricken with pulmonary edema and died before he could receive medical attention, according to the statement.

"Twenty-six of the children were on parole status at the time of their deaths," the statement said. "One was a court referral under the legal supervision of a probation officer; five were on the run from placements, and one was on inactive parole status.

"Seventeen of the deaths involved automobiles-either where the youth was a passenger, driver or pedestrian. Three died of drug overdoses, and one more was a questionable overdose.

"Two were killed in police shootings; three were murdered; five committed suicide, and two died in accidental deaths. Two of these youths died while in the physical custody of the police."

Leavey's statement said the deaths "were all tragic because they involved young people, all of whom never really had a chance in life.

Court rules against planned binding busing referendum

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Supreme Court ruled yesterday that a proposed binding referendum on busing to achieve racial balance in Boston schools would be unconstitutional.

The state legislature had passed a bill providing for the referendum.

Gov. Francis W. Sargent asked for a ruling from the court before acting on the bill.

In its 11-page opinion, the court said the bill "suffers from the same constitutional infirmities" as legislation submitted to the court less than a year ago.

The bill, the court said, would prohibit school assignment, as opposed to transportation, of students without parental consent.

Additionally, the court said, the bill would effectively block enforcement of the state's 1965 Racial Imbalance Law.

"By prohibiting the assignment, reassignment or transfer of a student in the Boston public schools on the basis of race, sex or creed without the consent of his parent or legal guardian, the bill would forbid school authorities from using one of the important measures necessary to achieve a racially balanced system," the court said in its opinion signed by all seven justices.

DPU raises rates

BOSTON (AP) — The state Department of Public Utilities yesterday awarded the Boston Edison Co. a rate increase of some $13.5 million.

The company had sought increases totaling some $36.1 million.

According to the DPU, the utility's rate increase petition was in two parts.

Some $18.9 million was requested to make up for lost earnings due to energy conservation.

"The department rejected the conservation adjustment at this time due to the very limited data available...," the DPU said in a statement.

Some $17.2 million of the total request represented an updating of the department's decision in the last Boston Edison case in 1973, the statement said.

The DPU said it made a number of adjustments to the updating portion of the utility's case which reduced the total award to the $13.5 million figure.

The department also said it has ordered the company to file a report on any proposed changes in its future construction plans as a result of decreased energy sales.

Belloti drops out

BOSTON (AP) — Former Lt. Gov. Francis X. Bellotti said Tuesday he made a difficult personal decision to give up his private law practice to seek the Democratic nomination for state attorney general.

In a statement prepared for release yesterday, Bellotti said "this is a time for committment...The things we have always accepted as truths, the institutions upon which we relied are crumbling, including the presidency of the United States."

Bellotti said major issues facing the attorney general's office are registration of firearms, mandatory prison sentences for persons convicted of illegal possession of firearms, more rigid regulation of utility firms, consumer protection housing for the elderly, increased salaries and manpower for police departments and establishment of a department of women's rights.

Brown in deficit

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Brown University expects a deficit of more than $1.5 million in its operating budget for 1974-75, nearly half of it the result of increased energy costs.

Ronald Welk, vice president for university relations and development, said Monday the deficit will be eliminated by reserve funds that are invested now.

About $715,000 of the projected deficit "is directly due to supplementary energy costs," Welk said. The remainder stems from increases in nearly all other operating costs, he added.

Kennedy told to work

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — State Atty. Gen. A.F. Summer has told Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., in a letter that the senator should work to insure busing of school children to integrate schools in Boston.

"Busing in Boston is not different from busing in Jackson, and we are busing in Jackson," Summer wrote. "No inequities should exist in the geographical application of a rule of law."

Summer said he hoped Kennedy would "stand as four square in Boston as you did in Jackson...and declare that the same remedy be applied in your home state as you did in ours."

Spiritual growth important

To The Editor:

A spiritual search is often neglected or impatiently kicked aside in these days of general frustration, so that the real value is seldom openly realized. I would like to offer some thoughts on the true value of a spiritual search.

The pain caused by a superficial way of life hurts so much that it's easy to reject everything in protest — to destroy beautiful things in order to ease the pain inside. But the real protest is much different. The real revolution replaces ugliness with tremendous beauty, puts depth in place of shallowness, and love in place of hate. The real protest to a purely external, superficial environment is to create an intensely internal and spiritual value in its midst — to overcome the wrong and heal it. If your body is sick do you stab it in the heart or do you have compassion with it and concentrate all your effort on restoring its health? Many people know our way of life is sick, but how many know how to heal it?

That little pure child that would have been in us all: seeking fulfillment and happiness and love; how it was abused and stunted early in its growth by a materialistic environment full of conflict and struggle and isolation. How could that original "I, be freed to develop and fulfill itself? Only an internal awareness and spiritual growth could shake the bonds of material restriction. So the real evolution is within: the challenge of looking deep into the depths of the human soul and awakening the unlimited potential of inspiration and creativity. But we are blind and only see what we've experienced from a very externally-oriented, limited world. We need a good spiritual guide to guide our growth into realms of unlimited fulfillment and happiness. And then, the highest teachers will help us to learn the freedom of optimism, hope, and complete love: up through Christ to God at the source. Then these hollow shells of ourselves and others and the environment will be filled with new life and precious value. And next to such tremendous value, the ugly and hateful and restricted will rapidly wither away — that's the real revolution.

So the challenge is the spiritual search for truth. Our times offer as a wealth of spiritual teachings that none of our ancestors had. We can gain life of higher value. We can lose nothing.

Defense and detente

By RAYMOND TIE

Well, they are at it again sports fans. Russia v. America, the professional wrestling match of the century. Sometimes I wonder if there ever was any antagonism between the United States and the Soviet Union. If so, I have never seen a concrete example of it. Instead, lurking in the back of my mind has been the idea that each has been a benefactor for the other in times of economic or political distress.

And the game is on again, Secretary of Defense James Schlesinger has announced that Nixon's preposterous defense budget is necessary because the Russian research and development people are at it again, building more and better nuclear warheads, including MIRV's, modifying ICBM silos (the size of which was frozen in SALT talks) to accomodate a new launching system which emphasizes a sort of toaster technique for exposing missiles for launch, and which allows the installation of MIRV heads on existent missles, testing new missiles, and so on. It follows, says Schlesinger, that the United States must invest more time and resource into maintaining a balance of nuclear weapons.

This typical political oratory forgets to mention that United States superiorty is readily apparent or that we already employ most of the products and techniques supposedly being instituted by our friends in the Motherland. Neither does it mention the fact that even if all this about a Russian build-up is true, it will be many years before those plans can be instituted, and even then, it will only give them parity with United States capabilities.

But most important, it does not even hint at the most serious of problems; that the United States has major economic problems because it relies on a wartime economy with no war to sustain it.

Japan has survived the oil embargo test and is gaining confidence again in its maturing productive capabilities. The European Economic Community is willing to give up United States military support (via NATO) for economic independence, so assured are they of the non-existence of a possible Russian invasion.

As the ability to produce increasingly becomes the main ingredient in International power, America's dominant position is threatened. Why? Because these nations learned to apply, by necessity, American Techno-Industrial genius to the makings of a peace time economy. However, the United States has been at war since nineteen sixteen. The birth of technology in this country occured for all practical purposes at a time of war, and its growth was severely directed by war time thinking. Thus, industry is geared towards the fulfillment of government wartime needs. And, vice-versa, because the government is so reliant on industry, it cannot reverse the trend.

To this day, it hasn't changed. Nixon and Schlesinger and Johnson and Kennedy and McNamara have all fostered and pushed and sweated and cried for ways to make the economy react to the government. The sad fact is, no war, no growth.

The war in Vietnam is over, publicly anyway. American isolationists are being heard from again. The economy is badly in need of help, especially in the field of unemployment. Nixon's answer is guns — not butter. And so goes whatever hope there was for pollution problems, education, the eradication of poverty, public transit, OEO, better housing, veteran's benefits, better race relations, research into certain mental diseases, adequate health care, tax reform, control of industry, consumer protection, halting spiraling prices, crime control, gun legislation, and most of all, all hope for government by and for the people.

Campus minority-the handicapped

To The Editor:

A small group of students has recently realized the need to speak for a silent campus minority-the handicapped. For the most part, the UMass community appears unaware of the needs of these people. General complaints surround the campus: lack of ramps, building inaccessibility, vehicles that block ramps and pathways, lack of recreational facilities, inflexible parking assignments, and lack of driver courtesy. Consideration should be extended to the handicapped, and appropriate funds should be established to improve facilities. The Handicapped Student Affairs Office is located in 229D Whitmore. Why don't you stop by and find out what you can do to make life on campus a little easier for these people?

Scapegoat for Seascape roles

To The Editor:

The need for a scapegoat seems basic to the structure of Western drama. Yet I find it regretable that Marya Bednerick, a professor in the theatre department, was singled out by Judy Singer in a letter to the Collegian for the role of scapegoat. Ms. Singer accuses Ms. Bednerick of having precast a show for which she tried out. As another unsuccessful auditioner, I understand Ms. Singer's disappointment. But I find the conclusions she comes to contrary to the truth as I know it. From conversations with Ms. Bederick before the auditions, I know she had no idea of whom she would case for the roles in Seascape She held open auditions and posted the fact. After the auditions, she conferred with directors casting the other shows to be done in the studio this season. Even at that point she was not adamant about casting the students who were finally chosen to do the roles in Seascape.

The theatre department is not without its sins, but I refuse to stand by while they are loaded on Ms. Bedferick. I wish instead that there were more teachers like her.

Support for 5¢ Collegian

To The Editor:

I am writing in support of the Collegian policy of charging 5c a paper to all non-undergraduates. Earlier this year, the undergraduate Senate Treasurer Paul J. Hamel asked the graduate Senate for funding for a number of organizations. All of these groups are payed for by the undergraduates but are utilized by all members of the University Community. The Transit Service was granted $15,000.00 by the graduate Senate, which is a laudable start. However, a number of other organizations did not receive funding. Most noteable were the Collegian *($4.81 *a graduate student requested), WMUA ($2.82 *a graduate student requested), and the International Programs Office ($.37 a graduate student requested).

..As concerns the Collegian, however, I feel that it would be far more equitable for all non undergraduate groups (including the graduate Senate) to fund the Collegian. The Collegian is unable to enforce, as Ms. Mulcahy so forcefully pointed out, their policy of charging 5c a paper, just as WMUA is unable to restrict those who listen to it to undergraduates.

I agree with Ms. Mulcahy in her letter of April 5, that the "fact that the daily was chartered as an 'undergraduate newspaper' does not mean that it should not be available to graduate students on the same basis as undergraduates." However, it appears from the rest of the letter that Ms. Mulcahy does not realize that the 18,000 undergraduates fund the Collegian every year through the undergraduate Student Senate. Therefore, I find [illegible] believe that the graduate students are a segment of the [illegible] that is discriminated against. In fact, if [illegible] segment of this Community it is the undergra[illegible] have borne alone the costs of the Senate Service, [illegible] legian, [illegible] International Programs Office, and many other groups which [illegible] to utilization by more than one segment of the [illegible].

I also agree with Ms. Mulcahy that "the primary purposes of a college daily like the Collegian are to provide students an opportunity to learn to be journalists, and the campus community an information service-not to make money." How this information service should be financed is apparently where we differ. While not connected with the Collegian, I realize that a community information source of the size and scope of the Collegian is not printed for free. Therefore, I would conclude that one must have either money or no paper. While the New York Times may be considerably more professional, I have not noted a considerable amount of U. Mass campus news in the Times lately. The Collegian, as a Campus Community information service, provides a service that no other daily can provide, whether it is professional or not. Undergraduates already pay for the service through the Student Senate at over $85,000.00 this year. That is why I must strongly support the Editors of the Collegian in their effort to insure that the undergraduates of the Campus Community are not discriminated against in paying for a service that all receive but that all have not payed for in the past, and I urge all non undergraduate groups to provide funding for the Collegian.

Health Board meets today

To The Editor:

The most important meeting of the Student Health Advisory Board will be this afternoon at 4 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union. Today's issue is wether or not to approve the Greater Amherst Area Health Plan (GAAHP) which is a comprehensive prepaid health care program. Approval of this plan could mean that students and their families will pay as much as $465.00 per year for health care.

We urge you to attend this afternoon's meeting, voice your opinions and approve or disapprove of the proposal. Only through consumer participation in the planning of health programs can accessible quality health care be achieved.

Law and order

When four Kent State College students were gunned down while protesting the United States attack (or incursion) on Cambodia, Spiro Agnew rose to the occasion by explaining that civil disobedience of that sort begets violent reaction.

Law and order.

While John Mitchell was tapping wires to discover who was subversive he told the nation that the country was going so far right we wouldn't recognize it.

Law and order.

Frank J. Rizzo, Mayor of Philadelphia campaigned for that office using the issue of clearing the city's streets of violent crime as a central plank in his political platform. Rizzo, ex-Philly Police Chief was heavily supported by Richard Nixon during their concurrent campaigns. Both won handily.

Law and order.

Richard "I quieted the campuses" Nixon himself has never been one not to use the statistics of lowering rates in the rise of crime to let us all know that he is doing his job as promised.

The National Guardsmen who shot at the Kent State students are presently under indictment for violating the marchers civil rights. Agnew, who explained their actions with a less than brilliant sociological analysis is himself a convicted felon ... a crook. He has assumed his new role in society by keeping company with such notables as Frank Sinatra, a man who has added new dimensions to rudeness in America.

Law and order.

John Mitchell is now standing trial for several counts of felonious handling of funds used to re-elect the President, his supposed friend Robert Vesco will not come to the continent for trial. The two are beginning to quibble as their effort to stay out of the slammer becomes more Darwinistic every day. Mitchell was right when he said this country was going so far right ... right to hell in terms of equal treatment under the Constitution.

Law and order.

Frank Rizzo has recently been accused of impeding investigations into alleged corrupt practices in the Philadelphia Police Department. More recently a study conducted by the Census Bureau of the Law Enforcement Administration showed that Philadelphia was third in the nation in violent crime (rape, robbery and attempted robbery, assault, household larceny, and auto theft on individuals). Furthermore the study indicated that the ratio of crime committed in Philly compared to the amount reported by the Philadelphia Police Department is 5.1 to 1., a much higher figure than any of the other cities included in the survey. (Detroit, New York, Newark, and L.A. among them.)

Rizzo has been accused of manipulating these figures to lend credence to his mayorality. Notable law enforcement officials such as former New York City Police Commissioner Patrick V. Murphy have indicated that Rizzo indeed may be part of a coverup, and that his promise to clean up the city's streets has been largely unkept.

Law and order.

Without delving into the Watergate can of fishworms, Richard Nixon has indeed not decreased the number of violent crimes committed on American streets. He has with massive expenditure cut down the rate at which the amount of violent crime has risen.

Virtually every top advisor of his, from Vice President down, has been charged with, or convicted of a felony. He claims he didn't know about any of it. Men fifty feet away at times committing crimes that insult the ideal of American politics. He didn't know.

Law and order.

Law and order is not an unreasonable demand for American citizens to make ... it should indeed be a part of life as the Declaration of Independence called for. But it is not.

The cry for law and order will be heard again made by politicians looking for votes. It should be heeded, but when it comes time to ballot it wouldn't hurt to recall the downfall of four law and order pimps of the last decade. You don't send little boys to do the job of men.

For workers

Work is a central part of the lives of most adults in America today. We use work as one of the primary sources of definition; we have become teachers, lawyers, painters and so on instead of Jane Smith, and John Doe. Yet many people find their occupations both unrewarding and uninspiring.

There are two basic reasons why people work and two sources of rewards. One is extrinsic; the rewards include salaries and fringe benefits. The other is intrinsic; these rewards include a feeling of self satisfaction and a contact with so called reality. Very poor workers usually concern themselves with the extrinsic rewards of work; they are interested in money for food, shelter and clothing. Most workers, however, are no longer afraid of economic deprevation. They earn enough to be able to afford a certain amount of luxuries. In part because of the increased power of unions and the increased interest of the Federal government in working conditions plans like Social Security, workman's compensation and unemployment insurance have been developed. These have drawn people's attention away from their salaries and towards the values of their work.

Without getting into the question of capitialism and its role in unemployment and underemployment it is useful to see what has happened in the American labor market over the last few years. A short time ago we had the case of the United Auto Workers bargaining for better working conditions and more control over the process of production. In the past, most unions had only worried about wages and fringe benefits. Assembly line workers have found their routine operations boring. Putting the same bolt in the same place on every car that goes by all day for forty years can make one realize that mangement expects you to work as a machine not as a human being. This job disatisfaction is not just limited to auto workers, most assembly line workers suffer from it. And now even white collar workers, pencil pushers, are beginning to question their work. They have no real control over their employment.

Some interesting solutions have been suggested for the problems of bored and disinterested workers. SAAB for instance now has a program where their cars are made by teams of workers instead of on the assembly line. As their ad says "bored workers don't make good cars". Other solutions to boredom have included job expansion, transfers, promotions and raises. But these deal only with the results of the problem not with the source, the lack of involvement of employees in the decisions that are made. Further the feeling that anything they produce above a certain level will go into the stockholders pocket and not theirs.

What I would suggest instead is more workers involvement in the means of production. Certainly most of the people who work on the assembly line would like to know why they do things a particular way and might have suggestions on how to improve the production process. At one job I had, an employee suggested a better method of production that resulted in a ten percent decrease in the amount of time necessary to make one unit. Yet even if employees are allowed to work with managers to decide how the firm should operate they must be given a greater share of the profits that are made.

There are a few arguments against profit sharing. One contends that workers especially blue collar workers are not intelligent enough to understand how profit sharing works. The only reason for the lack of understanding of profit sharing on the part of workers is because managers don't bother to explain it. To solve the employment problem in the United States we need more cooperation between the employers and employees; we might find that after that happens production will increase and the social and economic differences between the groups will be lessened.

Viet spending:
still too high

Though the cease-fire is a year old and a "just and honorable peace" has been declared the United States is still deeply involved in Vietnam.

In the past year there have been over 58,000 people reported killed on both sides. The battles have been fierce and show signs of escalation rather than peace.

Still the United States continues to support the corrupt Thieu Regime. According to U.S. News and World Reports American dollars are still pouring into Vietnam supporting the 1.1 million man army with "aid and technical support". American goods continue to flood the Saigon market place. Currently the U.S. is giving 2.3 billion dollars annually.

The largest U.S. embassy in the world, with a budget of almost $10 million, is in Saigon. And $461.4 million in U.S. tax money is being used for military assistance.

How long will America continue this foreign aid?

The Administration shows no signs of letting up. On the contrary, a $360 million dollar increase was called for the coming year. And in the event of a major North Vietnamese offensive Secretary of Defense James R. Schlesinger has said it is "highly likely" that the Administration will request air support for South Vietnam.

While South Vietnam has become dependent on American aid they have at the same time failed to set up democratic rule and have shown us little besides corruption and political shame.

Vietnam is not a thing of the past. Although the protests, the headlines and even the men who fought there have been erased from the American mind, U.S. guns are still fired and men are still missing or unaccounted for.

The problem and the tragedy are still with us and will remain that way until the United States cuts down on military aid to these countries. Money should instead be directed toward the rebuilding of the devestated villages and towns and educating the people who have suffered the most in the twenty long years of war.

Conn. House repeals eyewitness for rape

HARTFORD (AP) — The Connecticut House voted yesterday to repeal the requirement that an eyewitness back up the story of a rape victim to convict a suspect.

By a 133-1 vote the House sent the bill to the Senate for its consideration. State Rep. Eugene Migliaro, R-Wolcott, cast the dissenting vote.

"I think you're putting the man at the short end of the stick," he said. "A woman could put any man in jail" by accusing him of rape, he argued.

Under existing law, no man can be convicted of rape solely on the woman's testimony.

Streaking nixed in NH

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — Streaking at state colleges will not be tolerated, says Gov. Meldrim Thomson.

"Running naked through public buildings and on the streets is an affront to most of our citizens," the governor said Thursday in a news release. "It is an exercise in depravity.

"If tolerated it can only lead to the eventual loss of whatever sense of morality still exists in America."

Thomson said he holds officials of the state university system "strictly accountable for all unlawful acts committed by their students.

"I do not believe that the vast majority of the taxpayers of this state want even one cent of their money spent on educational institutions that permit erotic exhibitions such as streaking."

Thomson previously threatened to curtail state funds to the university system because it gave official recognition to a homosexual students organization.

Springfield area unemployment up

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Unemployment in the Greater Springfield area showed a slight increase during February, according to the state Division of Employment Security.

The DES reported Monday that the jobless rate in the Springfield-Holyoke-Chicopee area stood at 7.8 per cent in February, an increase from 7.7 per cent in January, but below the 7.9 per cent statewide figure.

HOW DO YOU THINK MOST PEOPLE YOUR AGE DIE?

It's not drugs.
It's not suicide.
And it's not cancer.

It's automobile crashes.

More American people between the ages of 15 and 25 die in automobile crashes than in any other way.

At least half of those deaths are alcohol related. And the drunk drivers who cause most of them are under 25. Sometimes, many times, they kill themselves.

One of the most dangerous things you can do is get drunk and drive home.

You can change it. You have to.

You march against the war. You fight for clean air and clean water. You eat natural foods. You practice yoga. You are so much for life. And you are so much against killing.

It would be unthinkable for you to wittingly kill another human being.

So then, why is this happening?

State House attracts demonstrations

BOSTON (AP) — The City of Boston is no longer the Hub of the Universe, but the State House on Beacon Hill, has become the magnet for huge crowds of people with a gripe against government.

Partly because the Capitol building is in the heart of the state's largest city; partly because the famous Boston Common with its wide open spaces is across the street, and partly because the local people have a heritage of complaining about politics, the Massachusetts State House has in the past several years become a landmark for huge demonstrations.

Paul L. Doherty, chief of the 94-man Capitol Police Force, is now a national expert on the phenomenon, which got its start with massive anti-war demonstrations on the Common during the sixties.

"It's a fact of life, and it's really picked up in the past five years," Doherty said. "There isn't a week when we don't have some group — big or small — up here demonstrating for something or other."

But it's the big ones Doherty, and everyone else, remembers.

Last week some 20,000 people marched on the State House to protest the state's Racial Imbalance Law which requires school integration based on ratios of white to non-white pupils.

But the size of that demonstration was not unusual.

In 1970, nearly twice as many people -- mostly college students — congregate on the State House lawn and the Common to protest the Kent State University shootings.

The crowd was near riot pitch when Gov. Francis W. Sargent bowed to its demand that he lower the American flag at the Capitol Building in memory of the dead students.

Sargent took considerable political flak for that action, but Doherty now says his men on the scene believed there would have been bloodshed if the governor had not given in to the crowd.

Two years later, a demonstration of construction workers matched the students in numbers as they protested the governor's alleged failure to push through a massive downtown urban renewal project called Park Plaza.

Tenant groups, pro and anti-abortion factions, social workers and welfare mothers, firefighters seeking special legislation and police demanding a return of the death penalty: They all make regular appearances at the State House in numbers ranging from the hundreds to the thousands.

Doherty, a former Woburn, Mass., policeman who has spent 25 years at the Capitol, doesn't like to speculate on why it happens. But he says he can talk "for hours" on how he handles the crowds.

Often, he meets with the leaders of the big demonstrations in advance. Doherty explains his groundrules: no loudspeakers on State House property, no banners or placards inside the buildings, no blocking of building doors.

"You always know about the big crowds in advance," he says. "It's the groups of 75 to 100 who for some reason have a penchant for demonstrating on Friday that can give us the most trouble because they're not as well organized.

"The weather often plays a role. If it's nice, everyone's happier.

"You learn something from every demonstration," Doherty says.

Nixon mistreats panel

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon is treating the House Judiciary Committee the same way he has dealt with the courts and the special Watergate prosecutor.

Nevertheless, he may be forced to revise his strategy toward it.

That became apparent last week when James D. St. Clair, Nixon's Watergate lawyer, responded to the committee's request for tapes of 42 presidential conversations.

When the President decided to cut off special prosecutor Leon Jaworski from access to White House files, St. Clair had no need to be concerned about losing Jaworski's good will. When the White House complied with the subpoena Jaworski issued last month, that ended the matter.

But the good will of the members of Congress, and especially the Republicans, can be crucial to the President in his battle against impeachment.

Some Republicans were rankled by the tone in part of St. Clair's letter in which he said the President hadn't finished reviewing the materials to determine what he felt the committee needed to complete its work.

Rep. Edward Hutchinson of Michigan, ranking Republican on the Judiciary Committee, a man whose support the President may find essential, said of St. Clair's April 9 letter to the panel:

"I think it was offensive to the House, I'm sorry to say." A soft-spoken lawyer from a rural district in Michigan, Hutchinson still voted against issuing a subpoena to get the materials the committee had hoped to obtain voluntarily.

But neither Hutchinson nor the two other Republicans who opposed the subpoina, Trent Lott of Mississippi and Charles E. Wiggins of California, said a word in support of the White House approach.

Hutchinson had described the White House strategy as "give as little as possible as slowly as possible" and then added that "it might settle down into a long summer and fall."

On Friday, influential Senate Republicans disclosed that they have intervened in an effort to soften the White House approach to the House committee.

Sen. Norris Cotton of New Hampshire said a group of senators met with presidential assistant Dean Burch and succeeded in changing an early and tougher draft of the April 9 St. Clair letter.

Abortion case indictment should settle legal issue

BOSTON (AP) — Medical authorities say a fundamental issue left unresolved by the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling on abortion may be decided following the indictment of a Boston physician in connection with a legal abortion.

Dr. Kenneth Edelin, chief resident in obstetrics and gynecology at Boston City Hospital, is charged with the death of a "baby boy" in the aftermath of an abortion performed at the hospital last October.

Hospital officials have suspended Edelin. Two other BCH physicians indicted on charges of illegal dissection of fetuses in a separate case have also been suspended.

Dr. Steven L. Saltzman, president of the Boston City Hospital House Officers Association, said Edelin was suspended without pay in an "ill-advised and inappropriate" move by officials.

"As far as we can ascertain, Dr. Edelin was performing his duties in accordance with accepted gynecological practices throughout Boston and the country, and within the recent U.S. Supreme Court guidelines," Saltzman said.

The district attorney's office has refused to disclose "the manner and means" of the death of the 24-week-old fetus. Asst. Dist. Atty. Newman A. Flanagan said an investigation began after his office learned no death certificate had been filed for the fetus.

William J. Curran, professor of legal medicine at Harvard, said the issue revolves around the question of when a fetus can sustain life outside the womb and what the physician's responsibility is to exert every effort to keep an aborted fetus alive.

The courts have generally placed viability of a fetus — the potential to sustain life outside the womb, even with artificial means — at the fifth or sixth month.

However, Curran said viability has never been determined "as a scientifically and philosophically accepted point of demarcation in fetal development.

"The court may have been out of date on its medical information," Curran said.

Neither the courts nor legislative bodies have addressed the question of a physician's legal responsibility toward a fetus whose life might be extended temporarily if not indefinitely, Curran said.

In the other case involving BCH doctors, Dr. Leon D. Sabath and Dr. Leonard Berman were charged with illegal disection of fetuses in connection with a research study to determine the effectiveness of certain drugs in treating unborn children.

'Nationalize' says Algerian leader

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) — Algerian President Houari Boumedienne declared last week that developing nations must nationalize their raw materials for their own economic survival. China backed him up, demanding a better economic deal for third world countries.

"Nationalization of raw materials has become a fundamental prerequisite of economic development," Boumedienne said in the opening speech of a two-week special General Assembly session on raw materials and development.

He called on the General Assembly to "condemn all those, be they governments or enterprises, who use force or economic power" to prevent nationalization.

Boumedienne, who requested the special session, got 40 seconds of applause at the end of his 1½-hour speech-most of the ovation coming from delegates from developing countries.

Chinese Deputy Premier Teng Hsiao-ping said the under-developed countries can begin to emerge from poverty "if they can take in their own hands the production, use, sale, storage and transport of raw materials and sell them at reasonable prices on the basis of equitable trade relations."

Referring to China as a fellow developing country, Teng praised the Arabs for using oil as a weapon to deal "a telling blow at Zionism and its supporters" and declared "what was done in the oil battle should and can be done in the case of other raw materials."

Teng, the highest Chinese official ever to visit North America, accused the United States and the Soviet Union of "vainly seeking world hegemony" and bullying countries that "have the desire of shaking off superpower enslavement."

He said the Americans and the Russians, while talking detente, are creating tension in the world and "the situation is one of 'great disorder under heaven,' as we Chinese put it."

Have gripe, will sue; does win

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — The Columbia Broadcasting System and two other defendants were ordered Monday to pay all profits from the "Have Gun, Will Travel" television series to a former rodeo rider who claimed he created the character of "Paladin."

U.S. Magistrate Jacob Hagopian issued the ruling in a federal court suit brought by Victor DeCosta of North Scituate, R.I., against the Columbia Broadcasting System Inc., CBS Films Inc. and Capital Cities Broadcasting Inc. Corp.

DeCosta, who retired from rodeos after he was thrown from a horse in 1953, now works as a heavy equipment mechanic for the state of Rhode Island.

DeCosta's attorney, Alan T. Dworkin, said the judgment would involve millions of dollars, but he would not elaborate.

Dworkin said, however, that the series had grossed $14 million by 1966.

Knight Edwards, an attorney representing CBS, said an appeal was planned.

DeCosta claimed he created Paladin in 1948 when he worked rodeos and horse shows dressed in a black cowboy outfit and black hat.

DeCosta said in his rodeo career, he had passed out a quarter million cards reading, "Have Gun Will Travel. Hire Paladin." The cards bore a symbol of a chess piece, a knight. The television series began in 1957.

Hagopian ruled CBS was guilty of infringing on Decosta's service mark, the calling card, and unfair competition. Hagopian said CBS is "required to hand over the proceeds of their wrong to the plaintiff by reason of their unjust enrichment."

Anti-bus call grows louder

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Thirteen states have passed resolutions urging Congress to call a constitutional convention to consider an antibusing amendment, an Associated Press survey shows. Similar measures are pending in four other states.

Two-thirds of the 50 states —34— are required to petition for a constitutional convention in order for one to be called.

The AP survey showed that Nebraska and Virginia have asked Congress to pass an anti-busing amendment, but did not call for a convention; a similar measure is pending in Ohio. The issue of a constitutional amendment to prohibit busing has not come up in the remaining 30 states.

The busing issue has spurred debates, protests, boycotts and court suits with proponents of busing arguing that it is necessary to end discrimination in schools. Opponents say they do not want their children bused out of their neighborhoods and contend that it is more important to improve the over-all quality of education.

President Nixon, in an address in March, urged Americans to support legislation that would curb what he called excessive busing. He said parents value neighborhood schools and are "naturally concerned when the courts, acting on the basis of complicated plans drawn up by far-away officials in Washington, D.C., order children bused out of their neighborhoods."

Two antibusing provisions were included in a school aid bill passed by the House on March 27. One provision restricts the power of the courts to order busing; the other would prohibit the use of federal funds for busing to overcome segregation. The bill is now pending in the Senate.

The 13 state legislatures that have passed resolutions, either this session or in previous years, calling for a constitutional convention are: Mississippi, Indiana, Tennessee, Delaware, Georgia, Nevada, Alabama, Texas, New York, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Kentucky and Michigan.

Resolutions on the subject are pending in Pennsylvania, California, Rhode Island and Massachusetts.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

forecast

Aquarians have an instinct for publicity, and Aries individuals have a natural understanding about what will intrigue, appeal, command attention. When I think of Aquarius I think often of Gertrude Stein and Evangeline Adams. As for Aries, there always will be a Harry Houdini, and the writings of Samuel Beckett can be said to provide similar "escape hatches." An understanding of the signs, the planets and symbols help us to better comprehend what people are doing and why they leave their marks. The Gemini of Marilyn Monroe and Judy Garland was obvious. The list of persons and signs can be extended and includes the Capricorn of a Henry Miller and the Pisces of an Anais Nin. And one day teachers of history will find it quite natural to point out that, of course, Napoleon was a Leo.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): What is illusion and what is real becomes defined. It is necessary now for you to face facts as they exist—or prepare to face the music. Key is to go beneath surface indications, to look behind the scenes. Aura of glamor exists—maintain personal mystique.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Accent is on what you wish and what you can do about it. First, assume responsibility for special endeavors, investments, professional and personal contacts. Older individual will lend helping hand—but you must make request.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Stress goal, achievement. Co-operate with one in authority. Show that you can react favorably under pressure. Aries, Libra persons could be in picture. Finish what you start. Have frank talk with individual who takes and seldom gives anything in return.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Good lunar aspect coincides now with journey, correspondence, education. Open lines of communication. Study Gemini message. Be willing to learn. Give full play to creativity. Don't feel that you must follow standard procedure. Innovations will succeed.

LEO (July 3-Aug. 22): Invest in your own future. Build for greater security. Make inquiries. Answers are available. Contract may be in picture. Any agreement should be legally scrutinized. Aquarian figures prominently. Take nothing for granted. Be aware of fine points.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Analyze agreements, contracts. Draw closer to partner or mate. Listen to voice of opposition. You can gain by becoming familiar with more than one point of view. Gemini and another Virgo figure in important ways.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Conserve strength. Keep diet, health promises to yourself and loved ones. Work, service, recreation—these areas are featured. Go slow enough to be thorough. Some persons now seem to want you to stick out your neck—at your own risk. Be mature enough to say thank you but no thank you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Favorable lunar aspect coincides now with special relationships, change, variety and travel. Obtain hint from Virgo message. Offspring command attention. If single, you could think you are falling madly in love.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Plainly, there is pressure where costs, security, home and family affairs are concerned. Some who ordinarily are gentle seem now to be temperamental, insistent, even rough. Build on solid base. Speak frankly. Make amends for recent slight to parent or other authority figure.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Relative could make demands which cause hard feelings. Perceive potential by looking ahead. Make intelligent concessions without abandoning principles. Aries, Libra individuals appear to be involved.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Money is emphasized. Values are discussed. There also is bargaining. Your position is stronger thank might be imagined. Know it and act with confidence. Capricorn, Cancer persons figure prominently. You are given more responsibility.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Cycle is high; take initiative Wear bright colors. Be conspicuous. Make new contacts. Start project. Highlight independence of thought, action. More persons become aware of you—and want to listen and learn.

Quinn says Sargent to blame for state "wallowing in economic stagnation"

CHELSEA (AP) — Massachusetts is "wallowing in economic stagnation" as a result of the failure of the administration of Gov. Francis W. Sargent to check an increasing unemployment rate, Atty. Gen. Robert Quinn said yesterday.

In an appearance before the Chelsea Rotary Club, Quinn said "the establishment of an efficient welfare management system could result in savings of millions of dollars to the taxpayer, and that money could be used to bankroll a program to attract new industry and jobs to Massachusetts, which would in turn relieve some of the need for welfare."

He said "increased state spending and the slipshod administration of state government" have produced an "alarming rate of unemployment and the steady erosion of manufacturing jobs and the intimidating tax picture."

"PLEASE HELP MAKE NEXT WEEK THE BIGGEST OF MY CAREER."
The brewers of Budweiser, in cooperation with ABC Radio, asked me to remind you that April 22-27 is National College "Pitch In!" Week.
All week, all over America, students like you will be filling up litter cans like me.
If there's an official "Pitch In!" Week program in your campus community, join up. If there isn't, you can still support the national effort. Just pick up any litter in your path next week and bring it to me.
Thanks, see you then.

The law and you

The full-page of material about the sealing of criminal records reproduced on this page was submitted by Attorney for Students Richard M. Howland in lieu of his regular weekly column, "the law and you".

Atty. Howland feels this material is the best available detailing the procedure for sealing criminal records, including which records may be sealed.

The Committee for a Sane Drug Policy was formed in December 1970 by a group of citizens who believe that the non-medical use of drugs is not behavior appropriate for the criminal law and that present drug policy may be contributing to the problem it seeks to control. The Committee is affiliated with the Washington D.C.-based National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML); both organizations work together to bring about reform in Massachusetts marijuana laws. Policy statements and membership information are available upon request at the above address.

Many people don't know that some Massachusetts criminal records can be sealed.

How to get your record sealed

This chart applies only to people charged under Massachusetts law. If you don't find yourself in one of the following categories, you have no sealing rights.

"Sealing" means changing your record so that you have no criminal record in the eyes of the public. Only the police and the courts have limited access to the information. Generally, you can have your record sealed only after all court proceedings have ended, all fines paid, and all jail terms or probation or parole periods are completed.

"Misdemeanor" means a crime for which the maximum sentence is 2½ years or less. Imprisonment in jail or house of correction.

"Felony" means a crime for which the maximum sentence is over 2½ years. Imprisonment in state prison.

References in parentheses are to Massachusetts statutes, which appear in two forms: codified laws, the General Laws, for which citations are to chapter and section, e.g., c.276 s.100A, and the session laws, for which citations are to chapter and the year of passage, e.g., c.1102 of '73.

With respect to most drug crimes, it can be important whether or not the complaint or indictment was initiated before, or on or after, July 1, 1972, because on that date the new drug law, G.L. c.94C, went into effect. Therefore, in this chart when that date is mentioned, the date of initiation is what is meant. Thus "Not convicted, before 1972" means "In a case initiated before 7/1/72, you were not convicted."

In this chart "probation only" is the same as saying "successful completion of probation."

*Types of action defined:

1 Call or write the Office of the Commissioner of Probation (OCP), Court House, Boston, Massachusetts, 02108 (617-727-5300) for a sealing form; fill it out; file it with OCP. You will be notified when your record has been sealed. Allow about one month.

2 Petition the original court of action. Advisable to consult a lawyer.

3 Petition the original court of action. No lawyer necessary.

If you have any questions which these charts do not answer, contact the OCP, or the Attorney for Students, 432 Student Union.

Chart prepared by the Committee for a Sane Drug Policy/NORML, with assistance from the staff of the Real Paper.

Notes, quotes and anecdotes

SW whist

The First Annual Southwest Kiddy Wist Invitational Tournament will be held tonight at 7 o'clock. The tournament, sponsored by the SW Social and Cultural Program Committee, will take place in the Hampden Student Center. The entrance fee is one dollar per team of two. There will be money prizes, with a $25 first prize. All students are welcome to join in the fun.

Sartre; Gorgon

"Sartre and the Gorgon: The Pursuit of a Symbol" will be discussed at 8 p.m. in Room 917 of C.C. tonight by Prof. Hazel Barnes.

Dr. Barnes, a classics professor at the University of Colorado at Boulder, is a visiting professor this year in the Yale University philosophy department. She has translated Sartre's "Existential Psychoanalysis," "Being and Nothingness," and "Search for a Method."

Among the several books she authored are "An Existentialist Ethics," and "The Literature of Possibility, A Study in Humanistic Existentialism." She has also appeared on "Self-Encounter," a ten-program series on existentialism, telecast on National Education Television. Tomorrow's lecture will be published with three other essays next fall under title "The Meddling Gods."

Russian film

News Release:

There will be a showing of a color documentary film, Russian, to be followed by discussion by the film's producer-director, Theodore Holcomb. This is the first and only uncensored film study of the Soviet Union, and is extraordinary in that Holcomb was allowed to spend eighteen months and to travel 17,000 miles in the country while making it. Subsequent efforts by officials to destroy the film were unsuccessful. It has run commercially to unusually favorable reviews, as have other documentaries by Holcomb.

The film will be shown tomorrow night at 8:00 p.m. in 231 Herter Hall, UMass.

Jazz workshop

A variety of American music will be featured in the UMass Jazz Workshop's Spring concert tonight at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. The concert is free and open to the public.

The Workshop's large ensemble will feature two new works, "Metamorphosis on a Scheme by J.S. Bach," by the ensemble's director Frederick Tillis, and "Dexterity" an arrangement of a composition by the great saxophonist Charlie Parker by assistant conductor Jake Epstein.

The large ensemble will also perform works by Oliver Nelson, Bill Russo and other great American composers.

Arrangements and compositions by students will be featured in the small ensemble portion of the program. This group, directed by Max Roach, is aimed at developing the improvisatory skills of its members.

In addition, a tribute to George Gershwin will be presented. Dorothy Ornest, a soprano, and Robert Stern, piano, both faculty of the University's Department of Music, will be featured.

Agape feast

Tonight at 6:00 p.m. at St. John's Episcopal Church in Northampton there will be an agape feast for the Christian students in the 5-college area. Agape is the Greek word for love in the sense of the unconditional love of God for man. The first agape feasts were held some 2000 years ago by the very first disciples of Jesus. "And day by day, continuing with one mind in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, they were taking their meals together with gladness and sincerity for heart, praising God and having favor with all the people." (Acts 2:46-47) St. John's Church is located on Smith campus. The agape feast is sponsored by the Christian Service Coalition and is open to all who are interested. Maranatha.

Fine for parking

CHICAGO (AP) — Residents fed up with illegal parking by students at the Chicago campus of the University of Illinois finally took matters into their own hands.

They hired a bricklayer and had a wall built around the auto of a repeated violator at a cost of $410 and said they were prepared to arrest him for trespassing if he tried to get the car out.

On Friday, a city tow truck pulled down the wall after the car was found to be stolen from a suburban car dealer. Police said license plates on the 1974 sports model checked out to a 1960 auto.

Nevertheless, residents thought they made their point to the students, who repeatedly on private property, including back yards, and in alleys blocking garages.

Roy Dorgan, a spokesman for a neighbors' group, said: "We picketed the school and couple of times this year, and we're always called the police."

He said the property owner where the car was parked had 60 illegally parked cars towed away in the last year.

Neighbors said the driver of the walled-in car was warned to move Thursday morning. After the warning, the student started to back the carout as the owner of the property left for an errand.

NEIL CUSACK of Limerick, Ireland and a student at East Tennessee State College crosses finish line Monday to win the Boston Athletic Association Marathon. Cusack covered the 26 miles 385 yards in 2 hours, 13 minutes, 39 seconds, the second fastest time in the marathon's 78 history.

Geraghty upsets Davis in UMass track sweep

By SCOTT HAYES

Consistent Mike Geraghty came up with two outstanding performances to take first in the long and triple jumps, and spark the UMass Track team to a tri-meet sweep, Saturday. The trackmen compiled 89 points while Springfield had 55 and Central Connecticut 45.

Geraghty defeated the New England long and triple jump champion, Abe Davis of Springfield. Davis, a "real good athlete," was expected to win the two jumping events, but Geraghty battled tough weather conditions and topped Davis in the champ's own backyard. In fact, Ken Adamson also survived the cold and rainy conditions to come out ahead of David in both events.

Geraghty, who has been jumping well all year, destroyed Springfield's big scoring threat and his superiority over the experienced Davis was the turning point of the meet.

The meet, which was held on Springfield's new Uni-Royal track, was close until the running events. Taking command of the running events and surprising everyone with great success in the jumping events, UMass broke the meet open.

Devin Croft and Jack Maloney took first and second in the mile to put UMass ahead to stay. Pete Famulari and Jim Hennessy pulled off another slight upset in the 120-yard high hurdles when they finished tied in 15.1, ahead of Skip McCray of Springfield.

Tommy Wilson and Paul Segersten corked the bottle when they beat Springfield's Charlie Duggan in the three-mile run. Duggan went right out from the start and set a fast pace. Wilson and "Segs" wisely stayed behind Duggan and drew even at the mile-and-a-half mark. After a 4:40 first mile, the pace began to slow considerably. A mile later, Wilson and Segersten made their move by running a half mile in 2:20. The pickup quickened the pace and forced Duggan to settle for third place.

Others capturing firsts and the events that they won include: John Osborne-high jump, Curt Stegerwald-440 intermediate hurdles and Jim Shea-javelin. Osborne led a 1-2-3 finish in the high jump, with Conrad Gees taking second and Ron Harris placing third.

The Blue Devils of Central Connecticut had only three individual winners, but managed to defeat UMass for the top spot in both relays.

PASSING THE BATON . . . Last week's scheduled home meet against Brown and Holy Cross was cancelled when the three schools failed to agree on a later date.

Abnormal weather conditions prevented the meet from being held last Wednesday. The new Grass-Tec track at Springfield was fast, but not up to standards because of the bad weather conditions.

CAPSULE REPORTS

Pirates-Cubs

CHICAGO (AP) — Frank Taveras drove in the tie-breaking run in the 12 inning and Manny Sanguillen knocked in two more runs, giving the Pittsburg Pirates an 8-5 victory over the Chicago Cubs yesterday.

Taveras drove in Willie Stargell with a single and Sanguillen followed with a double to left, bringing in Dave Parker and Taveras.

The Cubs tied it 5-5 in the sixth on a sacrifice fly by Dave Rosello with the bases loaded after Rich Hebner's home run in the third and his single in the fifth put the Pirates in front 5-4.

Mets-Expos

MONTREAL (AP) — Ron Fairly's single and a two-run error gave the Montreal Expos three runs in the eighth inning yesterday for a 4-1 victory over the New York Mets.

It was the fourth triumph in four games for the Expos and the first loss for the Mets' Tom Seaver, making his third appearance.

A first-inning home run by the Mets' Rusty Staub was matched in the seventh by Montreal's Bob Bailey, tying the game 1-1 before the eighth inning uprising.

Sox Yanked 2-1

NEW YORK (AP) — Graig Nettles continued his hot hitting with three singles Tuesday, scoring once and driving in the tie-breaking run the the fifth inning, lifting the New York Yankees to a 2-1 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

Nettles, who hit four home runs in a Sunday doubleheader, bounced a two-out single up the middle off Luis Tiant in the fifth inning that scored Bobby Murcer from second base. Murcer had singled and moved up on a pickoff throwing error by catcher Bob Montgomery.

Nettles opened the second with a single and scored with two out on Jim Mason's single, a hit batsman and Tiant's bases-loaded walk to Mike Hegan.

Mel Stottlemyre blanked the Red Sox until the top of the fifth, when they scored on singles by Cecil Cooper, Doug Griffin and Tommy Harper. Harper's hit dropped in short right field and Griffin, who went to third on the play, was thrown out at the plate by Nettles after a wild throw from second baseman Gene Michael.

UMass boxing club to hold May tourney

The UMass Boxing Club, which recently became a Recognized Student Organization, will hold a Novice Boxing Tournament on the evenings of Tuesday, May 7, and Thursday, May 9, open to all students.

The club meets every Thursday at 7:00 on the 19th floor of Washington tower. All are welcome to attend the meetings, at which beginner and advanced boxing lessons are available.

Anyone interested in joining the club or entering the tournament (no experience necessary) is encouraged to either attend the Thursday meetings or call the club officers Dana (549-0899) or Neil (549-1358) for further information.

Lamonica to join WFL Cal Sun after nest year

By JACK STEVENSON
AP SPORTS WRITER

ANAHEIM (AP) — Daryle Lamonica, who lost his starting job as an Oakland Raider quarterback to Ken Stabler last year, followed his replacement by jumping to the new World Football League Tuesday, signing a multi-year contract with the Southern California Sun.

The 33-year-old Lamonica must play out his option with the Raiders for the 1974 season before he can play for the Sun. Stabler, Oakland's starter last year after the Raiders went six seasons with Lamonica at the helm, signed with Birmingham of the new league a week ago, but won't be able to play for the WFL until 1976.

The 6-foot-3 Lamonica termed his demotion a year ago "political, for lack of a better word".

Former University of Southern California All-American linebacker Marlin McKeever, 34, also signed Tuesday, bringing to 25 the number of jumpers from the established National Football League to the new WFL.

Terms of the contracts were not announced but Lamonica's was reportedly just under $1 million.

The loss of Stabler and now Lamonica would leave Oakland with only old George Blanda at quarterback in 1976.

Gorillas to attack Harvard

By MIKE ELLIOTT

"The Ivies are always tough," said UMass lacrosse coach, Dick Garber. Past history shows this statement to be relatively true. Brown University has always been a tough team, but the Ivy League team of most concern now to Coach Garber and his team is Harvard. Garber's Gorillas will challenge Harvard today at 3 p.m. on the field behind Boyden.

The Gorillas thrashed the University of Connecticut, 16-3 on Saturday. The whole team is clicking now. They are moving and executing well. Against UConn they played a solid sixty minutes of lacrosse and they executed to near perfection.

Against UConn the Gorillas showed their power both offensively and defensively. In the first half of the game they were called for seven penalties yet Connecticut could only score one goal.

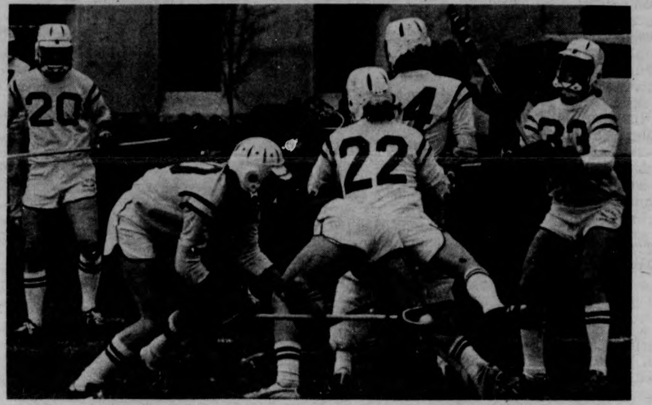
The Gorillas learned from their losses and although they had not played for a week, they went down to Connecticut and ran UConn into the ground. If they can execute against Harvard the way they did against UConn, they should beat them.

As for Harvard, they can be tough and should give UMass a real challenge. "Harvard should be tough," said Coach Garber. "Last year we jumped off to an early lead but we had to hold off Harvard in the final quarter." UMass is presently ranked ninth in the nation, but Harvard, which is yet to play any regular season games, is ranked twentieth.

Harvard must have a good team to be ranked so high nationally. The Crimson have lost eleven starters from last year's team. However they will have about eighteen lettermen returning. Of last year's team, the Crimson have lost top attackmen, Steve Milliken and John Hagerty, midfielder Nick Everett, and goalies Walt Dandy and Brian Everist. However, they will have attackmen Jim Quinn and Jack Judkins, who are both juniors. Robert Frisbie, a junior, is a very good midfielder and will be a big key to Harvard's offense. Bob Coplan will probably be starting as goaltender for the Crimson.

The Crimson of Harvard will be looking for their first win of the season while the Gorillas will be trying to equalize the record at 2-2. It should be a good game because Harvard wants to upset UMass to start off their season on a winning note. UMass, on the other hand is fighting for a post-season NCAA tournament bid.

LACROSSE NOTES — The major college lacrosse poll, which came out yesterday, is basically unchanged from last week. Maryland remained on top while Virginia and Johns Hopkins changed positions as third and second, respectively. UMass moved from tenth into ninth, ahead of Brown.



The UMass lacrosse team shown here in action against Cortland State, looks to crush Ivy when they meet Harvard today at home.

Trackmen see 4th straight vs. UVM, UNH

By SCOTT HAYES

The UMass Track team puts its four meet winning streak on the line today at 2:00 p.m. with a home tri-meet against New Hampshire and Vermont. The trackmen have swept their last two tri-meets and picked up four straight victories since an opening 81-73 loss to BC.

A year ago, the Minutemen ran away with the meet, outscoring UNH and Vermont 106-52-30. In comparing meet results, Springfield beat the Catamounts by 40 points early in the season and UMass beat Vermont handily during the indoor season. UNH lost to a strong Bowdoin team this season.

Vermont has some good individuals and not much depth, although more than in the past. Mike Bilza, a Northampton native, leads the field competitors. Bilza is a good all-around weightman who can shot-put over 50', throw the javelin more than 200' and toss the discus 145'. Devon Craig is an outstanding javelin thrower at 218-0.

The Catamounts will be well represented in the jumping events. School record-holder Nate Reeves is capable of 6-8½ in the high jump with teammates Steve Lynch and Don Putnam at 6-6.

Billy Looker leads the Vermont sprinters, running the 100 and the 220 as well as competing in the long and triple jumps. Other top performers for Vermont include Mark Iverson, a 14-0 pole vaulter, Tom Bird, who has run the high hurdles in 15.2 and distance runner Mike Berry.

Steve Rich is probably UNH's top athlete. Rich won the Conference pole vault at 15-0. Tom Irving, who placed in the Conference hammer, is also an excellent discus thrower. Al Maddox and Doug Purington provide scoring threats for UNH in the jumping events.

In the distance events, New Hampshire boasts Steve Reed, a 4:13 miler and Bruce Butterworth, who is capable of running with the best in New England in the mile or the two-mile.

MEN'S GYMNASTICS — All persons interested in saving the Men's Gymnastics program at UMass are invited to attend a meeting today, April 17th, in Boyden Building's Auxilliary Gym, at 4 p.m.

Beginning tomorrow, a Collegian special reporting team of Walt Powers, Rich Seveiri, Ben Caswell, Dave Eibel, and Steve DeCosta will begin a series of articles dealing with the recent cutback of the gymnastics program by the Athletic Department.

Be sure to watch The Collegian for a detailed report of the gymnastics controversy as it unfolds.

Batmen battle Chiefs

By MIKE BROPHY

Check the front page. If the weather reads good, then it might be giving Craig Allegrezza his chance at home, at 3:00 against Springfield College.

As is always the case for New England collegiate baseball, the weather usually has profound effect on a team's progress.

UMass has had little opportunity to play outside since returning from the South, having three games postponed due to either snow or rain.

Allegrezza appears to be in fine shape for the ballgame today and was throwing well at practice yesterday. "I felt real good," he said, "I think my arm may finally be coming around."

Even so, Coach Bergquist does not appear ready to send any starter the full distance. "It's too early and chilly yet for that. Short workouts are better," he said.

John Olson, now apparently recovered from an early season arm injury, is expected to come in at about the half-way point to finish up. "This plan is only tentative and will depend on how the guys feel at game time," said Bergquist.

The UMass outfield will have a new look today as infielder Jerry Mondalto will play right field while either Mike Joyce or Rick Hansen will handle left. Pete Backstrom will remain in center.

With Mondalto in the outfield it appears sure that Joe Marzilli has received Bergquist's vote of confidence for the starting job at second.

Coach Archie Allen of Springfield College will be going with the ace of his pitching staff in junior right-hander Ken Schoppe who the Minutemen saw last year. "In a game like this one here, I've gotta go with my best," said Allen from his office yesterday.

S.C. will bring with them a 1-1 record as their games in the South did not count on the regular season slate. The Chiefs downed Yale on Monday by a 4-3 score while losing a one-run game to Wesleyan last week, 1-0.

Celts two up!

NEW YORK (AP)-The fast-breaking Boston Celtics, getting 20 or more points each from John Havlicek, Don Nelson and Jo Jo White, rode a 33-point third quarter to a 111-99 victory over the New York Knicks Tuesday night for a commanding 2-0 lead in their playoff series.

Game three in the Eastern Conference final will be played Friday night in Boston.

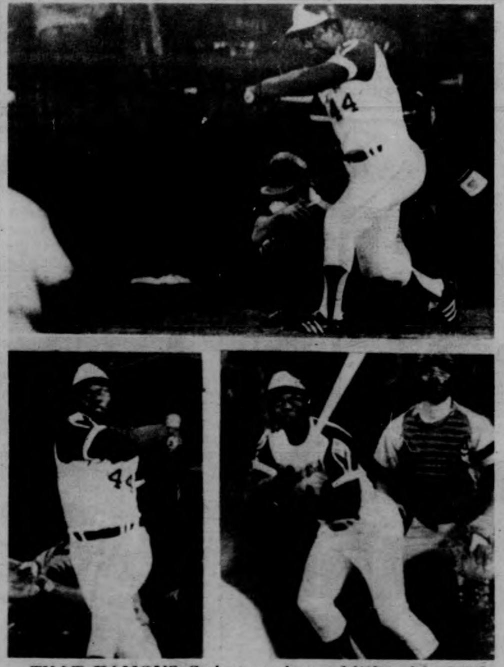
The racehorse Celtics, trailing 60-53 at halftime, outscored New York 33-14 in the third period and catapaulted to an 86-74 lead by the end of the quarter.

A 19-4 burst in the opening 6½ minutes of the period proved decisive as the Celtics charged ahead 72-64, and the Knicks never recovered.

Whalers lose

WEST SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP)-Jan Popiel capped a two-goal rally by the Chicago Cougars in the third period Tuesday night for a 3-2 victory to eliminate the World Hockey Association defending champion New England Whalers in the Eastern Division semifinals four games to three.

Veteran Ralph Backstrom had brought the upstart Cougars back to a 2-2 tie little more than three minutes earleer to offset a pair of second period goals by the Whalers' Tom Webster.



THAT FAMOUS Swinger, shown hitting his 715th record-setting homer last week. If Dick Bergquist had just one player like Bad Henry, UMass baseball would be absolutely unbeatable.

Ex-UM star Newell now Expos' farmhand

By MIKE BROPHY

The Quebec City Carnavals of the Eastern League announced Monday night the signing of former UMass rightfielder Steve Newell.

Overlooked in the Spring 1973 player draft, Newell went to play for the Cape Cod League after an All-American season at UMass where he batted .378 in leading the Minutemen hitters along the way to a 21-9-1 season.

Newell received not only the All-American award but was also named to the All-Yankee Conference team as well as All-New England.

Named to captain the 1974 Minutemen, Newell elected to sign with the Montreal Expos organization after an extremely successful summer season for Cotuit, where he batted .400 plus.

Among his other hitting exploits while at UMass last year, Newell led the team in homers last year with five, doubles with twelve, and hits with 49.

He was among the nation's leaders in runs scored with 32.

A spokesman for the Carnavals said, "We are very pleased to sign Steve and are sure that he could move up in the Expos organization very fast. He's a super ball player."

Charles Abramson, area scout for the Expos and Amherst High baseball coach, spoke very highly of Newell in saying, "He's the type of ballplayer that could go a long way. He's got the desire, the hustle, and the skills to make it. And that is what it takes."

The word came as somewhat of a surprise to everyone in the Amherst area, including his parents in East Longmeadow. "It'll be nice to see him play in Pittsfield. It's a lot closer than Miami," said his elated father Monday night.

Police investigate weekend thefts

By FRITS GEURTSEN
MDC Staff

UMass Police are continuing their investigations into the break-ins at Worcester Dining Commons' Munchies on Thursday night and at the Faculty Club and French Hall on Friday night.

Thomas C. Burnham, Snack Bar Manager at Munchies, reported that the thief, who broke in some time between 6 p.m. Thursday night and 7:15 Friday morning, took 75 cartons of cigarettes valued at $295.

No money was taken in the break, and although soap was strewn about the floor, none was stolen, police said.

Entry to Munchies was gained by knocking down some masonite in the ceiling, police reported. Since there was no exterior break into the Dining Commons building, police suspect that the thief hid himself in the building and allowed himself to be locked in.

Sgt. Frank Mazzei of the UMass Detective Division is carrying on the investigation.

The break at the Faculty Club was discovered by James Pelletier, an Institutional Protection Man, on his rounds. Officer Richard W. Besse, who conducted the initial investigation, reported that food was stolen from the premises and a great deal of vandalism was done.

A spokesman for the Club said that seven quarts of assorted liquor, 39 steaks, five cans of lobster, and various cans of ham, meatballs and chicken were stolen. Total loss was estimated at $215.

He added that eggs, pies, cheese and ice cream were thrown all over the floor. Loss due to vandalism could not be estimated immediately.

Following a trail of eggshells and other debris, Officer Besse discovered that French Hall had also been entered and had articles stolen from it.

Two 50-pound bags of soil conditioner were dragged from the Hall outside and left. Police reported that more eggs, two quarts of milk, and a partially frozen steak were found with the bags. A parking meter nearby was smashed as well.

Entry to the Faculty Club was made by prying a latch off a door. The door at French Hall had apparently been blocked open.

Saul Chafin, Assistant Director of the UMass Department of Public Safety, said "We suspect that the people responsible for the Faculty Club break were juveniles. The vandalism that accompanied the break is usually part of the m.o. of juveniles. By juveniles I mean kids between twelve and sixteen years old."

Chafin said that the break was obviously the work of an inexperienced thief because "A good burglar will pick or slip a lock, not snap or break it. Also he'll just take what he wants and get out as quick as he can and not stick around smashing things up."

Detective Michael Grabiec is investigating the case.

McGrath elected SGA Speaker

By MIKE HENAULT
MDC Staff

Cindy McGrath was chosen as the new speaker of the student senate in elections last night. Ms. McGrath who lives at 323 Grayson House, Orchard Hill won the speakers seat on the third ballot from a field of five candidates.

"I was surprised," said Ms. McGrath, after the results were announced. The other candidates were Peter Birnbaum, Melvin Hall, Tony Willig and Tom Spriggs.

Ms. McGrath led on the first two ballots, but lacked a solid majority. On the third ballot Birnbaum was dropped from the balloting. His support along with that of Willig put McGrath over the top.

In her nomination speech Ms. McGrath promised to improve communications within the SGA. She said she would accomplish this "by avoiding duplications" and by using the Executive Committee and the President's Council to bring student government "together as one group." These committees in some way form a cross section of the senate and area government leadership.

Ms. McGrath will succeed David Booker who has held the speakers seat for approximately one year.

Paul Hamel was re-elected student senate treasurer by a unanimous vote.

In other election matters the candidates for SGA president addressed the senate on their plans for student government next year. That election will take place on April 22. The candidates are Henry Ragin, Rick Savini, Kelly Irwin, and Ben Clancy.

In other matters the senate approved the budget of the Health Maintainance Organization. This move will set up a type of independent insurance company which will generate more revenue. The added funds will be used to hire more specialists for the University's Health Services and save the students extra cost.

The senate also approved the J.O.E. budget request for $3,175.00.

Assault and battery case continued to April 23rd

An assault and battery case involving two UMass women has been continued to next Tuesday, April 23, in order to give the prosecution time to produce all its witnesses.

The attorney from the County Prosecutor's office, assigned just recently to the case, told Northampton District Court Wednesday that he had expected the alleged victims to have the witnesses on hand. Apparently there was some confusion and none showed up.

James Jordan and Paul Rodriguez claim they were assaulted by Theresa Cooper and Bridget Porter in the Bluewall Jan. 30. At their arraignment March 13, Cooper and Porter pleaded innocent and yesterday was set for the hearing.

After learning that five of the prosecution witnesses were absent, Judge J. Alvertes Morse set a new hearing date "to be fair to both sides."

The small courtroom was jammed with supporters of the defendants who filled all available seats and the aisles. There was no disruption, but the bailiff called for quiet several times.

Judge Morse, observing small children in the area reserved for those having business with the court, told all spectators to return outside the rail.

"This court will not be turned into a circus", Morse said in the sole instance the judge directly admonished the spectators.

I want to be the president

Rick Savini believes that the SGA "is at the make or break point. The SGA has to be made more accessible, more responsible, to the students. The SGA must serve the students, not service them."

Staff photo-Bob Stevens

Ben Clancy feels the past presidents have not dealt with the people. "The SGA president has to deal with the trustees, the senate and the university community. He is the link between these groups."

By SHERMAN BOYSON
MDC Staff

For those of you that care, the power of the Student Government Association is going to change hands next Monday. Nick Apostola's reign as President of the Student Senate will end as elections for next year's president are held.

Three men and a woman are competing for the office that pays $37.50 a week. The candidates are: Rick Savini, present chairman of the senate Rents and Fees Committee; Kelly Erwin, running as a member of the Young Socialist Alliance; Ben Clancy, a student senator from Southwest; and Henry Ragin, running on a platform which endorses the abolition of the SGA.

The election is being held in the midst of a controversy over the election procedure. Currently, the president is elected by the senate, the five area governments, the Commuter's Assembly, and the Greek area government.

The complaint voiced against this procedure is that the students have no direct say in the election. They must rely on their governmental representatives who are only morally obligated to vote according to the consensus of their constituents.

Opposition to a popular election is based on the cost such extensive campaigning would entail.

The senate voted down a proposal to make the election a popular one, last week.

The present election structure makes Rick Savini the favorite to win. Savini, a senior BDIC major, is currently the senate chairperson of the Rents and Fees Committee. Among the four candidates, he has the most experience with the senate. Thus, he is best known to the people who will ultimately elect the president.

Savini admits the election structure gives him an advantage, but does not consider it an unfair advantage. "The senate president should be familiar with the senate and the way it works" Savini explained.

To his disadvantage is the fact that Savini is a first semester senior. Thus, if he is elected, he will graduate before his term is over. The by-laws of the constitution allows for having a president who is no longer an undergraduate, as long as he was an undergraduate when he was elected. "I'll still be connected with the undergraduates" Savini contends.

Ben Clancy is the only other candidate with experience in the senate. Clancy, a sophomore representing Coolidge Lower in the senate, is running as a write-in candidate. He originally backed the candidacy of Larry Gendron, who later dropped out of the race. "When Gendron left," Clancy said, "I thought Rick would slide right in. I wanted to see a good campaign."

Clancy is worried that UMass-Amherst will lose power, and ultimately money, during the growth of the other campuses at Boston and Worcester. "The SGA president must be working to keep Amherst as a power" Clancy believes.

Clancy has been termed an "idealist" by his opponents. He admits to this, but does not see it as a fault. "Idealism is wanting to reach a goal," he said. "As long as you know you have to bite, gouge, and kick to get that goal, you'll be okay."

Kelly Erwin is the only candidate to affiliate herself with a political party. She is president of the UMass chapter of the Young Socialist Alliance. A sophomore, Erwin has been connected with political action groups since her high school days. She contends that the student government structure is in need of radical change. "I would be the most effective candidate to effect that change" she believes. She endorses such changes as use of referendums to determine policy. The referendums would have a mandatory obligation over the government.

Henry Ragin is making his second attempt at the presidency. Ragin supports total abolition of the SGA. "No one gives a good goddamn about the SGA," he contends. "The individual of the university has gotten too far away from the power." Ragin believes that all policy matters should be decided by mass meetings of the entire community. Ragin realizes that this might cause a little confusion, but feels that "there's not enough chaos in the world today. There is too much organization now. The meetings would make life more exciting. They would be a damned good time."

Because the people he is attacking are the ones who will elect the president, Ragin is the only candidate who admits that he has little chance of winning.

The major problem that the next president will have to contend with is apathy of the university community. Savini believes the key is to get the senators themselves interested. "Meetings are muddled and filled with conflicts," he said. "If you get the senator interested, you can pass it on to his constituents." Savini also plans to hold the senate meetings in different parts of the campus to promote interest.

Clancy feels that if you make the meetings more interesting, apathy will decline. "The meetings are too long, with the participants uninformed. The different committees should meet more often to provide the information."

Irwin believes that people will respond to an interested leader, which she intends to be.

Ragin has a guaranteed way to solve apathy. Since there will no longer be a SGA if he is elected, there will be nothing to be apathetic towards.

The horses are coming

David Johnston, Director of Public Safety for UMass, announced yesterday that the Department will receive three horses for its mounted patrol today at 2:30.

The horses, which have been boarded by Mr. and Mrs. Philip Ayers of Whately, passed all of the health tests that they underwent during the past two weeks.

Johnston said that the names of the patrolmen who will be on the horse patrol will be announced tomorrow when the horses are delivered.

Tack and other equipment for the patrol has not yet been found, Johnston said, but the Department is still hopeful that it will be donated.

Bill cites UMass for engineering testing

BOSTON (AP) — The University of Massachusetts would be the site of a central engineering experiment station for the state under a bill aired at a hearing before the legislature's Committee on Education Wednesday.

Such a station could provide "enormous dividends" in engineering technology, according to Mary Newman, secretary of manpower affairs.

University President Robert Wood, also speaking at the hearing, said a group medical plan and teaching hospital is "absolutely essential if we are to prevent costs from going out of sight."

UMass Medical School Chancellor Lamarr Soutter opposed a measure that would require graduate doctors to practice for a minimum time in the state.

He said such a measure might scare away the best students, and would be unenforceable.

He also opposed the creation of a group at the school to study Sudden Infant Death Syndrome. He said the school lacks the personnel for it.

Chancellor Carlo Golino of UMass-Boston opposed a measure to increase the enrollment of Boston residents at the school. He said this is already being done within the school, and is not a subject for legislation.

Health Board pushes HMO

By BILLY NEMITZ
MDC Staff

The Student Health Advisory Board recommended yesterday that the Student Senate approve plans for a Health Maintainance Organization (HMO) in the Greater Amherst Area.

However, the Board included one stipulation in its recommendation concerning the structure of the HMO Board of Directors; that the majority of its members be consumers of the HMO, and that they be elected by fellow consumers once implementation of the HMO takes place.

A Staff Report to the University Health Council describes an HMO as a comprehensive health-care system staffed by health professionals who contract with consumers through the Board of Directors to provide health care for a prepaid fixed fee.

The HMO presently being considered is known as the Greater Amherst Area Health Plan (GAAHP). The two institutions providing care would be University Health Services and Amherst Medical Associates.

From the campus viewpoint, the GAAHP would directly involve faculty and staff members as they and their dependents would be eligible for membership.

Students, although not members of the GAAHP, would also benefit from it. Health Services director Barry Averill stated that student benefits would lie in improved quality of Health Services, due to the fact that the GAAHP would be providing Health Services with specialists and other services which would otherwise be unavailable.

Other benefits, Averill continued, would include membership eligibility for student dependents and saved student dollars since Health Services would be used by a greater number of people. This would result in a reduced cost for services for the student.

In addition to the consumer stipulation, the Advisory Board recommended that GAAHP membership costs be adjusted to fit the financial capabilities of the student who wishes to enroll dependents in the program.

Implementation of the plan rests ultimately with the approval of the University Board of Trustees. Once approved, the GAAHP would be incorporated and eligible for federal grant support under the federal HMO Act of 1973. Earliest implementation is aimed at the Fall of 1975.

The Student Senate voted unanimously last night to support the GAAHP plan, including the amendments added by the Advisory Board. This means that the Senate will recommend the plan's implementation to the Board of Trustees.

The GAAHP proposal is also being considered by both the Faculty and Graduate Senates, who are expected to submit their recommendations to the Board of Trustees in the near future.

Food services conducts D.C. opinion survey

By MARK KELLEHER
MDC Staff

Food Services along with the Food Services Governance Board has announced that an opinion survey of the dining commons will be conducted this Tuesday.

The survey will be the same as the one done by American Restaurant Association, a consulting firm, last November in order to prevent any bias this second time.

Ken Dean, responsible for Food Services and Campus Center food service, said, "we hope we've made some improvements since last November and we are really asking students to tell us how well we've done since then."

Some 8,000 survey forms will be distributed.

The visibility of dining commons managers was again brought up with a decision being made to scrap the idea of special jackets for the managers and concentrate instead on the wearing of identification pins.

"Managers can often deal with a problem directly and quickly alleviate the cause of them," said Acting Director of Food Services, Art Warren, adding that he will emphasize to the managers that it is important that they wear the identification tags.

Suggestions for expanding the number of options now available to students on the meal plan were entertained with the idea of a five meal per week plan receiving the most attention. Graduate students, commuters, and student interns were mentioned as possibly finding this an attractive option.

Ken Dean however warned against the advisability of allowing unlimited use of this option saying it would cuase 'operational problems' by decreasing the total amount of incoming revenue while Food Services must still contend with the mortgage payments of four dining commons.

"Faced with an increasingly older student population, 10 per cent of whom are estimated to be veterans," Dean said, "Food Service is already having budgetary problems."

"We estimated that 9,000 students would be on the board plan this semester but now it turns out we only have 8,000 . . . This has caused a lot of problems for us," Warren added.

In other action Chairperson Matt Burns announced that inquiries to 25 of the largest colleges in the nation have been sent with questions pertaining to how they run their meal plans. Initiated by ex-chairperson Ken Somers the inquiries are expected to yield new possibilities to be raised next semester when the Board hopes to come up with alternate meal plan proposals.

The next Food Service Board meeting will be held in two weeks.

Marathon explores ants and other crawly fears

By DAVID HANRAHAN

Dr. John Stoffolano loves insects. To the average person insects are something to be squashed, stepped on, sprayed, feared and hated. To Dr. Stoffolano they are an intregal part of nature.

In early spring, when people everywhere find ants wandering into their houses a minor crisis arises. Panic stricken homeowners attack the ants with Raid, Black Flag, and a variety of other insecticides.

In Dr. Stoffolon's house there is no spraying, no panic. He understands that the ants are merely seeking shelter from the early spring cold, and food. When the weather warms up the ants leave the house.

Dr. Stoffolono is an entomolgist, an expert in the insect field. He is also an educator, one of the over 400 who have come to the School of Education this week to discuss what can be done to eliminate much of the fear and predjudice that inhabits so much of our lives, the fear and predjudice which is so prevelant in our educational institutions.

His presentation, entitled, "Insects and the Elementary Teacher," was designed to educate teachers and students, to help them come to understand that our "conditioned responses" to the insect world are usually unfounded.

How is it that most of us have come to see insects in such a limited and warped way? Perhaps as a result of the same kind of forces which are responsible for some people thinking they are better than others merely because their skin is white. Perhaps as a result of the same forces which make some of us believe that people with long hair are better than people with short hair, or visa versa. Or maybe its because all of us have failed to really stop and consider who we are and what we are doing.

Dr. Stoffolono stopped long enough to ask himself why the ants were coming into his house in the early spring. He stopped long enough to come to understand and appreciate one aspect of this incredible world we live in.

If you have the time, come to the School of Education where the Spring Marathon is taking place. You'll meet some interesting people. Perhaps you'll meet someone like Dr. Stoffolono who can show you something about yourself and your world that you never really thought of before.

Greeks go bananas

Not to be outdone by the University of Miami, members of Phi Sigma Kappa here say they will make the world's largest banana split Wednesday at McManus's Restaurant. Miami students recently made one 226 feet long, but the Greeks say they will make one 250 feet long.

They say it will take 30 minutes to make, which will be a record time. Members of other fraternities will devour the Big Split, also in record time we presume.

Dancin' into spring

The UMass Concert Dance Group and the University Dancers under the direction of Marilyn V. Patton, opened their annual spring concert last night in Bowker Auditorium. They will be performing through Saturday night.

The companies will offer two different programs of dance, Friday, Program I, and Thursday-Saturday, Program II. Tickets are available through the Fine Arts Council Box Office, Herter Hall, or at the door; $1.00 for students and $2.00 for non-students. The concerts this year are sponsored in part through a grant by the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities.

Last summer, the University Dancers were the sole student representative to perform at the International Congress on Physical Education and Sport for Girls and Women, held in Teheran, Iran. Following the conference, the group continued on tour, winding up their performances in Patras, Greece before 2,500 spectators in the newly renovated open-air ampitheatre which was originally constructed in 200 A.D.

The dances presented this spring feature choreography by students and faculty, with 15 dances presented in either program I or program II. Andrea Watkins will present a new work entitled "Light Centers" which continues to show her talent in dramatic choreography.

Richard Jones will present a new jazz ballet entitled "Narcissus", which was premiered in New York City in December. Student choreography presents a jazz dance by Deborah Sweeney and Michele Taylor, a semi-classical ballet by Wendy Laakso and Genieveve Nass, a modern work exhibiting the use of art and dance in "Exhibitions" by Scott Hayward, a dance done by five of the men dancers which relies on their ability to improvise and create on one anothers energy and movements. "Collidescope", created especially for the University Dancers by Dena Madole, who was guest artist in the fall concert, will add additional humor to the program. See photos, page 12.

To replace Shultz

Simon nominated for Treasury secretary

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon nominated federal energy chief William E. Simon to succeed George Shultz as Treasury secretary yesterday and moved to reclaim for himself some of the broad economic powers he had granted Shultz.

John C. Sawhill, Simon's top deputy, was promoted to federal energy administrator by Nixon with instructions to press ahead with the effort to make America self-sufficient in energy by 1980.

Simon and Sawhill will take over their new posts upon Simon's confirmation by the Senate. Shultz will then depart for private life, the last remaining member of Nixon's original cabinet to leave government service.

In announcing Simon's elevation to the Cabinet post, the White House said the President "will assume an expanded role in coordination of economic policy himself."

Deputy Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren said that Nixon, for example, would become chairman of the Council on Economic Policy, a position held by Shultz for more than a year.

He also said Simon would not become chairman of the Cost of Living Council or the Council on International Economic Policy, two jobs also held by Shultz.

And Shultz's post as assistant to the President for economic affairs would remain vacant for the time being, Warren said.

With these disclosures, the White House made clear that Nixon does not intend for Simon to become an economic policy czar.

Unlike Shultz, Simon is not an economist.

Simon retained the Treasury post when he was named federal energy administrator last December. He won high marks from the White House for his brisk, sometimes brusque, manner in coordinating the government's response to the energy crisis.

After his appointment, Sawhill pledged to put a national energy self-sufficiency plan on the President's desk by Nov. 1.

Court says state officials can be held responsible

WASHINGTON (AP) — Spurred by suits following the deaths of four students at Kent State University in 1970, the Supreme Court yesterday opened the way for citizens to take state officials into court to answer for their acts.

The high court unanimously rejected the notion that state officials have an absolute immunity from law suits. They have immunity for their official acts, said Chief Justic Warren E. Burger for the court, but it is qualified.

The court thus kept alive damage suits against Ohio officials brought by relatives of three of the four students slain in a confrontation with Ohio National Guardsmen during a protest against the Indochina War.

The justices sent the cases back to a lower federal court for more proceedings to determine the extent of the immunity of the officials named as defendants.

The defendants include former Gov. James Rhodes, the adjutant general of the state National Guard, officers and enlisted men of the guard and the university president.

The suits were filed by families of slain students Sandra Scheuer, Allison Krause and Jeffrey Glen Miller.

Mrs. Martin Scheuer, Boardman, Ohio, whose daughter was killed, said of the court's decision: "It shows our system of justice is working. I'm very pleased that finally we're getting something done."

Former Adj. Gen. Sylvester Del Corso, head of the National Guard at the time of the incident, said: "We were all agents of the state of Ohio. We did not act as individuals."

The Supreme Court vote was 8 to 0, with Justice William O. Douglas taking no part.

Last month a federal grand jury in Cleveland indicted eight of the National Guardsmen on charges of violating the civil rights of the students who were killed and wounded. The indictments were not related to the civil suits on which the Supreme Court acted.

A federal district court judge had dismissed the civil suits at a very early stage, saying he lacked jurisdiction because the cases were essentially against the state itself and therefore barred by the federal consititution.

That action was premature, said Burger, holding that the 11th Amendment ban on federal suits against states does not uniformly bar such suits for damages against individual officials.

Saxbe calls Patricia Hearst 'criminal'

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — U.S. Atty. Gen. William Saxbe branded Patricia Hearst a common criminal yesterday, and a federal grand jury began considering whether she willingly wielded a gun in a terrorist bank robbery.

Saxbe said in Washington he was convinced the 20-year-old newspaper heiress was "not a reluctant participant" in the $10,000 robbery Monday by a heavily armed gang which wounded two persons in its getaway.

The terrorist Symbionese Liberation Army dragged Miss Hearst screaming from her Berkeley apartment 2½ months ago. In a "communique" April 3, she renounced her family and swore she had been converted into a revolutionary fighter.

"It would appear to me that she was not a reluctant participant in this robbery," Saxbe told his weekly news conference, adding that SLA members all are "common criminals." Asked if he included Miss Hearst, he said, "Miss Hearst is a part of it."

Miss Hearst's father, newspaper executive Randolph A. Hearst, called Saxbe's comments "speculation" and refused further comment.

Charles Bates, the FBI agent in charge of the case, also refused comment other than to say: "The FBI is continuing its aggressive investigation looking to a solution of the Hearst kidnaping case and the bank robbery."

U. S. Attorney James Browning said evidence in the bank robbery is being presented to a grand jury and that indictments are possible by next week.

"It is entirely possible that the evidence will show that there was no duress or coercion on the part of these people, but that is a matter for the grand jury to determine," he said.

According to a guard at the bank, Edward Shea, Miss Hearst took an active part in the robbery — "giving ….orders and all that, saying she would shoot the first guy that moved."

"She wasn't scared. She let it be known that she meant business," the 66-year-old guard said yesterday. "She had a gun and looked ready to use it."

Bates said 100 to 125 federal agents are working on the case and again said he does not know the location of the SLA hideout. Police say the SLA is a heavily armed, multi-racial group of about 25 men and women.

Bank cameras photographed Miss Hearst along with three other white women and a black man during the robbery of a Hibernia Bank.

CAUGHT BY BANK CAMERA — A warrant has been issued for newspaper heiress Patricia Hearst who the FBI says is shown in this hidden camera photo taking part in a bank robbery in San Francisco, Monday. Authorities said Miss Hearst may have been forced into taking part in the robbery.

'Zebra' killer claims victim

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Nelson T. Shields IV took advantage of the spring day to play some lacrosse, then helped a buddy move a rug.

Moments later the 23-year-old son of a DuPont Co. executive lay dead in the street, three bullets in his back, the 12th white person killed by a black assailant since Nov. 26 in what police call the Zebra case.

The murder bore strong resemblance to the others in a wave of apparently unprovoked shootings that has terrorized residents and left the largest police investigation in the city's history puzzled. Police labeled the case "Zebra" after four shooting deaths one night in January.

In less than five months, 12 persons have died and six have been wounded. In almost every case, the victim was apparently minding his business at night on a city street when he or she was gunned down with no warning.

"I didn't do anything," Tina Smith, 32, said the night of Jan. 28 just before she died on a downtown sidewalk where she had been waiting for a bus. Three others died in similar fashion the same night.

Three months later, Tom Rainwater, 21, and Linda Story, two white Salvation Army cadets, slipped out of their training school for a snack near the city's Japanese Cultural Center. A gunman stepped from the darkness and began firing at point-blank range with a .32-caliber pistol. Rainwater fell dead, Miss Story was seriously wounded.

Then, Tuesday night, Shields went with a friend, Jonathan May, to a quiet residential street to pick up a rug. Shields had been playing lacrosse earlier in the day and was dressed in his uniform, blue shorts, gray pullover and tennis shoes. He had been in the San Francisco area for only a week.

May went into a house to get the rug as Shields stayed outside to make room for it in their station wagon. Three shots rang out and Shields slumped to the street, fatally wounded.

"I ran outside and I heard Nick moan. But he was dead when I reached him," May said. A neighbor who heard the shots told police she saw a black man running up the street.

"It looks like another Zebra case," said Police Inspector Gus Coreris. "There's no motive. A guy just comes over to help move a carpet and winds up dead."

Police say they are pursuing the killer or killers with their biggest manhunt ever. Rewards totaling $25,000 are posted.

Wounded Knee trial

Saxbe criticizes AP for suspension

WASHINGTON (AP) — Atty. Gen. William B. Saxbe elaborated yesterday on Justice Department criticism of The Associated Press for suspending a photographer who provided information about the Indian occupation of Wounded Knee to FBI agents.

"This causes us concern because, as you know, we're trying to do everything possible to encourage citizen participation," Saxbe told reporters at his weekly news conference.

He said he believes the AP and its president and general manager, Wes Gallagher, were wrong to suspend photographer James Mone for responding to FBI questions after bisiting the Indian leaders' encampment at Wounded Knee in 1973.

In response to Saxbe's comments, Gallagher issued this statement:

"It is a distortion for the attorney general to equate a citizen's obligation with the interrogation of an Associated Press photographer at Wounded Knee.

"Obviously there are cases and circumstances where a journalist, like any other citizen, would have an obligation to report to authorities or testify about criminal events.

"But in this case the FBI sought to use journalists to gather information which they should have been gathering themselves. In short, they sought to use Mone the same way they would use an agent.

"The attorney general is now defending violations of his department's own principles and guidelines, spelled out before and after Wounded Knee.

Attorney General William Saxbe

Judge rules out wiretap evidence

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — A federal judge refused to dismiss charges yesterday against American Indian Movement leaders Dennis Banks and Russell Means, who are charged in last year's 71-day takeover of Wounded Knee, S.D.

However, U. S. District Court Judge Fred J. Nichol said the government could not use any evidence it had acquired by monitoring the single telephone in the village.

The government had an extension to the telephone at a roadblock it had set up outside the village.

The judge coupled his order with criticism of the prosecution and the FBI.

He said the government had done a poor job of preparing its case and presenting some of the evidence. He said the FBI had withheld information that should have been delivered to government attorneys and turned over to the defense.

Judge Nichol said the government's roadblock phone was not used to facilitate negotiations, which the government said was its chief purpose in installing it.

But he also said there was no evidence the FBI had monitored any conversations between defense attorneys and clients over the phone. Attorneys for Banks and Means had alleged such monitoring had taken place, violating their rights.

GOP's loss of 'sure' seat seen as blow to President

The White House says President Nixon does not think he was the big issue in the Democrats' historic election victory in Michigan, but most political reactions were aimed his way.

The GOP's fourth stinging loss of a "sure" Republican seat in the House stirred speculation that the reflected mood of the electorate could spur the impeachment drive.

Vice President Gerald Ford predicted the voting trend could portend a dictatorial Congress top-heavy with Democrats and doom the two-party system.

Democrat Bob Traxler ended 42 years of Republican hold on Michigan's 8th Congressional District Tuesday by defeating Republican James Sparling Jr., 59,918 to 56,575 in a special election to fill the vacancy left by James Harvey, who was nominated to a federal judgeship.

Not since 1932 had the Democrats won the 8th District, which has averaged 66.2 per cent Republican for the past decade.

The GOP defeat in Saginaw followed losses of traditional Republican seats in Pennsylvania's 12th District; Michigan's 5th, which Ford vacated to become vice president, and Ohio's 1st at Cincinnati. The best the GOP has been able to do in this year's Watergate-tinged special elections was retention of California's 13th District with 53 per cent of the vote where its 10-year average had been 66.6 per cent.

President Nixon had thrown his personal prestige into the breach in Saginaw with a campaign visit on behalf of Sparling, but the White House disagreed with suggestions that the election was a Watergate-Nixon referendum.

"No, in no way whatsoever," Deputy Press Secretary Gerald Warren said when asked that. "There were many, many issues in that campaign."

Sen. Vance Hartke, D-Ind., said in LaPorte, Ind., that the latest election will speed the process of removing Nixon from office.

"There's no question in my mind that President Nixon did put his political reputation as a politician on the line in Michigan," Hartke said. "That reputation suffered a setback. I anticipate we'll have a new president."

From Bucharest, Romania, the Senate Republican leader, Hugh Scott, sent a statement that the loss was depressing but would not affect the deliberations on impeachment.

"It's an additional item of bad news," Scott said.

Ford called it bad news of a different sort, saying continued Democratic victories could mean a "legislative dictatorship."

"One party control is not good for America," Ford said. "And the trend in congressional elections now is for the Democrats to end up with an overwhelming majority in the House. This will mean a legislative dictatorship."

At a Washington news conference Democratic National Chairman Robert Strauss answered Ford: "That strikes me as an interesting posture for him to be in, because three weeks ago he was talking about a do-nothing Congress unable to come to grips with anything."

Strauss agreed with the White House that Watergate wasn't the only issue, but he said Nixon was the key.

"I don't think Watergate was the issue that won or lost," Strauss said. "I think Nixon leadership was an important issue out there, and I think it had a great deal to do with our success."

AP News Roundup

Frank McGee dies

NEW YORK (AP) — Frank McGee, an NBC television newsman seen regularly on the "Today" program, died yesterday. He was 52 and had been suffering from cancer of the bone marrow for the past four years.

The immediate cause of his death was pneumonia.

His final months of broadcasting duty were performed under severe pain, his doctor said.

McGee made his last appearance on the "Today" program last Thursday morning and checked into the Harkness Pavilion of Columbia Presbyterian Medical Center here later the same day.

His hallmark as a news broadcaster and commentator was absolute coolness in crisis, a quality that brought him national attention as the anchorman of so-called instant specials — extended news programs based on fresh-breaking news events.

Knowledgeable in politics and space flight, McGee had a prominent role in NBC's early coverage of the U.S. space effort. During the historic orbital flight of John H. Glenn Jr., in 1962, McGee's stint before the cameras extended 11½ consecutive hours.

Nixon defended

SEATTLE (AP)-John D. Ehrlichman labelled as false reports yesterday which said he believed President Nixon had lost effectiveness and that an 18-minute White House tape gap was intentional.

Ehrlichman also rejected reports quoting friends as saying he had engaged in plea-bargaining with Watergate prosecutors and that he carried a resentment against former White House chief of staff H.R. Haldeman.

In a prepared statement, Ehrlichman, the former chief domestic affairs adviser to Nixon, said a Los Angeles Times story quoting his friends was "false in tone and content."

The Times story quoted unnamed friends as saying Ehrlichman had privately expressed disappointment with Nixon and that he thought Nixon's effectiveness had ended.

A friend of Ehrlichman's interviewed by The Associated Press yesterday said Ehrlichman had discussed with the prosecutors the terms under which he would plead guilty to a reduced Watergate-related charge, but that no agreement was reached.

Budget gets House OK

BOSTON (AP)-The Massachusetts House, after the second marathon session in two days, gave final approval last night to the $2.74 billion state budget for the next fiscal year.

The Democratic leadership lost out on only one change-an additional $2 million allocation for rental housing subsidies. The housing assistance program had received strong support from liberal Democrats as well as Republicans.

Rejected after long debate was a $1 million item to provide staff aides for all House members. Five language changes that didn't affect expenditures were approved.

An additional $128,773 for the lead paint detection program and $181,000 for the Western Massachusetts Hospital were inserted without opposition.

Health bills to rise

NEW YORK (AP)-Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare Casper Weinberger said yesterday that the national health care bill could soar $7 billion above the current $80 billion this year.

But Weinberg said that the increase could be avoided if Congress extends federal controls on health care beyond their April 30 expiration date.

He added at a press briefing that next year's health costs would climb another $9 billion without the price controls.

Congressional inaction, he continued, might subject the public interest to "multiple clear and present dangers."

Weinberger said he based his figures on Cost of Living Council estimates.

The secretary expressed optimism about the possibility of compromise on health care legislation in the Senate. A bill could be enacted this year, he said.

A bill sponsored by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and Sen. Wilbur Mills, D-Ark., and one supported by the administration are under consideration.

Weinberger said that both the Kennedy-Mills bill and the administration health care financing bill "attempt health care cost controls" which would be reimposed upon passage of the legislation by Congress.

Niger chief names himself President, promises justice

LAGOS, Nigeria (AP) — Niger's military chief of staff formally installed himself yesterday as president of a 12-man ruling military council and promised "social justice" to the people of his impoverished country.

"Many of the people are deprived of their daily needs," Lt. Col. Seyni Kountie told his countrymen in a broadcast interview three days after he led a military coup which overthrew the civilian government of President Hamani Diori.

"Our principal theme is social justice," he said.

Kountie seized power because he said Diori's regime had failed to cope with the devastation of the six-year drought that has parched West Africa below the Sahara and crippled Niger's meager economy.

Niger, a poor land of nomads and settled farmers, has suffered thousands of deaths and the loss of whole herds and crops from the disaster. Tens of thousands of people have been forced into refugee camps where their suvival depends on foreign gifts of food.

The Nigerian ambassador to Niger, Sanni Kantagora, returned to Lagos and said he could confirm reports that Diori's wife Aissa had been shot to death in the coup. He termed the death "accidental," but gave no further details.

Official radio broadcasts from Niger also reported the funeral of two soldiers killed during the coup. Kountie had repeatedly asserted that not a shot was fired in the coup.

Kantagora told newsmen that Diori, who ruled Niger since it gained independence from France in 1960, was under house arrest and being attended by his aide de camp and two servants.

Stans says Vesco did not get payoff

NEW YORK (AP) — Former Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans testified yesterday that financier Robert L. Vesco never received a payoff in return for a secret $200,000 cash contribution to President Nixon's 1972 election campaign.

The former Cabinet member took the witness stand in his own defense at the federal criminal conspiracy trial in which he is a codefendant with onetime Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell.

When Vesco made the donation, he was the target of a massive Securities and Exchange Commission frauds investigation.

Mitchell and Stans are accused of seeking to impede this probe in exchange for the $200,000. They are charged with conspiracy, obstruction of justice and perjury.

Stans said that at the March 8, 1972 meeting in which the money was pledged, it was he and not Vesco who raised the matter of the SEC investigation.

Federal study concludes

Pilot error caused Delta crash

WASHINGTON (AP) — The crew of a jetliner that crashed in Boston and killed 89 persons was discussing a faulty instrument when it should have been checking the plane's altitude, federal investigators said yesterday.

"The probable cause of the accident was the failure of the flight crew to monitor altitude and to recognize passage of the aircraft through the approach decision height," according to the report of a National Transportation Safety Board investigation.

The plane was on a morning flight from Burlington, Vt., and Manchester, N.H., last July 31 when it crashed into a seawall short of the end of a runway on the edge of Boston Harbor.

All but one of the passengers died in the crash. Air Force Sgt. Leopold Chouinard of Marshfield, Vt., survived the initial impact but died of burns and complications last December.

Problems began as the Delta Air Lines DC9 approached Logan International Airport, the report said.

The flight controller in the tower at Logan was busy with other aircraft and delayed giving the Delta plane flight information and clearance to land, the report said. This made it difficult for the pilots to get the plane into the proper angle of descent.

The board theorized that as the plane was coming in the pilots may have thrown a switch on the flight director, an instrument landing device, into the wrong position. That would have made the device give misinformation about the plane's descent.

As the plane and co-pilot discussed the flight director, the plane was flying off course, too low and too fast. the report said.

The crew's "preoccupation with the flight director's presentation was the most detrimental factor during the critical phase of the approach," the report said. "This preoccupation led directly to the crew's failure to monitor altitude and to recognize passage of the aircraft through decision height" — the point 200 feet above the ground at which the crew must decide whether to land or pull back up.

A spokesman at Delta's headquarters in Atlanta declined to comment on the board's findings.

However, in court cases that have stemmed from the crash, Delta lawyers have maintained that "the departure from normal activities" of Federal Aviation Administration controllers was a "contributing factor" in the crash. When the plane crashed, it was headed across the runway, and visibility was obscured by fog.

Sargent vetoes busing bill, calls for non-binding vote

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Francis W. Sargent vetoed a bill yesterday which would have provided for a binding referendum on the school busing issue in Boston.

In an advisory opinion to the governor Tuesday, the state Supreme Court ruled that the measure was unconstitutional.

In his veto message, Sargent said he was calling upon city officials to resubmit a non-binding petition "which would allow the people of Boston to record their views on this vitally important issue.

"Only a non-binding petition will resolve the objections raised by the court," Sargent said.

Anticipating a veto by Sargent yesterday morning, Boston legislators said they would make every effort on the floor of the House and Senate to override the governor.

Rep. Raymond L. Flynn, D-Boston, said at a morning news conference yesterday that efforts would be made to hold a non-binding referendum in Boson if the governor rejected the bill.

Boston is scheduled to implement an enrollment plan to achieve racial balance in city schools next fall.

The plan and the bill vetoed by Sargent specifically deal with pupil reassignments.

However, the court equated the measure with one ruled unconstitutional less than a year ago.

The last American hero is amnesty—no!

By MIKE KNEELAND

I'm one college student who's unfashionably against granting unconditional amnesty to Vietnam war dodgers.

No Bob Estelle, I'm not ready to add my name to the John Birch Society. I don't think all war dodgers were anti-American Communists — though there were probably some — and I don't think all war dodgers were cowards, though there were probably some.

Furthermore, I don't think the men were "poor, misguided children" who had lost their way because of the bad shephard Dr. Benjamin Spock.

On the contrary, I believe the great majority of dodgers were intelligent men of admirable moral character, sensitive towards fellow man. They were so perceptive, in fact, that they seriously questioned the Vietnam War far earlier than most Americans. There is little doubt that these men made a personally courageous decision to flee rather than fight.

It might strike you strange that after such praises I'm against granting the dodgers unconditional amnesty.

But I firmly believe that granting amnesty would establish a most undesirable precedent.

Consider a sailor in some future battle who suddenly decides he's against the war. He refuses to load a 5" mount with its projectile and by this act may jepordize his shipmates.

Consider the young lieutenant in battle who turns around to find he has lost some of his men to moral decisions. Such decisions, for the sailor and fleeing soldiers, would not be unreasonable under the circumstance. In the blood of battle, I suppose, a man could easily decide that Sweden is far more attractive than some swamp. And with precedent guiding him, it would be a far easier decision to make.

And to the young man who has received a friendly draft board invitation, it would also be an easy decision to pay Sweden a visit and return to America after the war. Why not? Precedence is with him.

The fact of life, as I see it, is that we must be able to count on our Armed Forces in tense situations. A precedence of amnesty would weaken the function of the military units.

Yes, I did say the dodgers made an admirable decision, but that decision is admirable partly because of its consequences — consequences they are now facing. If these men want to return to America, then they must face Federal charges and accept the punishment a court of law deems appropriate.

Blacks: build nation

By MICHAEL WEIR
Black News Service

Are Blacks on campus learning and loving nationalistically?

How many Black students here at UMass can attest to the fact that they are seriously persuing courses that could in eventuality aid in the process of nation building. The number should be low if we are being truthfull with our selves.

The concept of nation building is not as abstract as our advisors would have us think. Remembering that the knowledge to build a nation is encrusted in the archives of this soon to be two hundred year old America means the study of history, science and most notably war. War because this country was built on this great institution, along with of course, that peculiar institution. The United States is a country of institutions. Institutions that process the Black man and woman through the system. Packaged and labeled, we the oppressed people are conveyed by what is conveyed to us into a white world that can relate to us only in token compromises that do little for our personal esteem but much for the national interest of America.

Is the Black Studies Department doing all that is in it's power to help the Black student fend for him or herself at a white institution? Is the department providing the weapons to begin a new renaissance, a new nation? I pose these questions in light of the fact that surely the university cannot be expected to teach nationalism to naturalized Blacks (the peculiar institution, remember).

It is argued that a people with no land are nothing. This is true to a certain extent. But to say that your people are nothing this to me is apolitical and antinationalist. Having land won't make something out of nothing, we are something, we are a people. And from a people can be raised a people's army to battle for the people to obtain this cherished possession of land.

We as potential members of this people's army have the duty to register for the courses that will lead to a well disciplined people and also to envolve ourselves with every working part of this university. To know that you got "beat" by UMass is not enough, you must know how you got beat and then what you can do to beat the system.

And as far as loving with nationhood in mind, well you don't have to go far to see what nation is being perpetuated and which is being undercut and infiltrated.

Brothers, have you ever really taken the time to admire a Black woman? I mean the entire unbound beauty of this gift to man, the unleashed prowess to do anything her mind sets out to do? I think not. In a bold statement of fact, the Black woman truly holds the future of Black nationalism in her illustrious being. But sisters cannot ignore this strong Black man, upon whose strength and courage they should rely. After all, the enemy is self evident, none of us should deny our allies. The truth is that brothers and sisters need only love each other and revolution is an act of love.

Kalihi Kai: tipping a must

To The Editor:

Saturday evening I took three close friends out to eat at the Kalihi Kai restaurant in Amherst. The most bizarre and prodigal thing happened as we were making our exit. The waitress approached me and insisted that I keep the tip I had left her, which amounted to 75 cents. She openly declared that she was insulted, and didn't want to take my ignominous tip - fearing she might leave me pennyless.

My friends and I spent $24.83 for our shitty meal, and it was openly elucidated, by the waitress, that we should have left 15 per cent of our total tab, or $3.87, as a tip. I stood there, exasperated and appalled at the punctilious expectation that was directed upon us. I began to retort these expectations, by calmly trying to explain to her that one must live according to ones' means, and by us coming here and spending $24.83 wasn't exactly living accordingly but, even poor students do intermittently like to go out to eat.

For a waitress to put such punctilious expectation on all people — without regard — is insolent, erroneous, and uncalled for. To be attacked because you are poor and cannot meet certain expectations is poignant — but very well evident to the poor which includes most students, in the nation. To anticipate that a 15 per cent tip must be given, before one can conceive of going out to eat is, I would say, very heinous.

Why are all the customers obligated to pay the waitress' (in my case $4.00 for 45 minutes of labor) instead of the wealthy management? It's another expense that the corporates and bureaucrats push on to the people — which they do so well, big establishments as well as small.

I am not a penurious person, but when I do not have enough money to support myself, it is impossible to leave such expected tips to support another person. She should have realized that we would have left her a larger tip if we could afford it.

It's difficult to understand how such expectations can be put on all people especially in a stratified society. More important, is the fact that we the people are expected to pay for waitress labor — when they are working, not for us, but for the owner of the establishment, in this instance the Kalihi Kai.

The establishment, as well as others in the same business, should be ridiculed — but even more so, the waitress' that aren't intelligent enough to realize that there are people who should be excluded from that 15 per cent expectation.

Upon leaving I did give her a tip, not in that all evil thing money, but knowledge and advice which was, I believe, more advantageous to the waitress and all of the management and people who were assiduously watching. A bit of advice that, I hope, gave them a different and better way of looking at a situation as the one at hand. And that is, to accept people for what they are and not how they ought to be, for not doing so categorizes all people as being affluent.

UMass needs Dance major

To The Editor:

Unlimited explorations have been gathered this year by the University Dancers to create a concert. Determined people have choreographed dances of unusual delicacy. A closeness between the students and faculty has shone through in the themes of the individual dances. As a result of the enthusiasm in the Spring Concert at Bowker Auditorium, April 17, 18, 19, 20, two programs will be performed. In the midst of this activity, another concept is being planned to immediately follow on May 1, at the Campus Center Auditorium. The concert is only one event of a week-long, BDIC festival during which the various independent majors will show their work.

I would like Dance to be an established major at this University. Talented, hard working students devote all of their time to dancing. With Fine Arts gaining in importance, Dance could be further developed as a serious Department of study. Many of the dancers want to fulfill their artistic endeavors. A Dance Major would show recognition of Dance as a diversified, intellectual Art.

The teachers in Dance here are creative, demanding, technical, and qualified. They've all had performance experience. Challange inspires excellence. Miracles happen every day in the Dance classrooms. "A miracle is an event that appears unexplainable by the laws of nature and so is held to be supernatural in origin or an act of God." Perhaps it is time to respect the art of Dance and establish a Dance Major.

N.E. Area elections

To The Editor:

Don't get fooled again. In the past, Area governments haven't done much good. All they've done is take the students' money and make it disappear. This is especially true in Northeast Area. This year, every person in the Quad was ripped off for $6.75, most of which they never saw again, and next year they're going to have to pay $10.00. This year, as every year, elections were held which no one knew about, and another ineffectual area government spent a semester trying to figure out what it was doing. It didn't make it.

This year, we want to do things better. We're running because we don't want to see the people in the quad get ripped off again. We know each other, and we know we can work together. We want to make sure you get something for your money. We'll continue to fund the colloq's, the Women's Center, a decent Spring Day and the other special projects of the Area. But we'll also send much of the money back to the dorms where it will be used. Remember to vote Thursday night.

Sarge here April 20

To The Editor:

I am sure that by now many people on campus are familiar with the Russell Daniels case (9 YEAR OLD IN NORFOLK). The response from the campus has been encouraging whether it be in the form of signing letters, coming to Boston with the support group, or expressing concern and willingness to help. What people on campus may not be aware of is the fact that Governor Sargent will be here in the Campus Center this Saturday night (April 20th). He will speak at a convention on how the citizens of Massachusetts feel about the services offered to the Developmentmentally Disabled in this state.

This is our chance to speak to our Governor. I urge the students, staff and faculty on campus to use this opportunity to show the Governor that we are not satisfied with the services being offered to citizens such as Russell Daniels.

There will be a rally Thursday night at 8:00 p.m. in Webster Main Lounge to give out information and discuss the most effective way to act on Saturday night. If people cannot make this meeting and would like more information, call Lynn 546-5495 or Sue 253-3590.

Finally, we have a means to channel our frustrations into constructive action. LET'S USE IT!

Terrorism, etc. etc.

There she stood, machine gun in hand, guarding the door to a San Fransisco Bank, which at that moment was being robbed by members of the notorious Symbionese Liberation Army. The fact that the SLA came out of the heist $10,000 dollars richer probably didn't matter too much to them. The fact of the matter was that SHE was on display. But who was she?

Was that Patricia Hearst? Was that the same girl who was dragged, screaming and trembling, from her boyfriend's apartment and held as hostage by that same group of nihilistic outlaws? Were the guns of the SLA members trained on her during the hold-up?

Or was that "Tanya X," the new name claimed by Patricia Hearst in the last "communique" from Colonel Cinque and the SLA? Was she now a dedicated terrorist, and if so, what was the process of her conversion?

Or was she a brainwashed lobotomy, tortured into a state unquestioning obedience?

We would all like to know the answers to these questions. But more importantly, we should seek answers to the general questions of the future of terrorism in America.

Terrorism is a world-wide phenomenon. In some countries, it is virtually a way of life. The sad fact of the matter is that terrorism is being increasingly appeased, and consequently, it is becoming a highly prosperous method of revolutionary action.

The Marxist-Leninist system of revolutionary action is not based on humanitarianism. It took a Stalin and his totalitarian violence to consolidate the revolution in Russia. Mao always taught his disciples that revolutions come out of the barrel of a gun. The lessons taught by Ho, Che, Fidel and Arafat are lessons of the efficacy of violence. If a firing squad, or a bombing, or a hijacking, or an assassination, or a letter bomb, or a kidnapping, or a bank robbery helps to further the cause of the revolution, it is not to be condemned, but praised.

Multi-million dollar ransoms are being paid for the release of hostages. When the returns are this good, what is to discourage further acts of terrorism? For every act of successful terrorism, a return performance is bound to follow. There will be future kidnappings. There will be more bank robberies. The terrorists will buy more machine guns. There will be more assassinations. The ultimate goal of the terrorists is to completely demoralize any opposition to their sinister plans. Who will speak out against their madness when there is a strong likelihood of one's being assassinated, bombed, or kidnapped?

It can't happen here, you say? Check your history books. Terrorism has had a firm legacy in America. The Ku Klux Klan, the Underworld, Murder Inc. have all demonstrated that organized terrorism can prosper in America.

The only way to suppress terrorism is for society to demonstrate its unyielding intolerance for its existance. Those who treat American citizens as disposable cannon fodder for their revolutions must answer with their own miserable lives. Recourse to Capital Punishment may be the only answer. It is not a question of "does society have the right to kill in retaliation for killing?" It is a question of whether or not society can permit terrorism to proliferate in its own midst.

Tippacanoe & Ragin too!

The Student Government Association (SGA) is full of shit!

Probably just about everybody but the SGA people themselves figured that out a long time ago; few UMies even bother to pay attention to our boring bunch of elitist junior congressmen.

I doubt that many students care or even know that there is an SGA presidential election next Monday night. Only SGA folks may cast votes for our great leader.

We were the ones who turned down SGA presidential election by popular vote in a referendum put to us last year. So when the SGA elects another boring bureaucrat from its ranks we will be getting exactly what we deserve. Which will probably be something along the lines of a royal pain in the ass.

If students had the vote they'd elect Henry Ragin.

Nick Apostola, the winner of last year's election, has spent a year as SGA President; he has spent a year working with the SGA people. Nick Apostola supports Henry Ragin.

Our man Ragin thinks student government should be abolished.

Ragin, who worked last year as one of Pierpont's representatives to the Southwest Assembly, is disturbed at the seriousness of the people involved in SGA.

"Some of them act as if the decisions they make are going to influence the world. How absurd," says Ragin.

"They think that if you blow it now you're blowing your whole life away and its just not true," he continues.

Ragin hopes to restore lunacy to the student body.

One of Ragin's campaign pledges last year was that if elected he would turn the SGA offices into an opium den. Ragin says that the pledge still holds except that there's not much opium around these days.

He realizes that not all students would get into smoking opium anyway.

"No one will be forced to smoke opium in my administration," he says.

"What I mean is that the offices should have the atmosphere of an opium den — more relaxed, you know? Those offices are too sterile now. Students feel funny walking into them," Ragin says.

If elected, Ragin would abolish his own office ("Of course, that's too much power in the hands of one person," he says) and he'd abolish the Student Activities Tax. Ragin figures that a lot of people who pay the tax really aren't interested in what goes on on campus.

"People on campus don't enjoy their lives probably because they don't control their lives," he contends.

Ragin feels that the students' real enemy is not the SGA at all but the administration. He thinks that if the students would stand up and show their power they could control the faculty and administration.

"It would take a little time for the faculty and administration to give in, of course," said Ragin, "but then, people are always hesitant to gree their slaves."

Our man Henry Ragin should be elected because he has character. I mean just look at his hair.

Henry Ragin's hair.

It stands alone.

It also stands up and out in a style that might be compared to an Afro only its bigger and better.

With something like that on top of his head he's just got to have character (or at least something else going for him).

One night last year our floor seceded from the dorm. It was probably the best and craziest thing we did all year. Ragin was there; he was an instigator.

I think we're all pretty tired of the SGA; we're tired of the bullshit, the elitism and the haughtiness.

As Ragin says, it's not really the people involved in SGA that are so bad but the system that makes them that way.

Let's get rid of the system.

Everyone can attend the SGA election next Monday night in the Campus Center Auditorium to let their representatives know what they want.

Henry Ragin for SGA President!

Justice: now

By RUDY JONES

The case of Sisters Theresa Cooper and Bridget Porter came up in Northampton District Court yesterday morning and was continued until Tuesday, April 23, 1974.

Theresa and Bridget are charged with assault with a deadly weapon against two intoxicated fellows in the Blue Wall.

The courtroom was filled to capacity with members from the Black Community and a few whites, who came out to see that justice be done in the name of the Commonwealth. The air in the courtroom was one of shock and amazement at the presence of the audience. It was apparent that this was their first exposure to an organized body of Black people.

The court recessed three times and finally the case was continued, owing to the fact that there were no witnesses present for Rodriguez and Jordan. The lawyer for the defendants moved half-heartedly for the dismissal of the charges. His argument was no persuasive enough to warrant dismissal of the charges. There are a few disturbing questions that ought to be answered. Why wasn't the prosecution ready with his witnesses? Were they prepared to convict Theresa and Bridget on the testimony of Rodriquez and Jordan? Why is it that until this day a proper investigation hasn't been done? Why is it that the University police advised Pat Waller that he couldn't sue his attackers in the Blue Wall?

The attitude of the University police should not be forgotten. The Black community should submit a formal request to Chancellor Bromery for an investigation of the officers involved and the university police in general.

A Police Department should be responsible to the community at large. They should be responsible enough to deal impartially with the case at hand, but the opposite has always been the case when Black students are involved.

In the name of the Commonwealth we demand justice!! In the name of the Commonwealth justice must be done!!!

This State didn't elect a Watergate ridden government and we hope that these kind of tactics will not be transferred to the State. It is the duties of all responsible members of this community to prevent this intrusion of corruption.

If the folks at Northampton by continuing the case, felt they dealt a blow to the defenders of justice then they have fooled themselves. The Black community and responsible members of the white community will continue to support Theresa and Bridget. We will turn out in on Tuesday and even if they clear the courtroom we will not leave. We are a people that transmit very powerful vibes which will penetrate the closed doors of Northampton District Court if necessary.

5-College basketball this weekend in Wope

This Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, just before Walt Frazier and Earl Monroe show Hondo, Jo Jo, and the rest of the Celtics team how the game of basketball is played, there will be some fine inter-collegiate basketball competition being staged to raise funds for the Third World Preschool and Daycare Programs, at UMass.

The tournament is being acclaimed as a veritable "shoot-out", and that's what it's going to be; "The Five-College Shoot-Out". It will feature teams from Hampshire College, Amherst College, the University of Massachusetts and teams representing Mount Holyoke and Smith.

This tournament will provide a chance for Shaka, the I.M. Champs, to prove they not only deserve the title of campus kings, but five-college kings. It is here that you'll be able to see whether or not Osibisa can handle the pressure of staking their reputations on their game. You'll be able to find out whether or not Amherst or Hampshire will single-handedly prove that all that fuss over everybody else was quite unnecessary, 'cuz when it's all over the trophies, the cheers and the congradulations will be theirs.

So, those of you who enjoy good, well played basketball and would like to contribute to a worthy cause, come to Wope Gymnasium (across from Graduate Research Center) on Friday April 19 from 4:30 - 8:00 PM., Sat. April 20 from 1:00 - 7:00 PM, and Sunday April 21 from 1:00 - 3:00. The question is "will the Knicks prove to be the SMOKERS we know they are?"

New Hampshire town to seek Onassis refinery

NEWMARKET, N.H. (AP) — Less than two months after being rejected in Durham, Aristotle Onassis is ready to try again to build a $600 million refinery in New Hampshire, an aide said yesterday.

In a special town meeting Tuesday, Newmarket residents voted, 644 to 526, to welcome such a refinery within their corporate limits. There are about 1,600 registered voters in this predominantly blue-collar town.

"Of course we are going to make a proposal," said Constantine Gratsos, president of Onassis' Olympic Refineries, Inc., which spent more than $2 million earlier this year trying in vain to convince voters in Durham to accept a refinery on Durham Point.

Durham, a college town next to Newmarket on Great Bay, has resisted industrialization for years. At their March 6 town meeting, Durham residents voted 2-1 to reject the Onassis proposal.

"We have started the ball rolling," said Gratsos, "so it would be ridiculous if we didn't try to build in Newmarket."

He said Olympic might use the same plans it developed for the 400,000-barrel-a-day refinery proposed for Durham.

But Gratsos said he would have to consult with his engineers before deciding whether the Durham plans could be adapted to Newmarket and could not predict when the proposal would be forthcoming.

State officials have said Newmarket would be suggested as a possible site if the townspeople indicated they would accept such a facility.

Gov. Meldrim Thomson, who has assigned aide Frederick Goode to help refineries locate in the state, met with Goode and his staff yesterday to discuss the election results.

"The resources of my office and staff will be available on request from Newmarket officials when they need assistance on this project," Thomson said.

The governor was a strong supporter of Olympic's Durham plans and has invited any oil company to consider New Hampshire as a potential site for a refinery. Save Our Shores SOS, one of the groups that organized opposition to the Durham project, said the margin of approval in Newmarket was no victory for refinery proponents.

Police commissioner only can prescribe weapons, court rules

BOSTON (AP) — The Suffolk Superior Court has ruled that only the police commissioner has authority to prescribe weapons carried by Boston police officers.

The April 12 ruling by Judge Francis J. Good, disclosed Wednesday, came in a suit filed by Boston City Councilor Albert L. O'Neil against Mayor Kevin H. White and Police Commissioner Robert di Grazia.

The suit charged that White and di Grazia refused to implement an ordinace passed by the council last December requiring all police cars to be equipped with shotguns.

"The ordinance is plainly an effort by the City Council to overstep its authority and invade the business of the operation of the police department, which . . . was set aside for and specifically assigned to the police commissioner," Judge Good said in the ruling.

Police push tightening of gun control

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — State and municipal police led advocates of stricter gun control legislation in urging Rhode Island's General Assembly to adopt a proposed bill.

About 20 witnesses testified before the House Judiciary Committee Tuesday in support of the bill. Opponents of the measure will be heard by the committee Thursday.

Displaying a sawed-off shot-gun and a sawed-off rifle confiscated from fugitives, Sgt. Paul Chalko, armorer of Providence police, said, "I know about guns. I work with guns, but I'm afraid to walk the streets. There's too many guns out there."

Also offering support for the bill were Col. Walter E. Stone, superintendent of state police, Col. Walter McQueeney, police chief in Providence, and Cranston Police Cmdr. Raymond Shannon, representing the Commissioned Police Officers Association.

"The need for additional control in the sale and use of handguns is clear," said state police Lt. Edward Pare, speaking for Stone. Since 1961, he said, 750 police officers have been killed by handguns. Shannon said handguns were involved in 55 per cent of the 19,000 homicides committed in 1972. In that same year, he said, there were 3,000 accidental gun deaths and another 200,000 accidental gun injuries along with 10,000 suicides, the majority caused by handguns.

"It always happens to somebody else, someplace else, until it happens to you',, said Mrs. Lillian Potter, president of Hangun Alert, Inc., an organization formed to promote reponsible gun control policy.

Scientists study pigeon population

JAMESTOWN, R.I. (AP) — Two Rhode Island scientists are using a rusting lighthouse on Narragansett Bay as a "natural laboratory" to discover the secrets of what looks like a birth control system for a pigeon colony in the abandoned beacon.

Up to six-inches of disease-carrying guane cover the floors of the old Plum Point Lighthouse. But Dr. Frank Heppner and State Fisheries Biologist David Preble continue their research on the pigeon population control mystery.

Dr. Heppner, associate zoology professor at the University of Rhode Island and Preble, a former student of Heppner's, discovered the colony during a pleasure outing three years ago. Heppner says the lighhouse went out of business in 1940 with the opening of the Jamestown Bridge whose lights mark the bay's west passage at night.

As the lighthouse deteriorated, birds took roost. During the first year of observation, the scientists found that the pigeons deserted about 40 per cent of their eggs, apparently to compensate for the lack of predators on the island, Heppner said. Only 43 per cent of the eggs that year survived to become adult pigeons, he said.

Last year, the scientists became predators, taking 20 per cent of the eggs shortly after they were laid. The pigeons compensated by dramatically reducing the desertion level for the remaining eggs, he said, and with a milder 1973 winter, about 48 per cent of the eggs reached adulthood.

"We're sure it isn't something where the birds all sit around and have a mass meeting, to decide how to keep up their population levels, Heppner said. The answer probably is "some simple sensory business" that tells the pigeons how many effs they have, he explained. This year, the scientists plan to take 40 per cent of all the eggs and record the pigeons' reactions, he said.

NUKE tower under guard

NORTHFIELD, (AP) — Northeast Utilities officials have a 24-hour guard at a weather observation tower on Northfield Mountain here.

Officials said the precautions were taken following rumors that the tower might be the target of vandals and a report by local police that a guard heard voices near the tower early Saturday.

An identical weather tower at the site of a proposed $1.35 billion nuclear plant in Montague was destroyed in February when the tower's supports were lossened.

Samuel H. Lovejoy, 27, of Montague, is charged with malicious destruction of personal property in that incident.

Nobody goes to France just to ride the railroads.

But when the wise ones get there, and want to get from one place to the next, the way they get around is by train.

The fact is, French trains give you more than comfort and convenience, more than speed and a window on the world. They give you value. For even in a day when almost everything is going up except the dollar. French trains are still one of the greatest transportation buys in the world.

Because distances from Paris are short, French trains go everywhere. To the medieval mysteries of Vezelay (163 miles, $13.50) and Carcassonne (503 miles, $41.00). To the Provence of Gaughin and van Gogh (486 miles, $39.50). To the vineyards of the Cote d'Or (220 miles, $18.50) and the sparkling sun of the Cote d'Azur (660 miles, $53.50). To castles and cathedrals. To Alps and oceans. To monuments of the Romanesque and Renaissance. To all the hidden corners of a country haunted by history and enriched by centuries of civilization.

Paris, of course, is Paris. But France is more. And it's all connected by 25,000 miles of track, more than 4,000 stations, and many hundreds of sleek, swift trains that will pamper you, feed you, even bed you down. While they whisk you from here to anywhere in no more than a few relaxing hours.

So if you really want to see France, see France by train. And see how economical great travel can be. While you're at it, ask about our other travel bargains—a 1st Class Eurailpass, or the 2nd Class Student-Railpass. For tickets and reservations, get in touch with your travel agent, or nearest French National Railroads office, 610 Fifth Avenue, New York 10020; 11 East Adams Street, Chicago 60603; 9465 Wilshire Blvd., Beverly Hills 90212; 323 Geary St., San Francisco 94102; 2121 Ponce de Leon Blvd., Coral Gables 33134. Also in Toronto and Montreal.

Please send me literature describing how to get the most value out of my trip to France.

UNIVERSITY YEAR FOR ACTION (UYA) is beginning its sixth program year at UMASS and is working to expand experiential educational opportunities for the students of the Five-College area. UYA has designed the UMASS 200 Practicum and special experiential education opportunities for students seeking to integrate within their academic programs a full year internship placement at public and community service agencies.

UYA Volunteers earn credits and receive a stipend while working full-time in a UYA sponsored agency in a pre-professional placement serving the needs of the citizens of Western Massachusetts.

The UYA Program invites all capable undergraduate and graduate students to apply for Phase VI Volunteer positions to begin on 17 June 1974 and continue for one year. Students from the professional schools are especially encouraged to apply because these students can apply their knowledge of an area in their placement in the community. A few positions may be open for a shorter term of service.

UYA Offers a full year of academic credit a living allowance medical insurance
optional life insurance

EXPERIENTIAL EDUCATION IN PRE-PROFESSIONAL PLACEMENTS

Students have many options to earn the 30 credits needed for undergraduates to participate in UYA. Some students arrange special credits through independent study, evening seminars, tutorials, practicums, internships, reading courses, field related coursework and "learning contracts". Students may also elect to take 1-15 credits of UMASS 200 Practicum which is the new arrangement passed by the Faculty Senate permitting students to receive credits for field experience.

The College of Arts and Sciences also offers a special 6 credit pass-fail interdisciplinary block in the Social and Behavioral Sciences for UYA Volunteers during the Fall and Spring semesters. This block is divided into eleven (11) sub-sections to more closely align the course work with the actual field placement.

Students will have the opportunity on Thursday night to meet and talk with agency representatives concerning the following tentative placements:
Area Activity Coordinator
Health-Nutrition Worker
Neighborhood Caseworker
Legal Assistants:
  Mental Health Law
  Housing Law
  Welfare Law
  Consumer Law
  Family Law
Industrial Mgt. Research Assistant
Adaptive Equipment Specialist
Psychology Assistant
Student Court practicum Supervisor
Sensorimotor Specialist
Skill's Trainee
Teacher of Remedial Education
Teacher of English as a Second Language
Cultural Program Director
Youth Worker
Education Coordinator
Project Director
Community Educator
Administrative Assistant for Planning and Evaluation
Administrative Assistant for Medical and Educational Services
Family Services Coordinator
Housing Resources Coordinator
Public Information and Resource Coordinator Rehabilitation Counselor
Correctional Caseworker
Housing Community Relations-Education Coordinator
TV Production Assistant
Job Placement Counselor
Executive Administrative Assistant
Preschool Families Services Specialist
Consumer Awareness Counselor
Tenant Grievance Specialist
Family Development Worker
Research and Program Developer
Community Relations and Educational Coordinator
Elderly Services Coordinator
Housing Specialist
Economic Development Specialist
Volunteer Coordinator

If you have a sincere commitment for positive change and are seeking alternatives through experiential education, come to the Agency Orientation meeting TONIGHT at 7:30 p.m., Room 116, School of Business Administration.

If you are interested in UYA, but unable to attend this important meeting, call the UYA Office at 545-1381.

Mass PIRG reports

The bottle ban

Last week: Mass PIRG reports looked at the PIRG's Lifeline bill, currently before the Mass. legislature, which would give the small and moderate user of electricity relief from the rapidly-rising cost of electricity.

No-deposit—No-return beverage containers have become an institution in American society. To be reminded of the 'sucess' of 'throwaway' packaging, one only needs to take a short drive, a walk in the woods, or a trip to a beach, campground, or park. Bottles, cans, fliptops, bottle-caps, and broken glass are strewn everywhere.

Thusfar only two of the fifty states have done anything to curb the unnecessary use of 'throwaways'. On October 1, 1972, the State of Oregon passed into law a bill requiring a deposit on all soft-drink, malt, and beer containers. The law allows a somewhat lower deposit on containers that meet certification requirements set by the Liquor Control Commission, in an attempt to phase out the use of no-deposit—no-return containers and encourage the use of returnable bottles that can be used by more than one bottler. The law also prohibits outright the sale of cans with flip-tops.

In 1973, the State of Vermont passed a similiar bill regulating the use of no-deposit containers in that state. Due to large-scale, professional lobbying done by national bottlers and canners, the Vermont law was somewhat weaker than the successful Oregon law and experienced some problems because of this. Last month, however, the law was strengthened, in spite of industry pressure because of its popularity among the citizens and its noticeable effect on litter.

A number of similiar bills filed in Massachusetts this year would give this state such a 'bottle-ban' law. Mass PIRG presented testimony on March 11 before the Committee on Natural Resources and Agriculture in support of House No. 1460 and No. 4122 — the two bills that most closely match the model of the Oregon law.

The most visible effect of the increased use of 'throw-away' beverage containers is, of course, a drastic increase in litter. Beverage containers are designed to catch the eye of the shopping consumer; unfortunately, the bright colors that stand out on the supermarket shelves are even more noticeable against a background of natural surroundings.

Broken, jagged glass and knife-sharp flip-tops never corrode and will long remain a sparkling reminder of our modern thoughtlessness.

In 1973, Massachusetts spent $1,285,231 to clean up the trash along state highways. A large percentage of that trash was 'throw-away' containers. After the Oregon law had been in effect for a full year, Gov. Tom McCall claimed that litter along the state's highways had decreased 75 per cent.

At a time when Americans are daily reminded of an 'energy crisis' the continued manufacture of 'throwaways' is absurd. Nonreturnable bottles consume over three times more energy per gallon than returnable bottles re-used 8-11 times (bottlers usually expect a returnable bottle to make 15-25 trips). Bimetal cans use 2.7 times more energy per gallon than returnable bottles. A nation-wide complete switch to returnable containers would conserve 50-85 per cent of the current consumption to produce containers.

The switch in Oregon from 50 per cent to 95 per cent returnables has resulted in an energy savings sufficient to heat the homes of slightly over 2 per cent of Oregon's population of 2,100,000 for a year.

A switch back to the use of returnable containers would reduce significantly the amount of garbage at public landfills and cut the amount of money used in its disposal. Some 8.8 million tons of beer and soft-drink containers were produced and discarded in the US in 1972. This figure is equal to 21 per cent of all packaging wastes and 7 per cent of all household and commercial waste. Nationally, the outlawing of 'throwaways' would make possible a reduction of about 80 per cent of this total, or a decrease of more than 6 million tons of solid waste.

The manufacture of beverage containers in 1972 used 6.2 million tons of glass, 2 million tons of steel, and 545,000 tons of aluminum — 6 per cent of the total consumption of these materials in the US. If the beverages had been packaged in returnable containers at the same rate as they had been in 1959, for example, (when 98 per cent of the soft-drink and 58 per cent of the beer containers were returnable) there would have been more than a 50 per cent savings of these materials. A complete switch back to returnables would result in an even further conservation of these natural resources.

Where do these important bills stand now? The action (or lack of action) on the part of the legislature concerning these bills is indicative of how they handle issues in general and environmental issues in particular.

The Committee on Natural Resources hearing on March 11 received quite a bit of media coverage. The governers of both Oregon and Vermont appeared to testify in support of the bills. Besides Mass PIRG (who submitted 5 pages of testimony) there were a number of other environmental groups and concerned citizens at the hearing. Testimony began in the morning and lasted until 7 o'clock that evening; there was no time for an executive session to be held and therefore no decision was made as to what to do with the bills.

If you'd like to do something, write to your senators and representatives (Senator Olver of Amherst is on the committee) and let them know how you feel about this important environmental legislation.

There is even more at stake here than a cleaner environment. Julian McCaull, in an article in Environment magazine, concerning 'bottle-ban' bills wrote, "At stake for the public is whether the legislative process can provide stimulus for environmentally sound technology, or whether commercial profit motive alone will determine the dimensions of technology."

Next week: Mass PIRG's support of Senate Bill No. 197 — the maiden name bill.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

For me, the intensity of Scorpio is represented by Picasso and Katharine Hepburn. Here is the eighth sign, signifying the occult, secrets, sex, money that works and digs and brings dirt and sunshine. Scorpio is concentration a la Burt Lancaster and Richard Burton. It also is the research of a Jonas Salk, and the planet is revolutionary Pluto and green mingled with reddish brown. Scorpio is the competitiveness of Bob Gibson, Billie Jean King and the class of Stan Musical and Tom Seaver. Scorpio is fight and jealously and the rough riding of Theodore Roosevelt. Here, too, is procreation and the Margaret Mead understanding of living. The stumble and rumble of life is present and often depicted by the Scorpio of Eugene Ionesco.

Star Break

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You find truth somewhat obscured, but you get your hand on it and it can work to your advantage. Financial gain is indicated. Accept responsibility. Don't sell yourself short. One at a distance may be confused. Be present for personal participation.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Puzzle pieces fall into place. Your goal is in sight. Some of your fondest hopes, wishes are fulfilled. Romance, creativity are featured. You reach more persons. Horizons broaden. You need not be painted into emotional corner. Expand!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You require aid from one in authority. It is forthcoming if you act in confident, creative, indepentent manner. Leo, Aquarius persons could play significant roles. Prestige is on the line. Get off the sidelines and into the game.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Good news indicated in connection with writing, publishing and advertising. Ideas can be developed into solid concepts. Avoid excess. Eschew drugs unless specifically advised by physician. Personal foresight is on target.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Relaxation of tensions is featured. You hav more room. Exciting contacts are featured. Social meeting develops into meaningful relationship. Gemini, Sagittarius persons are in picture. You will go places and do things.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Lie low. Let others show their hands. Study legal procedures, implications and possible complications. Be frank. Don't seek excuses. Say what you mean in reasonable manner. Then others will respond accordingly. Work on improving public relations.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Low-key approach is best — don't attempt to intimidate persons or force issues. You are due for surprise which encompasses variety, possible travel. Employment picture will be more pleasant. One who annoyed you will be reprimanded.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Good fortune comes hurtling toward you. Be ready. Means don't be so surprised that you go off on an extravagant binge. Much of what you want becomes available. Know what to do when requests are fulfilled. Member of opposite sex figures prominently.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may be seeing what is not actually present. Key now is to understand difference between illusion and actuality. Don't become victim of wishful thinking. Pisces, Virgo persons are likely to be involved. Special television appearance could be on agenda.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): One behind the scenes pulls strings — which could snap. Know it and assume personal responsibility for actions. Short trip, visit involving relative could be featured. Promises made may be sincere but could lack substance. You are subject to pressure — but you will win.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You expand area of interest through special collection. You become known to more persons and find outlet for creativity, enthusiasm. Aries, LIbra persons could play significant roles. Pursue projevt to completion.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Specific gains are made — you get credit for what you do. You also get a new, more productive deal. Highlight independence, originality. Be with persons who excite, inspire. Leo, Aquarius could be in picture.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you will find that life seems more worth living, starting with October.

GE, GM defend themselves against energy criticisms

NEW YORK (AP) — Two of the giants of U.S. industrial life are showing their bruises from the energy controversy and are fighting their critics with unusually blunt accusations.

Says General Electric: "Appliances are not wasteful users of energy as the public has been led to believe." That belief, claim GE executives, is the result of "misinformation...and downright bad advice."

General Motor's outrage is directed at what it feels are smears contained in a booklet distributed by a Senate subcommittee alleging, among other things, that GM destroyed thriving street railway systems.

"General Motors did not destroy street railway systems," the company said in a 67-page reply. "They failed everywhere because they were no longer able to give adequate service."

It adds that the publication, distributed by the Senate subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly, "is replete with additional false and deceptive statements."

Neither company is likely to change attitudes immediately, but their claims seem to open a phase of the energy controversy in which opposing views might be better analyzed and the objective truths distilled from them.

One of the popular assumptions about the shortage is that the proliferation of electric appliances, such as toothbrushes and self-cleaning ovens and the like are among the chief culprits.

But, says GE, a self-cleaning overn uses only slightly more electricity than a conventional oven.

A statement released here in March said:

"It is essential to recognize that the 300 million major appliances presently in use consume a small fraction of our total energy. Only about 5 per cent of the total energy supply is being used in the home..."

GM's anger was made known to the subcommittee in the form of a request to suspend distribution of what it terms a false, misleading document. If that document is distributed again, it asked that GM's position accompany it.

The chief causes for GM's anger were assertions that:

—GM aided the Nazis during World War II through its subsidiary, the Adam Opel Co. After the German invasion of Poland, GM claims, it had little effective control of Opel decisions.

—GM helped supress rail transportation.

Role of insects

Scientists and educators will meet tomorrow and Friday at the Northfield Inn to explore the role of insects as biological model systems in science education.

The Entomological Society of American and three UMass groups are sponsoring the conference. They are the Department of Entomology, the College of Food and Natural Resources and the School of Education.

Secondary school teachers, entomologists from UMass and elsewhere, educational administrators and others will attend. The major objectives are to study the past and present utilization of insects as biological models in science education, to identify resources now available in this area and to investigate the forming of a resources center to provide programs, information and guidance in the area.

Sessions will begin at 1 p.m. and will continue through noon Friday, April 19.

College environment: A helpful place?

UMass is cooperating with Boston College, Brandeis University, Hampshire College, M.I.T., and the University of Massachusetts at Boston in a research project that was designed to determine whether these campuses are helpful and encouraging places for undergraduates. The research asks whether there is a difference in the effects of the environment on women students and men students.

A special questionnaire was developed that will be used on all the participating campuses. A randomly selected group of Freshmen and of Seniors will be asked to provide the information for the research. The students can help their own institution by giving answers to questions about the attitudes and services and facilities on their campuses. All answers are confidential and the results will be pooled and analyzed. Only the final analyses will be presented to members of the cooperating institutions so that they may, where needed, improve their campuses.

Each of the institutions in the project is coeducational and has an administration that is staffed predominantly by men. It has been suggested that this is indicative of one of the subtle barriers to the advancement of women in a wide range of careers. The suggestion needs to be tested to determine whether these barriers do exist, and if so, to identify precisely what they are. What portion of women, and for that matter, of men are affected by them? In what ways?

The research is supported by part of a two-year $400,000 grant from the Carnegie Corporation to the project, Women and Career Options. Few people realize that they have hundreds of career options open to them once they have completed their B.A. or M.A. or Ph.D degree. The evidence shows that the majority of women enter very few fields. The purpose of the project is to encourage undergraduate students, especially women, to consider the full spectrum of careers before deciding on a major, or before committing themselves to a graduate or professional program.

'Russia': A film tonight

There will be a showing of a color documentary film, Russia, to be followed by discussion by the film's producer-director, Theodore Holcomb at 8 p.m. tonight in 231, Herter Hall. This is the first and only uncensored film study of the Soviet Union, and is extraordinary in that Holcomb was allowed to spend eighteen months and to cover 17,000 miles in the country while making it. Subsequent efforts by Soviet officials to destroy the film were unsuccessful. It has run commercially to unusually favorable reviews, as have other documentaries by Holcomb.

Swim sculpture to splash

The Visual Art Committee will present a sculptural event entitled WATERFIELDS 1974 by Robert Morgan. The event will occur tonight at 8 PM in the North Pool at WOPE. Morgan's "swim sculpture" is based upon a unique graphic score that indicates a series of repeatable water-actions "within the context of several tons of water." The context of a swimming pool is here used instead of the traditional art gallery where sculptures and paintings are often seen.

The various sequences include swimming parabolic lines from one edge of the pool to another, diving into the water at repeated intervals, swimming laps across the width of the pool or diagonally from one corner to another. These actions are emphasized or interpreted by the sound of brass (cymbals and a gong) as the forms evolve through the performances of the swimmers and musicians. WATERFIELDS 1974 is based on a concept which the artist has been working with over the past few years. It is primarily a method of dealing with sculpture as an event in contrast to a static form. There will be no charge to see it.

Dear Aggie: Hot and cold romance

Got a problem? Tell it to Aggie, the Collegians exclusive advice columnist. Send or bring letters to The Collegian, Student Union Bldg., UMass, Amherst.

Dear Aggie,

This is a serious problem. You don't have to answer it. If you want, you can just publish it and ask for comments or any other kind of feedback and then publish that. I'd really like to know if any other woman or man has been in a similar situation.

I have been seeing this guy for a few months now. Our relationship hasn't really developed all that much. He's off-campus and we just see each other occasionally. There is no formal commitment, but we do enjoy each other's company and always make at least tentative plans to see again.

At the beginning, when we first started seeing each other, I though about him all the time and was always anxious to see him. As his feelings toward me started to become stronger and more clearly defined (in my mind) I started not being so anxious to see him. Actually I run hot and cold. Sometimes I really miss him and other times I could care less whether I ever see him again. I'm really confused. It's very frustrating not knowing your own feelings. If you have any comments, I'd be glad to hear them.

Hot + Cold - Lukewarm?

Dear H + C,

I don't know about anyone else, but I do know that I have shared those same feelings and have also given the matter great thought. I can't give you any advice because I know as much about the subject as you do. But I can share my thoughts with you.

During those times that I could care less if I saw the guy, I was completely sure that I should just not see him again. Of course he knew nothing of these feelings or thoughts. Oftentimes I would wish that we could have a sort of trial period — just not seeing each other for a while and then see what kind of feelings I had about it. But of course that was always impossible. If those feelings of not caring continued for a long period of time, then I would know for sure that I didn't "like" him anymore and would then tell him so. It was always those little feelings that would pop into me every now and then which turned my head around. "Why is this happening to me?" is what I would think. "I thought I knew myself!"

So I start thinking of all the possibilities that this relationship could be developing into. "Maybe I just don't like him anymore. It's as simple as that, and those little twinges or strong feeling I feel for him are just the aftermath. Or maybe I'm afraid he's getting scared off. But you'd think you'd know when you were getting scared off, now, wouldn't you? Or maybe I'm getting to like him too much and what's resulting is a reverse reaction." But I usually throw this idea out. The main thought that prevails is that I'm getting not to "like" the guy anymore and in time this feeling will be the predominant one and those little twinges will just sort of die out. I can't give any advice as I said before, but if I had anything to say about it at all it would be to wait and let time take its toll. You know the old adage, "Time will tell."

Give till it helps.

What's the story?

Bachelor degree number 2

WHAT'S THE STORY? is a regular feature in the Collegian designed to answer your questions, respond to your gripes, and ease your confusion or desperation.

If there's something bugging you lately and the cause of the problem is even remotely related to the University system, I can help you. Just record your question or gripe on the back of a Bazooka bubble gum comic or any other available piece of scrap paper and drop it in the WHAT'S THE STORY? wall box located at the entrance to the University Store or just deliver it to the Ombudsman's Office (919 Campus Center).

Please use this column to your advantage. I need your questions to make it work so flood the box with queries.

Q. I've heard that the University has a program for students who wish to earn a second Bachelor's Degree. Is this true? If so, how do I get in?

A. You've heard correctly about this program. The place to go to find out the details is the Admissions Office in Whitmore and the person to see is Ms. Maryann Pernell.

The requirements for admissions to this program are: (1) a first Bachelor's Degree, (2) a Q.P.A. of at least a 2.0 upon graduation from your first college or university.

Persons who have acquired their first degree from UMass are required to earn a minimum of 30 departmental credits in residence for a second degree. If, however, your specific department requires more, it is the department's regulations which you must follow. Graduates of schools other than UMass are required to earn a minimum of 45 credits with the same stipulation regarding specific department regulations.

One last stipulation: only Massachusetts residents are eligible for admission. In accordance with UMass policy which allows 95 per cent in-state undergraduate enrollment and only 5 per cent out-of-state, preference is given to out-of-state freshman and transfer students pursuing a second degree.

As for procedure to be followed: After your application is filed through Admissions, it is transfered to the advisor of the department in which you are interested, accompanied by your college transcript. If the application and your credentials are acceptable, you will be asked to attend a personal interview. The departmental advisor is responsible for the final decision.

Warning: Whereas the maximum number of applications for any past semester has been sixty, be forewarned that 180 applications have been submitted for this coming school year. This will have some bearing on your chances for admission.

Drop me a line soon!

Golfers host tough HC, BC

By RICH SEVIERI

The UMass golfers may feel like the referee in a Hatfield and McCoy feud when they host Boston College and Holy Cross in a tri-match today (1 p.m.) at Hickory Ridge Country Club.

The two Jesuit affiliated schools are the bitterest of rivals. The Minutemen will not only have to beat each team individually but also compete against a rivalry that will produce the best from its foes.

"Both were good clubs last year," said Coach Fan Gaudette. "Holy Cross lost only two players from their starting seven, and could be real tough."

Coach Gaudette plans one change from the starting lineup that defeated a strong Yale team in its opening match last week. Kenny Stawasz will get a chance to earn a spot on the starting seven.

Howard Turban and Joe Artman, who had 76 and 78 respectively against Yale will be in the number one and two spots. Gaudette is high on both these players and rates them among the best of the New England collegiate crop.

Hickory Ridge C.C. is in fair-good shape after drying out from last week's snowstorm. The high winds of Monday and Tuesday helped transform the fairways from sink sponges to playable. The tees and greens have all been cut, but the course will still play long due to the residual water.

"It will be good to play at home at last," said Gaudette. "Compared to playing at Yale we should be a lot stronger. But golf is a strange game and anything can happen when you play BC and Holy Cross."

Staff photo-Joe Martins

JOE ARTMAN and the rest of the UMass golf squad face BC, HC and a soggy course today.

Carbo, Monty, Yaz shine Sox triumph in eighth,4-3

NEW YORK (AP) — Bernie Carbo and Bob Montgomery drove in eighth-inning runs yesterday, lifting the Boston Red Sox to a 4-3 victory over the New York Yankees and Pat Dobson, who had pitched no-hit ball for six innings.

Juan Beniquez opened the eighth with a double and went to third when right-fielder Walt Williams throw hit him on the batting helmet. Carbo singled Beniquez in to give Boston a 3-2 lead, and Sparky Lyle replaced Dobson, 1-1. Carbo went to third on Carl Yastrzemski's single and scored on Montgomery's sacrifice fly.

The Red Sox tied the game 2-2 in the seventh. Dobson lost his no-hitter and shutout when Yastrzemski hit his fourth home run of the season over the right-field fence.

Bob Montgomery flied out, Cecil Cooper singled and went to third on Dick McAuliffe's hit-and-run single. Doug Griffin's bunt single got the tying run home. Dobson escaped further trouble by striking out Mario Guerrero and Tommy Harper.

The Yankees nicked Bill Lee for a pair of runs in the second inning, helped by some sloppy Boston fielding. Thurman Munson led off with a double and remained at second as Lou Piniella beat out a grounder to deep short.

Munson went to third on a fly ball by Bill Sudakis. He broke for home on Graig Nettles' bouncer back to Lee and would have been an easy out at the plate, but Lee elected to try for an inning-ending double play and threw high to second for an error. Piniella scored the second run on a wild throw by shortstop Guerrero attempting to complete a double play on Gene Michael's grounder back to Lee.

The Yankees made it 4-3 in the last of the ninth with a run on an error and singles by Lou Piniella and Bill Sudakis.

Crimson outmatches chimps JV stickmen lose, 11-3

By TOM CROWLEY

The JV Lacrosse team lost to the Harvard frosh yesterday, 11-3. Using a balanced scoring attack Harvard scorched the UMies 8-2 in the second half.

The baby gorillas played a good first half, but turnovers and failures to capitalize on penalties crippled them. The passing game was also poor.

Harvard was faster than the Minutemen, but still the squad showed improvement over the Brown game.

Dave Lewis scored the only goal of the first half unassisted and assisted on John May's score in the second half. Joe Hickenson scored the other UMass goal with an assist to Dave Allott. Tim Harney was very good in goal despite the score. Joe Perry started his first game on defense and did a decent job. The second midfield also performed very well.

Harvard wasn't pushed around like Brown was, and was almost pushing UMass around.

Attackmen MacKenzie, White, Clemson, and Chase were the big scorers for the Ivies. The next JV Lacrosse game is against Dean Junior College next Saturday at 2:00 across from Boyden.

Bruins rested for fired up Chicago

BOSTON (AP) — The mighty Boston Bruins, determined to make amends for frustration during the regular National Hockey League season, meet the Chicago Black Hawks tonight in the opener of the Stanley Cup semifinal play-off.

Four years ago, the Bruins swept the Hawks in four straight in the second round of the playoffs and went on to win the Stanley Cup, hockey's most coveted prize.

However, the best-of-seven post-season series between the two old rivals figures to be much closer this time around.

Led by super star goalie Tony Esposito, the Hawks frustrated the Bruins during the regular season. Chicago won two games and tied the other three in five meetings. And the Hawks proved they are no strangers in Boston Garden, winning 2-1 and tying 2-2.

The Bruins were able to give their top men — Espositio, Orr, Hodge and others — a rest after completing the sweep against Toronto Sunday night. However, everybody was in uniform for a stiff practice Wednesday in preparation for Chicago. The Hawks, who outscored Los Angeles only 10-7 in a tough series completed Tuesday night, flew to Boston Wednesday and rested.

The second game of the series will be played in Boston either Saturday or Sunday. The two teams then will move to Chicago for the next two games.

MIKE KOPERNIAK SLIDES home safely after Springfield shortstop Joe Herdemian bobbled Jerry Mondalto's grounder in sixth inning action yesterday. UMass lost, 11-8.

Allegrezza, UMass tripped up; SC wins slugfest, 11-8

By MIKE BROPHY

Gary Sanderson's eighth inning home run brought UMass within three but was not enough as the Minutemen dropped their second straight contest, by a score of 11-8, to the Springfield Chiefs at Earl Lorden Field yesterday.

The two-run shot was the highlight of an attempted UMass comeback after the pitching staff had surrendered 10 runs in a less-than-satisfactory outing.

"I like the way we were able to come back with the use of our bench," said Coach Dick Bergquist, "but we just plain gave too many runs away on plays that should have been DP's, and things like that."

The surprise of the day came from Springfield as Coach Archie Allen shuffled his players to fill the starting line-up. Canadian Kevin Keith clobbered UMass pitching collecting four hits in as many at bats, with a homerun, a double, and two singles.

"He's a pitcher," exclaimed Allen after the game, "and I just stuck him out there to see what he could do for me in the outfield."

The first five slots in the line-up for UMass, Mike Joyce, Gary Sanderson, Pete Backstrom, Mike Kpoperniak, and Ron Beaurivage, provided the hitting punch as they collected seven of the squad's total of eight hits.

Backstrom led all hitters with three for five while also driving home two runs, one on his solo homer in the seventh.

After taking the lead on an unearned run in the bottom of the third, the Minutemen then lost their grip on the situation and the momentum went the way of the wind, which was blowing into the SC dugout for most of the afternoon.

Coach Bergquist lifted Allegrezza in favor of John Olson in the sixth, only to see his big righty get shelled for five runs while retiring but one batter. "John is on the way back and looked to be throwing with more ease out there. He just doesn't have the speed yet and seemed to be throwing an awfully flat curve today," said Bergquist.

Racqueteers slay NY, then NH

By GLENN POSTER

Despite strong winds on Tuesday afternoon, the UMass tennis team defeated the State University of New York at Albany by the score of 7-2. That was only the beginning. Returning home yesterday, the Minutemen won again by a 7-2 count, this time making the University of New Hampshire the victim.

On Tuesday the team captured all but one of the singles matches. Bob Schpeiser and Barnaby Kalan each won in straight sets. Other singles triumphs were recorded by Don Douglas, Mark Brass, and Dave Abramoff. Brass had a tough time with socres of 6-1, a 6-7 tiebreaker, and 6-4. On the other hand, Kalan won 6-1, 6-2. In doubles competition the Minutemen took two out of three as the Schpeiser-Douglas and Brass-Kalan teams each posted 6-0, 6-2 scores. But the match was clinched in singles by Abramoff.

Yesterday, UMass had to win at least one doubles match in order to defeat the Wildcats from UNH. Second seed Don Douglas played singles as if his car were doubled parked, topping UNH's Bill Powers 6-0, 6-1. Fred Barley, Mark Brass, and Barnaby Kalan were the other singles winners, all in straight sets. Bob Schpeiser, playing in the number one slot — a position he has been in each match thus far, lost to UNH's top seed, Rich Kirwan 6-3, 1-6, 4-6.

In doubles, the Minutemen swept all three matches. The Schpeiser-Douglas tandem won 6-1, 6-2. Brass and Kalan won in the second slot 7-5, 6-4 and Barley Abramof came out on top 6-4, 7-5.

Coach Steve Kosakowski thought that it was a "good match." I was especially pleased with the play of the third doubles team. Barley got back on the inning track." (Fred won in both singles and doubles after dropping both at Albany on Tuesday.

LOVE LOBS — The Minutemen now sport a 4-1 record on the season. UNH, now 0-2, was not really much competition. They lost their opening match 9-0 to UConn. Today UMass will be seeking their fifth straight victory when they travel to Cambridge to take on the slide rules of MIT. They will complete a busy week on Friday at Springfield vs. American International.

Batwomen to go with experience

By DAVE VARG

With one week of practice time left, softball coach Carole Oglesby is making final preparations for the season's home opener against arch-rival Springfield College. She has decided to go into the campaign with her most experienced personnel.

The team won't be an overpowering club, but a running, scratching digging team.

The infield of Terry Puldo, Linda Lankowski, Karen Fruzzetti and Karen Dolphin appears potentially strong. Each is a good fielder with a strong arm.

The right side of the infield is small and quick. In fact, Puldo is short by most standards for a first baseman. But she's the best around if she can reach the ball according to Oglesby. Her quickness apparently compensates for her height.

Senior second-baseman Linda Lankowski is also short. But she is also quick and her glove is strong enough to earn her the spot.

The left side of the infield is potentially inpenetrable. Fruzzetti can field anything from a high line drive to a screaming grounder. But she's been hampered by inconsistency thus far. If she obtains her timing she can be unbeatable.

Third baseman Karen Dolphin has a sure glove and a good arm but she is not fleet-footed. So Dolph is forced to compensate by position and deceptiveness. Coach Oglesby says that she is phenomenal in playing a batter properly.

The outfield has looked comical at times, but yesterday Linda Caruso, Jenny Edminster and Sue Brophy were sharp. Misjudging fly balls and overrunning grounders has been quite common previous sessions but yesterday saw only perfection in the outfield.

Barb Doucet is as solid behind the plate as she is carefree off the field. B.D. has a great throwing arm, and is an excellent hitter also.

Diamond dunce test

How many foul balls did Ty Cobb hit in 1909?

Who cares? Well, besides from Ty Cobb, thousands of baseball fans do. And because of the diamond enthusiast's general eye for detail, baseball trivia quizzes are quite popular.

The trouble is, they're also quite difficult. So, for a change, here's a baseball quiz as easy as an exam in Remedial Raading 101.

This is a multiple choice test. Circle the word or phrase that best completes the sentence. If none of the choices are acceptable, throw a fit and go on to the next question.

1. Baseball was invented by: a) Abner Doubleday; b) Alexander Cartwright; c) Hoss Cartwright; d) Lorne Green.
2. Ex-Red Sox manager Eddie Kasko is now: a) third-base coach for Sewanee State; b) working as a hit man for the Mob; c) sulking; d) a South American dictator.
3. The Infield Fly Rule is: a) a law regulating the use of insecticides; b) the groundwork upon which our democracy is built; c) one thing that Bowie Kuhn takes a firm stand on; d) confusing.
4. Hank Aaron recently hit: a) the bottle; b) his wife; c) Babe Ruth; d) his 715th (some of these questions really do have answers!).
5. Baseballs are covered with: a) horsehide; b) cowhide; c) Mr. Hyde; d) Prudential insurance.
6. Darrell Johnson surprised everyone last month by: a) releasing Luis Aparicio and Orlando Cepeda; b) optioning his mother to Pawtucket; c) placing Tom Yawkey on waivers; d) trading Bob Bolin for what's in the box Jay is holding.
7. The top four pitchers for the UMass varsity are: a) Haldeman, Ehrlichman, Mitchell, and Dean; b) Groucho, Harpo, Chico, and Zeppo; c) planning a kidnaping; d) going to throw only low and away curves this year.
8. The color man on Red Sox telecasts is: a) Orson Welles; b) Johnny Pesky; c) a fine young man.
9. The winner of the ABC Superstars competition was: a) Jesus Christ; b) Helen Keller; c) Knute Rockne; d) Kyle Rote; e) Gomer Pyle.
10. What the last question has to do with baseball is: a) anyone's guess.
11. Fenway Park is famous for its: a) Leftfield Wall; b) Berlin Wall; c) Iron Curtain; d) lousy hot dogs.
12. The last major leaguer to hit four homers in one game was: a) Harmon Killebrew; b) Rocky Colavito; c) Slammer McGurski; d) some other guy with a tough-sounding name.
13. The last major leaguer to hit four sacrifice bunts in one game was: a) Horace Clarke; b) Wally Cox; c) Charlie Brown; d) also famous for setting the "most times left-handed pinch-runner thrown out stealing third base, career" with eighteen.
14. Steve Saraceno is: a) a two-time Pulitzer Prize winner; b) a regular guy; c) invaluable to the Collegian; d) the Boston Strangler; e) all of the above.
15. Anyone who does not score 100 per cent on this excuse for a column is: a) a fruitcake; b) a visitor from Pluto; c) a rabid curling fan; d) asleep.

New 'thon: pair-a-thon

We've all come in contact with telethons, phonothons, and the like, but now UMass has invented a new one: pair-a-thon.

The UMass pair-a-thon is a roadrace run on a 2.8 mile course, starting on the north side of Stadium Road near the intramural fields. Two runners, one male and one female make up a pair-a-thon team. Their scores are added together to determine placings in the event.

Last week's winning team was made up of Mark Elmer, a UMass graduate student, and Marion Larson, a twelve-year-old Amherst resident.

The pair-a-thon is run every Saturday at 2:00 p.m., with refreshments and prizes, the former for everyone and the latter for the top teams.

It's never been a problem getting men to run, and it's hoped that the pair-a-thon concept will induce more women to run.

CRIMSON FACES ARE RED as yet another UMass shot finds the net. The Gorillas had something to beat their chests about, as they overpowered the Harvards. 9-4.

McVey shines

Garber's gang, 9-4

By MIKE ELLIOT and BEN CASWELL

"It was a good game, not pretty, but a couple of fast breaks made us look good — we made a lot of mistakes," said Coach Dick Garber after his team defeated Harvard by a 9-4 margin.

Indeed, it looked as though the Gorillas were going to bury Harvard as they scored a goal in the first three minutes of the game. Attackman Harry McVey picked up the ball, danced around behind the Crimson net, came out front and tossed it in. That goal was the first of the game and the first of McVey's four goals on the day. After Pete Connolly scored on a scoopshot, Harvard netted their first goal. Then Steve Pappas collected a pass from McVey and blasted one by the Crimson goalie. McVey netted the fourth UMass goal on a repeat of Pappas' shot, with an assist to Spooner.

Pappas notched his second goal but Harvard came back with three quick goals to close the score to 5-4 at halftime.

The second half was all UMass as they outscored the Crimson 4-0. McVey took care of all the scoring as he put in two himself on good, around the net moves and assisted on the other two with the goals going to Spooner and Seidman on quick passes from Harry from behind the net. Spooner was stopped on two point-blank shots by the Harvard goalie Leroi Thompson and the quick netminder's play was what really kept Harvard in the game.

Even though the Gorillas scored 5 goals in the first half their play seemed lackadaisical at times. Their passing was off and they were not running as well as they should have been. They were having some trouble picking up loose balls and got a few unnecessary penalties. Midfielder Hirsch Seidman said," We were over-aggressive at times, not like in our other games and those penalties at the end of the first half broke our momentum. We picked it back up fairly well in the second half though."

UMass continued to get very steady performances from their freshmen players. Tim Murphy on defense, Steve Pappas, Terry Keefe, and Vinnie Lobello at midfield and Jeff Spooner at attack.

Gorillas are now 2-2. Next game is Saturday at Fairleigh-Dickinson. Next home game is April 25 versus Holy Cross.

Trackmen slaughter feline foes Vermont and UNH

By SCOTT HAYES

Despite a dropped baton on the first exchange of the 440 relay and the loss of Marshall Pendleton with a pulled hamstring, the UMass Track team rolled to its fifth and sixth straight victories by crushing New Hampshire and Vermont yesterday, 120-39-33.

Pendleton was injured while competing in the 220 trials, and the speedster won't be ready for the B.C. Relays. The fumble during the handoff in the 440 relay cost UMass two places as both UNH and UVM sped by.

Although the team will miss Pendleton, Barron Littlefield made his return to action a successful one. Littlefield, who had been out with an injury, came back to win the 880 after two weeks of recovery training.

The trackmen, who have swept their last three tri-meets, took advantage of the greater weather and came through with some fine performances. Jim Hennessey and Pete Famulari ran the 120-yard high hurdles in 14.7, while Devin Croft and Jack Maloney were impressive in the mile. Croft's time of 4:14 earned him the anchor leg on the distance-medley relay team that will be running at B.C.

Mark Hughes and Conrad Gees bettered their previous best of 6-1 by clearing 6-4 in the high jump. Steve Mason got off his best throw of the year in the discus and teammate Jim Shea upset Vermont's Devon Craig in the javelin with a throw of 202'.

Ken and Bob Adamson, Toney Pendleton, Larry Whitfield, Steve Crimmins and Mel Cobb, who picked up his first collegiate win, were the other first place finishers. The Adamson brothers and Pete Ryan combined to sweep the long jump and Bob Adamson, Mike Geraghty and Ryan swept the triple jump.

The best individual effort of the day was by Vermont's Mike Bilsza, a triple winner. Bilsza won the hammer at 148-8, the shot at 47-11 and the discus with a throw of 141-7.

VICTORY LAPS ... Tracksters are now 6-1 with two dual meets, Dartmouth and URI, remaining. Three team members will be leaving for the B.C. Relays a day early to compete in the decathlon. Dan Grigus, John Osborne and Pete Ryan will become the first UMass athletes to compete officially in the event when they enter the two day affair on Thursday. Thursday's event include the 100-meter dash, the long jump, shot put, high jump and 400-meter dash. Then on Friday, the decathlon, which requires varied ability and great endurance, concludes with the 110-meter high hurdles, the discus, pole vault, javelin and 1500-meter run.

UMass gymnastics teams went from nothing to nationals

The following is the first article in a series prepared by the Collegian sports investigating team on the phase-down of the men's gymnastics program, by the UMass Athletic Department.

By WALT POWERS

The UMass men's gymn team belongs to the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League. It is regarded by many to be the strongest of the six conferences in the NCAA. This past season UMass finished less than one point behind champion Penn State in the Eastern championship and for the second year in a row produced an NCAA All-American.

The UMass women's gymn team belongs to the Association of Intercollegiate Athletic Women and has never finished worse than sixth in a national championship meet, an event they won in 1973.

Both teams compete regularly against national-level competition and with the exception of Springfield College are far ahead of the rest of New England.

For a team to reach this level of competition usually requires years of preparation, and awesome funding. With gymnastics teams of UMass' calibre it is easy to assume that the program existed for years and just developed. It is easy to assume that the program was always established, and well funded, and that the difference between winning and losing was simply the difference between good and bad personnel.

That these assumptions are fallacious was graphically illustrated last week by the Athletic Department's phase-down of the men's program and the decision not to rehire Tom Dunn after the 1974-'75 season.

The decision was not a total surprise and this fact reflects the relative insecurity the program has worked against in its 18-year history. For despite its high level of achievement the team at best operated with little scholarship money and has never operated with the equivalent of a full-time coach, even though the high level of competition seemed to demand it.

It is impossible to understand the phase-down decision out of the context in which it developed. The decision was the result of a complex series of events that reflect on the history of both the men's and women's programs, the rapid growth of UMass in the sixties, and the rapid growth of both the UMass programs and gymnastics in general.

The following is a history of the men's and women's programs. The growth of both teams was interconnected and it was conflicts resulting over use of facilities after each team had reached national-level competition that bear indirectly on the eventual phase-down decision.

In 1956 UMass was a quiet, rustic land-grand college with a total enrollment of about 9,000! It was at that time that Dr. James Bosco, now presently the director of Physical Education of Sacramento State College in California, started the UMass men's gymnastics program.

The program operated at club level at first, but at approximately in the 1960-61 season, it became an official varsity sport. The team then was small, and competed as a New England independent.

Bob James was hired for the 1960-61 season, but his appointment was only temporary and he left the position after the 1961-62 season. He was replaced by former Springfield College gymnast Erik Kjeldsen. Kjeldsen could well have expected to hold the post for the nine years that he did, but he could never have imagined that those years would witness the most dramatic expansion in UMass history.

Kjeldsen's first gymn team shared Curry Hicks Cage with the basketball, track and wrestling teams along with weightlifers who worked out in the balcony. Boyden Athletic Building was only a year away from completion, however, and Erik Kjeldson was given control over the facilities they were to occupy in Boyden and the equipment they were to be furnished with. According to Kjeldsen, control over the use of Boyden Auxiliary Gymn was part of his employment agreement, and it was the violation of this agreement that precipitated his retirement in 1972.

That decision however, was still very far away. Among the equipment requisitioned for the new gymn was various women's apparrati. This may have puzzled a few people, because the women's gymnastics team was not recognized as a "women's sport" until 1964. At the time of Kjeldsen's hiring there was no modern women's gymnastics program of any kind at UMass but Kjeldsen's wife Kitty was about to institute a program that would experience the most dramatic growth of any sport in recent UMass history.

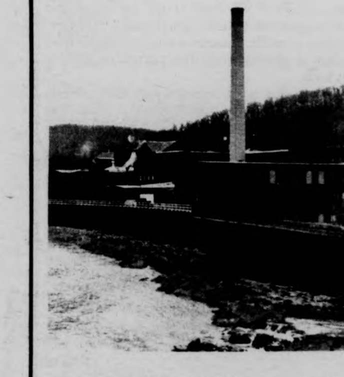
The Montague Power Play

The People vs. the people

By Mike Kostek



The Connecticut in Turners Falls, canal form, and its operator.

Until last fall, the Town of Montague was just another rustic hamlet, like Wendell, Leverett and Sunderland that was ... out there. Not much of a part of most of our lives. UMass students had no business with Montague, and as for the town of Montague, UMass was certainly a fuzzy notion to all but the town's citizens who drove the fifteen miles daily to their classes or Physical Plant or secretarial jobs. Last fall UMass heard a lot more about Montague, or at least saw the name that kept appearing in local headlines with the words 'Nuclear Power Plant' next to it.

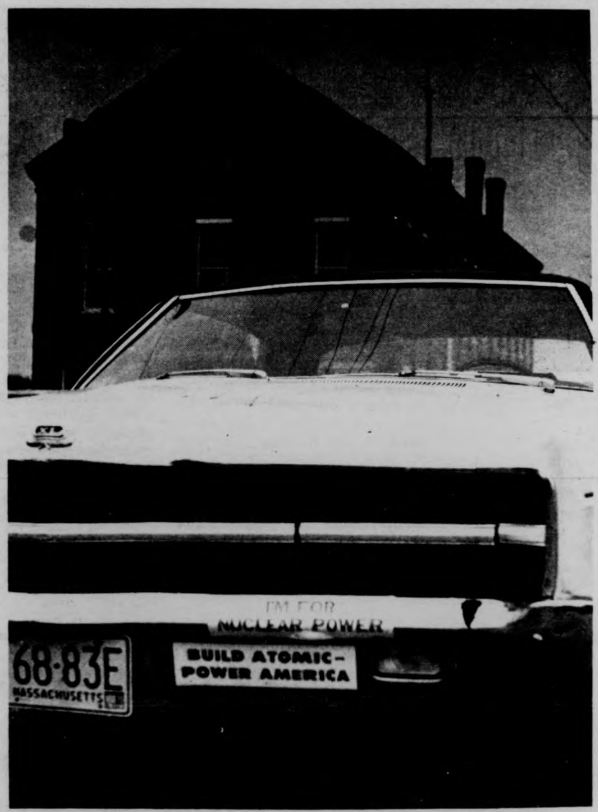
Lately, the University has come into Montague's thinking a lot more than before, and it certainly isn't in terms of great academic achievement or even the NIT basketball team.

The catalyst behind this sudden focusing of UMass on Montague and Montague on UMass is a 1.3 billion dollar enterprise proposed to open in 1983, long after most of the college's current population have left this area's concerns. And yet, the 25,000 people of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst have never been so interested in the 8,000 people of Montague. And never have the folks of Montague been as upset with the wards of the Commonwealth stationed at Amherst.

There is no real Montague that people live in. The 'Town of Montague' is a title that stretches over the five distinctly different villages that make up the overall town.

Turners Falls is the main everything for the town. Here is where Captain Turner is legend, being felled in 1676. The Connecticut River curves gracefully around the town, dividing it from first, Gill (home of little else besides Mt. Hermon prep school) and then Greenfield, the 'Hub' of the area. Route 2, out of Boston, joins Route 91, the North-South, Canada-Connecticut connector just across the river in Greenfield. Turners Falls sits on a series of three or four descending plateaus that meet the river.

It was the last of these plateaus that provided a comfortable nestle for Turners' main businesses: industry. To make things easier for the plants, an "industrial canal" was cut through the lowest plateau, parallel to the river, with about 75 per cent of the river sent through it. And quite an impressive row of plants lined the 300 foot strip between the river and the canal. Workers poured in from Canada and the primarily-Polish communities in the valley area. These two groups make up the bulk of the 99.8 per cent white population — the town is full of second generation Americans: the Richottes and the Bonnettes, the Simanskis and the Dejnaks. The mill owners had houses built on the hill overlooking the plants and the river to accommodate the new residents. A good deal (69.4 per cent) of Turners Falls is flats and apartment buildings built around this building boom time (1910-1940). It was these mills that really set Turners apart from the other, primarily farming villages.



Montague tools up for its dream power push.

All broke down in Lake Pleasant.

The Downtown area also developed, with unusually wide sidewalks and main street. A half-mile's worth of clothiers, barbers, hardware shops and bars moved in. And bars indeed. There are eight bars in town, with two more take-outs. The biggest stops for the rubbish collectors are always the two package stores.

Things continued steadily for Turners as a Developing Industrial Center until four of the town's six main factories closed, and the other two's horizons dimmed considerably. This froze the town in a tight snooze for more than twenty years. No substantial new building, no new anything. Well, maybe a new Mel-An or a new gas station. The river had lost its edge. The waterwheel passed on, and economic facts of life (read: high taxes) moved four of the plants out of town. What the Connecticut now does for the two remaining paper mills, Esleek and Strathmore, is make electricity and, up to a few years ago, provide an inexpensive and most handy waste disposal system.

Lines On Paper Turn Human — Find God

by the Phantom Biot

"I'm into exploring whether the cartoonist can produce without becoming a cartoon herself. I feel like I'm in a room with a lot of cartoons." And Kaymarion was right.

Dave English was a political cartoon. Steve Romano was a cartoon full of black humor. Kris Jackson was a cartoon heading toward shading and stuff as what makes "straight" art. Don McGilvray was an obnoxious cartoon. Mike Moyle was a dirivative, hoping to be a professional, cartoon. Demian was a nostalgic cartoon. Michael Kamins was hoarding cartoons. Kaymarion was not a cartoon.

It remained for Kaymarion to transcend the dark ruled boxes and leap off the 2-D surface with her self-appraisal as firstly a creative human, using the medium of cartoons, not the other way around. She said that she couldn't work on a piece until the political motives were clear for her, and that they reflected her own aspirations. She also pointed out the fact that as the comic industry is a male-dominated field, there is a great lack of healthy female models and roles portrayed.

The reason for this meeting of a rather unlikely mixture of people was a special "Off the Hook" program on WMUA called KAPOW. Aired live at 7:20 p.m. on April 3, KAPOW illicited five phone calls. One of the most interesting came from one of Don's groupies who stated breathlessly that she thought he was the greatest. It was suspected that the call was from Don's mother.

Another call asked Michael if he could justify his collecting comics as an intellectual pursuit. Of course he couldn't, and the caller was promptly attacked with the question of whether the caller could justify going to U. Mass. as an intellectual pursuit.

This was all nonsense, for we know, without McLuhan having to tell us, that of all the mass media, and comics mirror the American collective subconscious most faithfully, and that they, in turn, manipulate and exploit the subconscious.

Comics, together with the other mass media, have become our genuine folklore and culture. They have developed into a self-perpetuating institution, an integral part of the American way of life.

Jules Feiffer has written: "All comic characters, from Dagwood to Ming of Mongo, are socially significant in the sense that they propagate images that play up to our prejudices. Charges that the comics are in general a corrupting influence, glorifying crime and depravity can only be answered: 'But of course. Why else read them?'"

Not only are comics read, they are seen. This is why such great pains were taken to employ a special invention that made radio history that nite. A device that allowed visual graphics to be sent over the FM frequency, called a "Gizmo" by its creator, Professor Rube Goldberg, was employed at the last four minutes of the program.

I suppose, even though Demian be a nostalgic cartoon, he might be forgiven, as he was responsible for hosting the show, bringing all these loonies together and making it entertaining.

I, like Kaymarion would say: "I take cartoons seriously, but not without humor."

Thank God you couldn't see what the cartoonists looked like.

"Shoot Your Shot"

"Salt" childish for attack Maharaj Ji

To The Editor:

While reading Thursday's Collegian I came upon "Below The Salt" and thought that the editors had decided to print their April Fool's edition after all.

On the front page was a nicely written article by Jerry Lazar about Guru Maharaj Ji. The effect of the article was ruined by a picture of the Guru, childishly depicted with a beard, moustache, and other markings. I feel this was unnecessary and in very poor taste.

Even worse was the caption. It read, "The Idiot Bastard Son." What gives anyone the right to call someone else an idiot? Is he an idiot because he has given over six million people more happiness than they have ever known before? Or is it because he wants to bring peace to the world? And a bastard? I can assure you that Guru Maharaj Ji's father, Shri Hans Ji Maharaj, and mother, Mata Ji were legally married. To me this invalidates the whole absurd statement.

It is too bad that the editor of "Below the Salt" can not find anything better to do than draw moustaches and beards on a man he knows nothing about. Maybe he should learn to do layout in his excess time. Speaking of layout, I was glad to see on the last page a heading entitling it "The Last Page!" Now when I pick up a Collegian on Thursdays I can easily find where the toilet paper ends and the newspaper begins again.

Patricia Simpson

"for attack MaharajJi"?

We here at Salt appreciate the occasional responses to our sometimes pointed material. Patricia Simpson's letter is very good. Ah, readers, we work for you. Thank you for reading Below The Salt.

Point By Point:

Yes, a nicely-written article, wasn't it? To 'liven it up' (as we Second Floor People put it), I decided that demented photo, which was a different shade of Maharaj Ji than the article implied, should be run. You should be happy — more people than usual probably read the favorable article because of the provocative picture.

The "Idiot Bastard Son" caption was not presented like that, as you stated, but rather carried a very important question mark at the end that threw the matter into the realm of the unknown. Is he "The Idiot Bastard Son?" I humbly suggest that you read more carefully.

The inspiration for the caption comes from a Frank Zappa song about this society's diffracted children and their horrible present circumstances. While this is not to be taken literally in this case, I'm sure you can see the connection. The beard and mustache are also Zappa-inspired, drawn not by idle me, but rather credit should go to Steve Feld, a latently talented staffer of ours. And yours.

Both sides covered? Perhaps. As you know, many many people regard the Guru as a sham, a come-on. The caption asked a question, the story gave an answer.

Come up some time, Patricia, and we'll talk about it.

Vol. 1, No. 9 April 18, 1974

"The truth was doomed to die. It was being downtrodden, was being drowned, burned, ground to ashes. But look — it has survived, it lives, it has been printed, and nobody ever will be able to wipe it out."

Below the Salt is a weekly magazine of the UMass Daily Collegian, student newspaper, Amherst, Mass.

Below The Salt has been the kind of magazine that would print peculiar work. We pledge to uphold this tradition, but can't promise everybody's peculiar work will fit. Yours must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces to the line. The deadline for each Thursday's edition is noon the previous Tuesday; but you can write to us anytime.

P&B Seek God, Find Ernie Kovacs

by David Miller and Andrew MacKenzie

B.T.S.: Woody Allen?

Proc.: Yes, I like Woody Allen because Woody Allen, besides having an intelllctual wit, which I admire ... Jewish Intelligentsia, I mean really top, top of the cream; Schlaga. He also visualizes things with a certain degree of success. I would agree with certaincriticisms of his work that he's better directed than when he directs. But what the hell, he's great in comedy and I love moments of all of the things he does so much that it's worth some of the other things that don't quite come off. The moment in Take the Money and Run, for instance, when he goes into the bank with the note that's so badly written that they don't know if it says 'gub'; "I have a gub", it's just so wonderfully insane. And then the other section in the same thing where he goes in for a job interview and ends up where he didn't beat the clock, or the duck didn't come down, and the guy's just turning over those cards ...

Mel Brooks comes out of the same Yiddish tradition, really. There aren't too many wasp comedians who've successfully made this transition into visual film art recently. But Mel Brooks and Woody Allen represent a certain kind of ...

Berg.: Carl Reiner.

Proc.; Carl Reiner, right, as a director of films and as a guiding genius — all of these people come out of things like The Show of Shows. Carl Reiner, Mel Brooks and Woody Allen all wrote for Your Show of Shows. Sid Caesar, another brilliant comedian, and Sid Caesar had a great influence on us.

Berg.: Cornelia Otis Skinner. Perlman, Kaufman. The Marx Brothers. W.C. Fields. Laurel and Hardy. Keaton, Spike Milligan. The Goons, And Jacques Tati.

Proc.: Many of these comedians ... Like Tati; his humor is based on observation. Extrapolation off common observed events. Which we call 'absurdvation'. We're in the Absurdium, observing, or absurding things, and better obscene than absurd ...

You can see that for most of us the influence came out of radio 'cause we were at the very end of the radio generation. We used to listen to the soap operas and the mystery stories and the comedy stories — Jack Armstrong, Fanny Brice, when we were six or seven. And out of that stimulation of imagination, I think most of us carried into early television, which was live and exciting, this really open, internal, imaginative consciousness. And that's what we carried with us when we came together on radio, into record, and then from record into visualization in other forms.

B.T.S. One more question. It's kind of a general question ...

Proc.: Wait a minute, let me get the major to answer it ...

B.T.S. In terms of ideas, what are you working on now, that is, thematic or philosophical ...

Berg.: Any sign that flashes by on the road is bound to start off some line of thought.

Proc.: Basically Peter and I are working off the stimulation of being aliens in our own culture. That basically is what Peter and I are doing, and the Firesign seems to be working, right now, off the idea of ... story-telling. Sitting around the fire, after the lights have been turned out once and for all, out in the field, because you have to walk everywhere ...

Berg.: The General Field, as we call it. The General Field Theory is becoming very popular ...

Proc.: Telling ghost stories to one another.

A View of Life in Black & White

by Regina Starodoj

This April the Bauhaus school of art, formed in 1919 in Weimar, Germany is celebrating its 54th anniversary. During the month of April the Mt. Holyoke Friends of Art is presenting an exhibition of prints by the artists of this innovative, influential and often controvertial school of art.

The Bauhaus (1919-1933) cannot be described as an isolated phenomenon. It is the climax of a complexity of events and ideas reaching as far back as the Romantic period and extending to the present time.

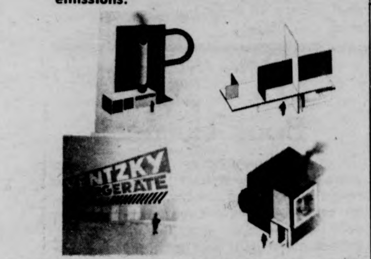
1. Kiosk for newspaper and cigarette sales.

2. open waiting room for streetcar stop.

3. exhibition pavillion prefabricated wall components for showing agricultural machinery.

4. exhibition stand with equipment for sales promotion by means of moving pictures, public address systems, luminescent signs and letters formed by smoke emissions.

Below The Salt photos by Gina Starodoj



At present, the ideas of the Bauhaus are still in question. The fact that they are still being attacked and defended today is proof of the continuing strength of the Bauhaus.

Institutionally the Bauhaus emerged as the mutual integration of two separate schools of arts and crafts in Weimar, Germany. The Bauhaus expressed a strong tendency toward practical and manual training. Theory was of little suspect.

In 1919, Walter Gropius, head of the Bauhaus School, issued the first proclamation of the Bauhaus. He called for the unity of all the creative arts under the primacy of arthitecture.

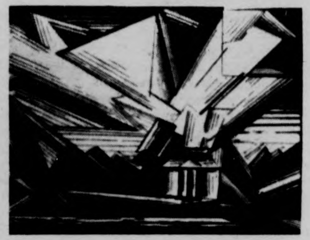
These same ideas, expressed in Gropius' Manifesto had moved progressive designers and thinkers since the mid-1800's and are an essential factor in understanding the progression leading to the Bauhaus. Until the advent of the Bauhaus there existed distinct separation between the fine and applied arts.

Triggered by the technological-industrial revolution, a gap opened between the concept and the materialistic. Mechanization producing cheap deceptive substitutes for handmade work brought the value of the craftsman into question. The closing of late Baroque architecture and building cities had lost its capability of binding the creative arts together and uniting them into an all inclusive work of art (Gesamtkunstwerk).

This increased isolation between the arts caused the status of crafts to drop, and emphasis shifted from the finished work to the concept of the work itself.

Gropius, whose designs for low-cost prefabricated housing using the children's building block concept, (similar to the Habitat units of Expo '67) was far ahead of his time. His manifesto of 1919 was a revolutionary one, not in its idea of integration of the arts, but in the idea that all artists should first be craftsmen. This concept of learning by doing was the revolutionary development of an aesthetic based on sound craftsmanship. The Bauhaus's teaching based on the ideas expressed in Gropius's manifesto was considered revolutionary at the time, and caused the school to be the subject of attacks from the press and the academies. Antagonism drove the school to Dessau from Weimar in 1925. Gropius, himself, was forced to leave Germany in 1934 due to the rise of Naziism.

Lyonel Feininger woodcut



How and where is the achievement of the Bauhaus to be grasped? Many see it in its contribution of Bauhaus painters to the history of art, perhaps the most influential of modern art in the twentieth-century. The fundamentals of Bauhau's teaching have transformed art-teaching methods throughout the world.

Therefore, it is the purpose of this exhibition to bring to mind, at this time, the historic achievements of the Bauhaus and those artists associated with it, through the presentation of their work in the graphic art media. Of the most well known, works are exhibited by Paul Klee, Lyonel Feininger, Wassily Kandinsky, Joseph Albers and Piet Mondrian.

Or A Touch of Color

Untitled

Alonzo liked to draw the people around him in colored ink, as soldiers with stick legs and single long hairs that floated in the air from their heads. His mother was always the biggest, distinguished by her long eyelashes and long wavy fingers. His father was a puzzle of angles and flaps and straight fingers, which was Alonzo's way of drawing people who sat down.

Alonzo's father sat down most of the time when Alonzo saw him. He was surrounded by towers of books that Alonzo drew as blocks around him. Alonzo knew his father's name. It was Dick.

The other people Alonzo drew were from television and his own stories. They were always much smaller than the real people.

Alonzo and his family lived in a small town near Boston. All Alonzo knew about his town and Boston was his big yard, the railroad embankment that bordered it, and the grocery story where his mother took him on Saturdays. It was a First National Store, and in his pictures Alonzo drew its rows of vivid boxes and cans with FINAST across them, although he couldn't spell yet.

There was a law that no one could sell liquor in the town. Every Wednesday Alonzo's father went to the next town nearer to Boston and bought a case of Budweiser. Alonzo drew pictures of his bent and folded father in his chair, writing and looking at all of his books and drinking enormous cans of beer. Sometimes his father poured a little foam into the cat's dish by his chair.

The cat never drank beer until it had sat in his dish for at least two days. Sometimes Alonzo drank it when the cat was asleep in his father's lap.

When Alonzo was five he went to Kindergarten. While he was there he had to draw pictures for special occasions. The first one was Thanksgiving. Alonzo drew his Thanksgiving picture of his mother in her white uniform, cutting a turkey's throat in the kitchen. He drew blood all over the turkey's wide eyes and breast, and blood all over his mother's hands and apron.

Alonzo's mother brought the picture to Alonzo's father one evening. "Did you see this?" she said.

He studied the picture. "Well," he said finally.

"Is that all you can say?"

"Well, he is a boy, after all."

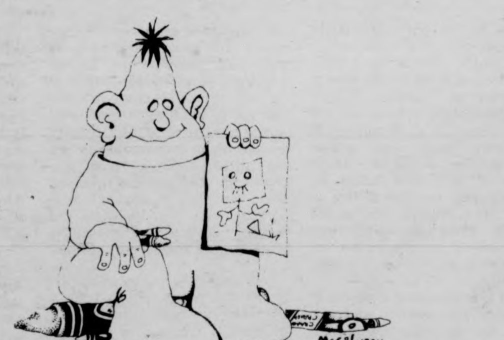
"His teacher called me today. She's disturbed about him. About this."

"Oh."

Alonzo's mother looked at his father reproachfully. "You're the expert. I think you should talk to him."

Alonzo's father sighed. "I guess I should talk to him."

Alonzo liked to sit in the sun while he watched television in the late fall afternoons. In the family room the sun slanted in at one large window, creating a bright square that travelled slowly across the carpet as the day passed. Alonzo followed its path, moving along the rug with the warmth on his back.



Alonzo's father came into the room as the sun sank to find Alonzo hunched against the far wall. He sat down on the rug so that he and his son would be on equal terms.

"Hello son," he said.

Alonzo liked to play with his fingers while he watched television. They frequently became the figures that he drew, tiny and fragmented, in the corners of his pictures. He wiggled them at his father.

His father crossed his legs painfully and looked at the television. "What are you watching?"

"Star Trek."

"That's good." Alonzo's father sat silent for a minute. Alonzo stuck his first three fingers into his mouth and sucked on them during a detergent commercial.

"Is there anything you'd like to talk about?" Alonzo's father smiled.

Alonzo smiled in return.

"I saw the picture you drew of mommy. It was very nice." His father cleared his throat. "You seem to really like the color red."

A gurgling scream broke from the television set. Alonzo and his father turned to see three rock-like people beating two uniformed people with giant rocks. A cloud of dust rose and obscured their outstretched hands, and the screen was suddenly filled with the leering grimaces of the rock-men.

Alonzo wiggled his fingers in fascination.

Alonzo's mother was in the kitchen, muscularly shaping meatballs in a pan. Alonzo's father came in and stood with his hands in his pockets, watching her.

"Well?"

"It's T.V. It's disgusting. Any kid would draw bizarre pictures after watching that stuff."

"Well, why didn't they?"

"Why didn't they what?"

"Why didn't any of the other kids draw gory Thanksgiving pictures."

Alonzo's father picked a piece of celery from the salad on the counter. "They're all repressed."

Alonzo's mother wiped her face with a floury hand. "I'll talk to him."

Alonzo sat at the sunporch window, watching the junior high school kids walking along the railroad tracks and throwing rocks down at the houses below. Alonzo pointed his fingers at them. "ZZZ." he said. He watched as one large well-placed stone flushed the cat from a tangle of bushes and sent him running in a smooth yellow streak for the porch.

Alonzo's mother came and sat down beside him on the sofa. "Hello, cutie," she said, ruffling his hair. "What are you doing?"

Alonzo curled up against her. Muted in the distance he heard the shouts and whistles of the boys on the tracks. The cat began to beat on the front door with his paw. Alonzo's mother got up and opened the door. "Come on Kitty."

Alonzo jumped up. "ZZZ. ZZZ." he shouted at the cat. The cat flattened his ears and ran under the sofa.

"Alonzo." said his mother in surprise. "The poor kitty. I thought you liked the kitty."

Alonzo crawled under the sofa as far as he could fit. The cat moaned deep in his throat.

"ZZZZZZZZZ." cried Alonzo in delight.

Alonzo's mother found his father in the breakfast nook, munching salad and studying the news.

"Well?" he said.

"What are you doing with my salad? That was tonight's dinner."

"What happened with Alonzo?"

She smiled. "The poor little thing. I think he's feeling a little jealous."

"Jealous! Of rock-monsters?"

"Of the cat, child-expert. I saw it myself, he's just trying to get attention. It probably happens at school all the time."

"Ha."

Alonzo curled up against the sofa pillows. The cat sat lightly in his lap at first, then relaxed and closed his eyes. Alonzo put his head against the cat's stomach and listened to the rumbling vibrations. "Poor kitty." he said. He hugged the cat closer, then abruptly pushed him from his lap.

The cat landed without protest, curling up where he had fallen. Alonzo waddled over to his pile of papers and his crayons. He crawled back up onto the couch and drew a big white house full of windows and people's faces in each of the windows. He drew a train, smoke streaming from its chimneys, roaring towards the house. Then he drew a tiny stick boy, one long hair waving from his head, riding away into the clouds on a huge cat.

"Poor kitty, poor kitty," he sang. He crawled off the sofa and carefully placed the picture in his pile in the corner of the room. Then he went into the kitchen and stood before the two huge people there.

"No more violent T.V." said Alonzo's father from his book.

Alonzo's mother smiled down on him tenderly. "Poor baby," she said. "Would you like a piece of celery?"

Alonzo sat down in the middle of the kitchen floor and drummed with his fingers on the linoleum. He smiled.

Books: Working "everyone" does it . . .

Working
by Studs Terkel
589 pages
Pantheon

reviewed by Kevin Mack

It has been said that students, particularly college students, are the only leisure class left in America. To most of us work is an alien beast, to be avoided, or at least limited to the summer months. It is hard to imagine actually working for eight or more hours every day, for a lifetime's worth of years. But of course, that is what an overwhelming majority of the people in this country do — they work. Sometimes the work is hard, taxing the mind or body; sometimes it is easy. Frequently the work is boring. Yet for most people work is as inescapably involved in their destinies as death and taxes.

Working is a collection of 130 interviews with middle-class working Americans. Studs Terkel, a Chicago-based journalist and radio broadcaster spent several years traveling around the country with his tape-recorder, talking to people about their jobs. Hence the subtitle of the book: "People talk about what they do all day and how they feel about what they do." Terkel's tool is his tape-recorder, which he likens to a camera in its unflinching recording of reality. But, as Terkel says, "There are the paparazzi and there is Walker Evans". Terkel selectively focuses his interviews by asking the right questions, thereby giving form to the worker's soliloquies.

Comparing workers today, to those of the depression, a period about which Terkel has written in an earlier work, Hard Times, Terkel notes that workers today are much more likely to say, "The system sucks". Workers are still resigned to their work, but it is becoming a bitter resignation. If the waitress, the receptionist, or the factory workers accepts the job which he hates, it is frequently a cynical acceptance, tempered by the hope for a better life; if not for themselves, at least for "the kids". For Mike, the steel laborer, his kid is his imprint on time. He wants his kid to go to college and say, "Look Dad, you're a nice guy, but you're a fuckin' dummy." That is all that keeps him going "The day I get excited about my job, is the day I go to see a head shrinker," he says.

Not all of the workers dislike their jobs. There are farmers, a professor, a film critic, bookbinder, jazz musician, and teacher; all of whom enjoy their work. But if there is a pattern, then it is that a person is more likely to enjoy their work if he is either self-employed, working for a small firm, or engaged in some kind of creative activity. Those who work for big corporations or in factories are much less likely to find meaning in their labor.

The highpoint of the book comes when Terkel talks about his own work — of collecting information on other people's work. Terkel evidently loves his work and introduces his book with his thoughts on working and his worker friends. "During my three years of prospecting, I may have, on more occasions than I had imagined, struck gold. I was constantly astonished by the extraordinary dreams of ordinary people. No matter how bewildering the times, no matter how dissembling the official language, those who we call ordinary are aware of a personal sense of worth — or more often a lack of it — in the work they do."

Unfortunately, not all of the workers are interesting people. Like the work which employs them, some are boring. For this reason, the book drags in places and one gets tired of hearing the same weary gripes. (At least five different workers say something like, "Well, I guess somebody has to do the work." Even more complain that they often feel like machines or robots.)

Another problem with Working is that it is often difficult, sometimes impossible, to separate the job from the person. As one of the workers comments, "Ask a person what he is and most likely he'll tell you what he does for living." People who have identical jobs can have completely opposing attitudes towards their work. For example, there is one janitor who seems well-adjusted and reasonably satisfied with his occupation and there is another janitor who comes off as a paridigm of cosmic distress. The question is: which one better reflects the nature of the work itself?

UAW ON STRIKE
JUSTICE

. . . and sometimes they don't.

Nevertheless, one leaves Working with a feeling for what it is like to be a working American, and, perhaps more importantly, one leaves it with the satisfaction of having met several entertaining characters. So in spite of its flaws, Working is a successful book. It makes no pretences or judgements; it simply lets the workers tell their own stories. In reading these stories, one cannot help but see that people try to live with a semblance of dignity and pride, no matter how alienating the job which employs them. And even though work is usually tedious and enervating, idleness is even worse. As an independantly wealthy woman, in her mid thirties says in Working, "everyone needs to feel they have a place in the world. It would be unbearable not to. I don't like to feel superflous. One needs to be needed. I'm saying being idle and leisured, doing nothing, is tragic and disgraceful. Everyone must have an occupation." So if Working is at times boring, it is only letting us know what we are all in for.

A Personal War

The Monk and the Marines
by Philip Kingry
182 pp $1.25

Reviewed by Ed Smith

War novels have changed. There was a time when there were war stories about the drudgery, fears and changes of a soldier. Those are still around, of course, but a new breed has taken the forefront. These are novels which often talk more about the large political issues involved than about gut-level experiences. They are not so much novels as essays with characters. It is pointless to attempt to make a qualitative judgement on these two different approaches; it is a matter of preference. But The Monk and the Marines is of the personal variety and I prefer it.

The main character, Doc, changes considerably in the course of a year in Vietnam. Kingry details clearly the slow advance of what he describes as insanity. It is an insanity though, which allows one to survive. In the first seven months of duty, one builds an alertness and unvulnerability to death. The next five months are downhill. While one is thinking, presumably, of going home and not just survival, the fatality rate goes way up.

There is one striking example of the change in a man who was once a monk. Doc describes how he went to a village and bought a statue. Slung over his shoulder was a pump shotgun which he always carried. A little girl ran by while he was paying the seller and stole the money. The amount was no more than two dollars, but he instinctively levelled his shotgun at the running girl. He didn't fire only because he realized in time what he was about to do. What impressed the insanity of the situation on him the most though, was the knowledge that if he had fired and killed the girl, it wouldn't have been thought that unusual. The necessity of numbing oneself to brutality runs throughout the book.

In the book there is a compassion of life in a monastary and life in Vietnam. In both cases the individual is confined to a private world where everyone is involved in basically the same activity. A certain peculiar sanity becomes dominant in such a situation. The smaller world makes the rules, not the greater society outside. The rules must be followed if one expects to survive mentally and, possibly, physically.

The style of the writing, while not brilliant, is a refreshing change at times. The book opens in the second person and continues this way for several chapters. This style serves two purposes. First, it is simply interesting and makes the reading enjoyable. Secondly, it gives the reader the feeling that you too would have done the same thing had you been in the position.

Overall, Kingry's book is a truthful account of a particularly shattering experience. Though he did not shoot the girl, Doc admits to a cold-blooded killing. He had a CO who sent his friend, another medic, on a suicide mission. In the midst of a sniper attack, he arranged with two soldiers to shoot the officer. He was killed, dumped in a body bag and that was all. A lot of people knew what really happened, but no more mention was made of it.

The Monk and the Marines is not, after all, a masterpiece. But it is a book of disturbing candor which deserves to be read. This book, and others like it which have come from different wars, is the type of thing which will survive and remind us of the nature of war. The political issues are important, but they are essentially transient. There are few people, for instance, who can call to mind the specific arguments, pro and con, which surrounded, say, England's entry into the first world war. What is remembered is the massive death, the sorrow, and the commitment, among some people, to never again enter a war.

"GROOVE TUBE" AND INTERVIEW WITH KEN SHAPIRO

Teenage Dance on Saturday

Described as "Outrageously Funny!" by the Saturday Review, the film Groove Tube was shown at a special press presentation in the beginning of the month at the Amherst Cinema. Wedged between Dennis Conlon (ace Collegian photographer) and John McHale (my closest friend and constant companion), I settled down for what was to be a provocative experience in film viewing. Aside from press, radio and television people, the movie was also attended by film students in the five-college area, and other interested viewers.

Saturday Review was precisely correct. Groove Tube is an irreverently humorous, new, Levitt-Pickman color film, described in one way as "a project in underground television," and in another way as "things you'd never dream to see on television." Well, no matter how anyone else describes it, the best way to really determine the identity of the film is to give yourself the experience of first-hand viewing. The film opened yesterday at the Amherst Cinema to give the general public the chance to do this.

Highlights of Groove Tube performed by a young cast of talented newcomers, include among other things, a creative and preposterously lyrical presentation of the Senate Watergate investigation; hilariously absurd take-offs on several of today's TV commercials; wickedly wild spoofs on newscasts, kiddie and cooking shows; a comically erotic handling of satellite coverage of the Olympic games; and a riotous satire on panel discussion shows.

Below The Salt photos by Dennis Conlon

Ken Shapiro is the 31-year-old creator, producer and director of Groove Tube as well as the star — a man who, as he said, admires Stanley Kubrick, Laurel and Hardy, Cid Ceasar, and Ernie Kovacs. When asked about the origin of the idea for the half-million dollar film, Ken said it was somewhat due to the fact that he watches a lot of TV himself, and that the purpose of it was purely "to produce a comedy using TV. "I get my information about all aspects of the world from TV," he said. "That's why each idea for each segment in the film has its own background." Ken was a child TV performer himself. "My mother got me involved in television when I was six years old, and I stayed in it until I was 16. I appeared on shows such as the 'Colgate Comedy Hour,' the 'Kraft Theater,' and 'Studio I.'"

Groove Tube is Ken Shapiro's first film, and he wrote most of the material for it himself. "It originated as a series of video tape segments. At the age of 25 when I was looking for a profession, I got involved with video things. I then gave up video and changed to film (Groove Tube is the result). We had the general idea of what we wanted beforehand, and we did have the video behind us. That helped, but some things that worked on video didn't on film. The video format is really an effective tool, and it's a great way to learn to make movies."

Were there any problems with making the film? Ken spoke of some trouble at first in the financial aspect of the production, but said that with the aid of friends and family he was able to do it. "I really thought the film would be easier to do than it was," he said. "The sales have been hard, although the general distribution has been good, since it's a unique type of film. We shot on and off for six months, and the editing, which is the central thing about making a film, took a long time. I had help with doing the editing, but the Watergate part alone took two days to edit."

Speaking about the people that worked on the film, Ken appeared to be pleased with the hard work that they put into it. "The cast was almost all totally new talent — people who never did anything like it before, and they all did an excellent job. I held auditions, and that's where I got some of them. The others were people I knew." When asked if he is now looking for more talent, Ken answered a definite "yes." He also highly praised the photographer of the film who, as Ken said, did a "very good job," and the woman who did some animation work for the film. "She was the one who also did the colorful Levi's commercials," he said. "The similarity between those commercials and the segment in the film is very clear."

The Amherst public presentation of the movie this week is one in a series of openings for the film. The film has also been shown in Madison, Wisconsin, and at Chapel Hill. "It was a big hit in Madison," Ken said. "All previews are not in college towns, though. The film has proved to be appealing to everyone, not just the college age person."

None of the film segments of Groove Tube were intended for television, although a few of them were shown on the "American Dream Machine" program. "Frame for frame, Groove Tube represents my feelings. One example," he said, "was in he opening of the film, where I used the idea from the movie 2001. That's my favorite film. A good thing about the way it turned out was that each segment is individual and has to stand or fall on its own merits. It's a representation of what I think is funny. It may be very different from other comedies, but that's because peoples' ideas differ on what comedy is. If you wanted a title, you could say it was blackout comedy....based on short ideas. This is similar to most kinds of comedy through the years. When you have this, you don't really need a plot line." Any weak points in the film? Ken said that they've all been cut out, although he did say that, "If at any time someone sees something in the film and says that it really shouldn't be there, then that isn't good for the film." Aside from the predominant comical side to the film, there are some "heavy" things in it, such as a commercial spoof showing a disgustingly polluted river.

Ken expressed a deep satisfaction with the result of all the work. "Yes, I'm very, very happy with how it turned out. I see it as a success, and in a few years, you'll see 20 more films just like it. Attempts to do something like Groove Tube were made in the past, but they were all box office failures." About rating, Ken said he didn't feel hassled about it, and that he felt quite sure it would be "X" rated. "When we get the ratings, that's it. I'm not worried at all about it." Although not working on another film right now, Ken said he was feeling the pressure to make a sequel to Groove Tube. "I might eventually make a Groove Tube II, he said, "but one thing for sure — I'll never go back to video work. This film has opened up good opportunities to do comedy in movies, since anything can be done with this format. More exploration into this area will be valuable."

God or Science

Throughout the preview showing, the theater roared with laughter. Ken described this as "the best feeling", and one of the most satisfying things about the film. "If I don't have that (laughter), I don't have anything at all."

The Groove Tube is playing now at the Amherst Cinema. You'll like it, or leave it (literally), but I'd say that the chances of the first are much more likely. See it.

Rock, Racism and the Wrong Side of the Tracks

by Jeff Howard

JIMI HENDRIX

Before I begin to discuss the sixties, Jimi Hendrix and who we all might be, I'd like to make one point: this is a good movie. If you're interested in the music, there is plenty of it, with live footage from at least six different concerts, all produced at a better-than-adequate level, and definitely an improvement over many rock movie sound-tracks. If you're into film, at least this is an interesting flick with some definite improvement over others of its species. For the rock fan, there are interviews with Pete Townshend, Lou Reed, Eric Clapton, et. al. tastefully slid in between numbers. Your interest may be in what this cultural phenomena (rock in general) means and the movie is then good food for thought. But most striking in this movie is its overall impact and success at placing Jimi Hendrix in a cultural context, rather than boring the viewer who already knows the man was a fantastic musician, with another attempt at creating rock mythology.

Movies about rock, as rock itself, generally ignore racism (sexism, what's that?) but this was an exception. Jimi Hendrix was indeed, as one interviewee put it, "a black man in a white man's world", and to skirt that part of his life would've been not only bullshit but a total misrepresentation of the era of that he was such an integral part. Not that the film was any great expose on racism in the life of Jimi Hendrix, but in a genre as devoid of social commentary as the rock film, even breaching the issue deserves mention. The movie places him in the time and place from which he came, recreating, for the interim, the kind of feelings, hopes, tensions and fears present in the situation. From his father's talking about Jimi's first guitar playing on the 'wrong side of town' to Eric Clapton and Pete Townshend remembering jamming with him, the stage was set so that he came off as a real person. Even rock n' roll stars have problems.

More than that, as it demystified him, the movie showed that the man had something to say. Too often a musican is listened to and barely understood. The person playing that music is trying some other way at communication reflective not only of what he or she thinks, but of who he or she is culturally and historically (Frank Zappa sounds the way he does on purpose. Just so with Jimi Hendrix). I like what Jimi Hendrix did. I don't claim to very well understand what he said, or who he was, but it has been a long time since I've believed I was part of the 'elite' my education was designed to inculcate. Most of us here were alive in the sixties and, in many ways, we're coming from the same places as Jimi Hendrix. Then again, I barely ever say 'Right On' these days. I would urge you to listen to the music.

Oregon: Musical Distance

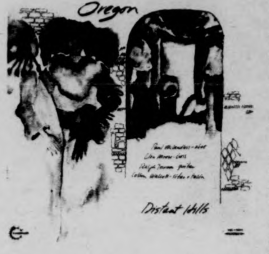
by Andrew MacKenzie

MUSIC OF ANOTHER PRESENT ERA
Oregon
(Vanguard VSD-79326)

DISTANT HILLS —
Oregon
(Vanguard VSD-79341)
Playing Times: 46:13 & 42:22

Once upon a time (c. 1968) there was a musical group which was not very well-known as the Paul Winter Consort. They weren't very well-known because there was no market for the music they were making: Jazz buffs didn't like them because they ere too structured and too solidly based in the classics; Those into classical music didn't like them because the music was too personal and diverse — they couldn't enjoy strange things like free improvisations on the Japanese koto scale; and the youth market was still raving about the complexities of Sgt. Pepper, for Chrissakes.

Still, let's not be too harsh on the Beatles; they were, after all, responsible for introducing the sounds of the East (albeit in extremely watered-down form) to the ear of the general public, and perhaps paved the way for the genuine East-West musical synthesis that is beginning to develop. And not only to develop but to gain acceptance, and that is where Oregon comes in. But I'm ahead of myself.



To make a short story shorter, the Winter Consort limped along for about four years and albums, then disintegrated, probably due to both financial insecurity and disagreement about musical directions: On the last Consort album, Icarus, Winter himself seemed to be tending towards heavy orchestration and African polyrhythms, while the four men who were to form Oregon after the Consort's break-up showed a definite leaning towards a more condensed energy and simplicity, and an increased involvement with Eastern music. But no matter the reason, the Consort is no more, and happily we now have two recordings by Oregon to contend with.

The personnel: Paul McCandless, oboe and English horn; Glen Moore, bass, flute, and piano; Ralph Towner, classical guitar, twelve-string guitar, and piano; Collin Walcott, sitar, tabla, mridangam, violin, esraj, and percussion. Ralph Towner seems to be the guiding force here; he does a lot of the composition, and though all of them have had a great deal of classical training, I think it is through his influence that this training is felt or sensed rather than actually heard. Collin Walcott is also of special interest, having been at one time a disciple of both Ravi Shankar (sitar) and Alla Rakha (tabla).

Their music is, uh, different, It is music of life and depth, almost haiku-like in its lit-from-within clearness. The influences of jazz and the classical musics of East and West are all here, but Oregon is more than a synthesis of styles; the compositions on these albums are above all personal, and unique.

Their first record, Music of Another Present Era, is an absolutely wild assortment: Fourteen totally different ideas and experiments, leaping from super-dense works involving ten instruments to little 40-second freak-outs with a simple oboe line and bells, to duets for classical guitar and sitar, always, though, maintaining that aura-essence which is so much a part of their sound.

Distant Hills is more contemplative and mature, containing five compositions and two free improvisations. Of the compositions, however, two are by far the most finely crafted of all their work to date: "Dark Spirit" and "Distant Hills". The title cut is a happy wandering (If one can wander in 11-8 time), a strange meadow lark with beautifully interweaving lines of piano, English horn, and twelve-string. "Dark Spirit", a guitar-bass-sitar trio, is its antithesis, nebulous and menacing. All of the music on this album is fresh, insightful, and worthy of repeated listening.

So there it is, gang: Something old, something new, something borrowed and something you might like. I know for a fact that WMUA has the first album, so call them up and pester them until they play you something from it. Especially phone that clown who calls himself the Sacred Cowpie or whatever — He's usually on between 2 and 6 a.m., Friday nights and believe me, he could stand to hear someone call in a decent request or two.

Caustic Commence

No Go Coamba

NATURAL BOOGIE — HOUND DOG TAYLOR AND THE HOUSEROCKERS (Alligator 4704) time: 40:18

It's not hard to like something like this. The spirit and dexterity which Hound Dog bangs through this album comes from a perfectly free and clear state of mind, which is what something as unassuming and simple as 'boogie' music must have to survive. It is indeed a 'natural' feel, one coming out of a true and stomping spirit.

For apt and direct uncorkation of that wild spirit that roams in the boogie realm, listen here. When Hound Dog says, "Let's have some fun.", he's saying the reason he's playing, and why you're there as well. A-

EARTH — VANGELIS O. (Vertigo VEL-1019) time 34:57

Even without pretending to be cultured, this music is like the opera singer who was attacked by a bloke who went 'wuuh' and tried to strangle her, only her throat was too strong. Supposed to be true.

Even though. It's all here. Mellotrons, celestial doggies, shart, smarp tunes. Like if the Moody Blues were good. (I was still zonked on the spaghetti).

The best country makes the best music, and the Greek (hey, say it loud, sharp and clearly — Greek) Papathanassiou has still more than a few second-hand offshoots to thrup through IF he's going to get away with a clear, original slate on this fantasy-aimee music. Do they make you talk all the time down there? B. (So-called Note: The best country in this review is America.)

SWITCHED-ON BACH II — WALTER CARLOS (Columbia Masterworks KM 32659) time: 38:10

Switched-On Bach I is on its way to becoming the largest-selling Classical record of all-time. This follow-up's sales will not approach those of the first, as the first was composed of much more 'popular' Bach numbers that could be counted on to make a lasting impression with many listeners. This, added to the 'new instrument-new music' novelty of the moog synthesizer, make the big sales much less of a surprise.

Be it a change of nature or a commendable desire to avoid the obvious, Carlos has made a more subtle and delicate record that is well-done, yet far from What Can Be Done Here.

Walter has a definite touch, but fails to pack the all-encompassing punch that Bach put in the music. Carlos has done a creditable job as the first Mooger in interpreting these Classics. While he has not been bad enough for everyone to dismiss him and his machine at once, he has not been good enough to convince many purists of much possible merit in this spaced age development. Until either Robert Wyatt, Cecil Taylor or Buckminster Fuller begins developing electronic interpretations of this old funkbutt, we can only guess how far we can go. The purists may squawk, but there is a lot more future in Moogs and ARPs than there is in 'cellos and violins'. B.

ANGELS AND DEVILS AT PLAY — SUN RA (Impulse AS-9245) time 23:07

It is heartening to see that Impulse! Recoras is continuing with its Sun Ra reclaimation project, this being the fifth or so in a series of reissues of old, almost unavailable recordings initially issued on Saturn Records. What is unfortunate is Impulse's unclear package that presents on the outer cover Another Sun Ra Album, with only personnel listed. Inside, we find the facts:

Recorded 1955-56-56, with the amazing total time of 23:07.

SUN RA
ANGELS AND DEMONS AT PLAY

The fact that this is a reissue should definitely be on the outside, along with the other vital information.

Anyway, these are perhaps the tamest Ra recordings ever offered. Side one is a short series of songs that are basic steps in Sun's musical vocabulary, and as such, don't go very far but offer invaluable views of Sun's building roots.

Side two is perhaps the strangest Sun you've ever heard, as here is he and the Myth Science Arkestra going through some swing numbers with only a wayward, plaintive honking sax or bass run to differentiate from Count Basie. It's naturally well-done, but minute in regards to what was to come.

A must for Sun worshippers, as this is Beginnings, but others beware. B-.

— Mike "Nobody tell me I'm rank" Kostek

THE MARBLE INDEX — NICO (ELEKTRA) time: 30:10

I found this record in the 44c bin at Zayre's, and, having heard something of Nico, I picked it up. Records that end up in the 44c bins do so for very good reasons — and usually because they are either very bad, or too good to be comprehended. (Remember Ossman's Postulate — if it's not entertaining, it's confusing.) This record belongs in the latter category.

Some of you may remember Nico from her association with the Velvet Underground, especially on the Andy Warhol-produced album which introduced "Heroin" to the listening public. If so, you'll remember her as a striking woman in appearance — very tall but delicate ("death-like" is an adjective often used to describe her), with a startling, deep contralto voice, a voice which is surprising even if you're expecting something unusual. Unfortunately, the Warhol album contained no examples of her own songwriting . . . was she writing then? But this lack is more than made up for on The Marble Index.

Someone at Elektra must have believed in this album, because it's gorgeous. It contains seven of Nico's songs, plus a "Prelude", all arranged by John Cale (also of the Underground). The melodies are simple, modal or in minor keys, repetitive and loosely structured, but lovely. The lyrics, though not crammed with Imagery, are nonetheless abstract and I won't pretend I fully understand them at this point. However, most of her lyrics evoke feelings of deep confusion, anxiety and emptiness on the one hand, and cautious hope for a better future or a kind of Armageddon on the other. Some examples — "Can you follow me — can you follow my distresses, my caresses, fiery guesses" ("Lawns of Dawns"); "Sail away, sail away my little boy — Let the wind fill your heart with light and joy — Sail away my little boy" ("Ari's Song"); "Where did it begin — where did it begin — why am I not facing the wind?" ("Facing the Wind"); "Out of numberless reflections — rises a smile from your eyes into mine — Frozen warnings close to mine — close to the frozen borderline" ("Frozen Warnings"); "Midnight winds are landing at the end of time . . . — the children are jumping in the evening of light . . ." ("Evening of Light"). It's interesting to compare this expression of the "Spirit" of the '70s with Lou Reed's in Berlin. Warhol's machine culture apparently didn't fare any better than did the SDS — Grid bless them both . . .

It's a tribute to the brilliance of John Cale's arrangements that the songs on The Marble Index are almost unimaginable without them. He has made a complete piece of each song. His textures are dense and largely arhythmic, with long sustained notes and cyclical rhythm patterns set against the measured pace of the melodies. Prominent instruments are string quartets, hurdy-gurdies, massed keyboards of different kinds, bells, subtle electronic drones and other things which I haven't yet detected. Particularly outstanding are the use of what sounds like a whistle in "Ari's Song", the mindless piano and random noises in "Facing the Wind" and the screeching cellos and guitar in "Evening of Light".

SOME DAYS YOU EAT THE BEAR AND SOME DAYS THE BEAR EATS YOU
IAN MATTHEWS (Elektra 75078)
Total playing time: 33:41

Ian lets us down and for the first time comes through distinctly as a singer-interpreter (a moment of silence for the songwriter of "Book Song", "Road to Ronderlin", "If You Saw Thro' My Eyes", "Tigers Will Survive", and "Keep on Sailing"). It's nice but as they say in the trade, 'it just doesn't go anywhere'.

As veteran of three albums with Fairport Convention, three with Matthews' Southern comfort, two solo Vertigo ventures, Plainsong, and now two solo on Elektra, we know Matthew can put out better than this. Two years ago as we drank ginger brandy with Ian (and Richard Thompson on good humor), he told us of exciting future plans. Real Exciting.

Valley Hi was O.K., even good, but now with an album of cute title not worth repeating, Matthews has gotten himself into a quagmire. He's just lost 15 yards, it's 3rd and 25, and the plane is almost down.

His voice is nice, the songs are nice, but it was all much more impressive and fresher three years ago. Once Upon a Lifetime.

Looks like this will be the biggest record ever for Ian Matthews. Go get 'em, Elektra.

LANE CHANGER — MICHAEL FENNELLY (Epic)

Back in 1971, Mike Fennelly headed a group called Crabby Appleton. Crabby had its home base on the West Coast, which was unfortunate because they had to compete with the likes of the Grateful Dead and Jefferson Airplane. Despite having a hit single, "Go Back", they never made it, and their two albums can now be found in the bargain bins at your local record shop.

It's been three years now, and Mike finally has come out with a long-awaited solo album. Lane Changer proves once and for all that Crabby Appleton, and especially Mike himself were not flukes. This album is a gem. It's straight forward and simple in many ways. No glitter, no hype, thank God. From stinging rockers to placid ballads, they're all here for you to enjoy. If there should be a single taken from this disc, I'd have to go along with "Watch Yerself." "Watch Yerself" is a barn-burner featuring none other than guitarist supreme, Mr. Jeff Beck! Ah that Beck! He hasn't lost the old flash. Fennelly and Beck turn your brains inside out with some fantastic guitar work. (This cut is worth the price of the album itself).

Lane Changer should be given your full attention, as everyone should find something here. If you want to hear some more of the man's work, look for those old Crabby Appleton discs for a $1.98. A steal at that price! A+

Slaughter Without Vacuum

by Jeff Howard

Slaughter On Tenth Avenue
Mick Ronson
RCA (APL1-0472)-1974

Music doesn't exist in a vacuum. It reflects what's happening to the culture and how people relate, or don't relate, to it. Thus, the David Bowie phenomena (of which Mick Ronson, as Bowie's lead guitarist, is an integral part) with all its glitter, overt sexuality of one sort or another, high energy, occassional dissonence and, more recently, 'nostalgia' of their own peculiar sort, is a fascinating event to witness, whether or not the music is appealing to your tastes. Mick Ronson may have put "Love Me Tender" (that's right, the Elvis Presley hit) out as a smash single in Britain on a whim, but it's not a mistake that it has sold because of the breathiness of the singing delivery ('sex appeal' as the Ultrabrite commercials have dubbed it.) It's doubtful that teenyboppers ("weenyboppers", the English term) buy records to recall the historical triumphs of a man old enough to be their father. If you're fifteen now, Elvis Presley is a funny guy who used to do up rock 'n roll in tights.

The question becomes obvious: Why do thousands of people in their teens now, dig remakes of 50's songs? (Examples: "You're Sixteen" by Ringo Starr, the increasing incidence of rock 'n roll revivals and grease, the re-emergence of "Rock Around the Clock"...) Time magazine, representative here of our parents' generation's view, mindlessly intones that we've returned to that quiet era where everyone did as they ought and just went out and had a good time, apathetic to the ways of the world until adulthood crept upon them, nailing them with responsibility. Of course, that's bullshit, as well as being quite demonstrable nonsense. If anything, the mood of the country as a whole and 'youth' in particular is one of total alienation from the process, bitterly reseigning themselves to inaction rather than gleefully skipping into the ozone. Both the 50's and our own era's moods have been widely misread, but the year of the Watergate is most certainly one of widespread bitterness, fear and loathing and quite a bit of frustrated energy resigned to waste.

How then, you many well ask, does this analysis tie into a return to rock 'n roll and the sexy ballad: If you can't channel your energy into constructive activity, you can at least try to 'have a good time' and forget the world that seems so hopeless and crummy, and rock 'n roll is frustrated energy music headed toward a good time (although it's agreed that originally the energy that was frustrated was more physical and the 'good time' was had for a different reason.) Not to be simplistic, this is not to say that this train of thought has ridden thru every teenager's head and that generalizable trends in a society are more than just that, but, as I said before, music doesn't exist in a vacuum it means something. Picture hitting those teen years when all of your basic values are challenged, re-challenged and re-formed about every twenty minutes in the first place, while the President of the United States is proved a crook, the ecology is declared unable to support human life as we now know it very much longer, and the optimism of the sixties is merely a bitter memory.

MICK RONSON

Public energy and whatever life force you have in your little teen body has to go somewhere. So, throw on a few discs by the Grateful Dead, they don't worry about social issues anymore but it's fine boogie, Maria Muldaur, Ringo, McCartney or, if you're in England, Slade and Mick Ronson.

So, back to Ronson and, indirectly, David Bowie. From a technical perspective the album is exceptional, the production clean and the musicians performing well together, each part glistening on its own. Especially outstanding here is Aynsely Dunbar, ex-Mother of Invention, on percussion and Ronson himself playing a guitar which is best described as 'searing': an intensely trebly guitar sound which is licked with amazing control of the instrument and good ideas. (So many guitarists who are technically fantastic fall flat on their face because there's nothing in their heads.) The material is mixed, some very good but most mediocre, with the delivery saving the weaker songs. Ronson's remake of "Slaughter on Tenth Avenue" is excellent; indeed, the entire second side of the album works well as a grouping with each song being good on its own, culminating in "Slaughter" itself. The first side is quite a bit weaker, with only "Growing Up and I'm Fine" really shining as decent material. But, although much slicker and mixed primarily to highlight Ronson's guitar and vocal work, without Bowie appearing once, it still seems like a David Bowie album.

This seems to be explained by the similarity of the 'image' which Ronson and Bowie try to put across. Ronson is the 'lithe and silver-haired' sex symbol. Both Bowie and he make themselves out as some sort of rock heroes, strangely attractive but definitely in some way rebellious and energetic. I hesitate at calling their approach 'perverse' because of the meanings which that word has attached to it. Surely they are musicians playing material someone buys and listen to and, although odd and seemingly outside mainstream society altogether, in some sense, aren't we all? Music doesn't exist in a vacuum.

"You Can't Reinvent The Wheel"

BOOGIE DOWN — EDDIE KENDRICKS (Tamla T 330)
Total playing time: 42:39

Some convincing psychedelic R&B and mellow soul-fa from one of the original song stylists of the 1960's. From the Primes to the Elgins to the Temptations, Eddie Kendricks just got funkier and more melodious, and his latest solo album encompasses the whole spectrum of vocal potential of the man who recorded both "Just My Imagination" and "Keep on Truckin' ".

"Boogie Down" is just the beginning and not even one of the album's highs. "The Thin Man", "Tell Her Love has Felt the Need", and "Honey Brown" are the strongest, the latter especially sweet with Crusader Wilton Felder tickling the sax just beautifully. Kendricks is in a very mellow mood indeed on "You are the Melody of My Life" and "Girl of My Dreams" giving us the tinges of nostalgia ("You're My Everything", "All I Need", "I Wish it Would Rain") and inducing deja-vus (that rainy night with Joanne and Shaylor when we first heard "I Know I'm Losing You").

A diverse and handsomely soulful record which will further the already notorious career of Eddie Kendricks. Thank you.

—David Sokol

TIM MOORE
(A Small Record Company)

This label at the moment is white, written with a black flair. So either it's not officially out yet, or A Small Record Co. is hiring thousands of little men, buying crates of black flairs and mass producing their own labels. My guess is that it's not out yet.

The songs somehow lacks originality; decent, but all too familiar. There are some songs though that don't fall under the above catogory, "A Fool Like You" sounds like a gem for AM radio. "High Feeling" is good, not too repetitious. The lyrics are beautiful up to the point where they fall into perfect little rhymes and the standing-landing, rain-pain, love-of, combinations cheapen the sound. A singsongy, nice album, that just falls short of being good. Just when you think its going to peak and leaved you stunned, its falls back into the war-for, brush-crutch business. Fantastic piano, great back-up.

—Lori Ann Yeslow

BARRY GOLDBERG (Atco SD 7040)
Total Playing Time: 37:19

Ya know, in these days of modern time there are hunnerds of records put out every month by our beloved music industry. Some are good, others make it big on the charts. But some do neither. These are average records, put out by average talents with average promotion, interesting some average people and boring some average others. And I've always been opposed to reviewing an album just because it's there, feeling that it's necessary to write a paragraph about it just because you got it for free. And ordinarily I would have handed Barry Goldberg's album right back to Mike, saying "no thanks I don't want to waste the folk's time". But doggone it, if Bob Dylan didn't go and mess up everything by getting involved. You see, Barry Goldberg is the first album that Dylan has ever produced. That makes it historic, and worthy of review.

The best thing about having Dylan produce Barry Goldberg's solo debut is that it proves once again that in the end it's not the producer who makes the album, it's the artist. Dylan, as a producer, makes absolutely no difference whatever. I wish that he had. Barry Goldberg wrote "(I've Got to Use My) Imagination" with Gerry Goffin, a song done so well by Gladys Knight and the Pips, and here rendered to Strained Junior Baby Food. His melodies are pretty. His rhymes are accurate. His voice is inoffensive. The arrangements are correct. His sidemen are competent. And the album is borrrring. If only Dylan had stayed away from it... I wouldn't have to write this non-review and you wouldn't have to read it...

BURN—DEEP PURPLE
(Warners W2766)

... many heavy meddle dingbiz mothas seeking life, swearing off life — "eating dead turkeys—through my ½ numerologist pall—I've gotta change my way of givin'—Before I sound like Iron Butterfly's Ball" (Kostek, from The Story Of Mankind). And they have to name their albums Burn. Masters Of Putsus. Sunoco, Bloody Sunoco. Kill. Eat. The Truth Never Lies. We Know Who You Are, And Believe Me, Turd, You Suck. Form as content. Great.

Yet if The Who's next album was called We Really Play Some Mean Stuff Here And Manage To Rip Your Head Off. Yes You, Your Head. Really., I couldn't be help but be quizzified. They don't hafta. (eh, what's the point of writing this revue? The kidz reading the reel Creen Magazine rave-up on the Purples are gonna haf to wait 'till I get good and ready here, and even when I do deign to snort out some 'judgement' on the Durps, I'll probably have some more snide comments that they don't—won't want to understand and—or take the head). Glub. Lucky UMies. A nice paper like the Advocate would never review this pseudo-mekanik destrictiew, anywho. The reviews in that paper are very serious, quite concerned with getting the Solid Appreciation—Solid Disaffection message across, and want to maintain a non-hype, calm MANNER THAT WON'T BETRAY THE FACT THAT 90 PER CENT OF THEM WERE WRITTEN WHILE under drug-seduced harmonic dissonance. (That'll get 'em.) (Start again. — Ed.).

Deep Purple's new $6.98 Maximum Effort pulls no stops as it throws the punch wide open. But even with the goatflab fastback cover or the Master of 'Let's Say It Again The Same Way' lyrics, they've freed their asses and their minds have coincidently followed. Real Cute.

Far be it from me to dishevel the peanut and call down the Purps for things like taste, mindless, endless cheap rifferie and pompous, bogus musicianship. None dare call it new.

However. There are two insignificant important Burp passigings that have happened again for their (and my) first time. (1.) This product is the first time the Purples have ever stoked into the studios knowing that four billion people would buy whatever they did. Of course, if they released a Crepiation Contest between John Lord and Richie Blackmore, it would go Top Thirty, but you can only betray your audience once, and the Deeps would bubble under the Top 200 forever. So. How did this ferociously hungry band live with success?

(2.) This is the first record without lead singer Ian Gillian, who left to put some money in his Swiss parking metre. The remaining boys could find no 'famous' name to replace him, so out of the spew of submitted demo tapes, they found only one they really liked — cinderella-ric gretch — David Coverdale. How good is he? Will Burn earn? These and the answers to all your other chart-burning questions will be answered after I listen to Burn.

THE WAY WE WERE — BARBRA STREISAND (Columbia PC 32801)
Total Playing Time: 35:05

Barbra Streisand has periodically displaye flashes of brilliance with her singing, but neve has she sounded as emotionally intense as i several of her performances on The Way W Were. The title song is very likely the bes single of her long, illustrious career, with he dynamic vocal range coming straight from th soul. Streisand interprets Stevie Wonder's "Al in Love is Fair" beautifully, doing it the immense justice it deserves.

Other highlights are her moving renditions o "The Best Thing You've Ever Done" an "Pieces of Dreams", a song reminiscent of he easy listening classic, "People".

Barbra Streisand is a creative interpreter, a opposed to a writer or composer, but her interpretations and readings are innovative an dramatic enough to satisfy this sentimenta rocker. Cradle me Barbra.

KANSAS-KANSAS
Kirshner Records
Time: 43:43

Kansas is blessed with six talented players of which four of them play more than two instruments. Couple that with good songwriter in Kerry Livgren and Steve Walsh and yo have one hell of a band.

Material on this disc falls into two types. on being short rockers. "Can I Tell You" is potential single. Longer, more involved cut round out the album. It is here where Kansa shines; particularly on "Apercu" and "Deat Of Mother Nature Suite". Both songs ar showcases for their instrumental talents "Death of Mother Nature Suite" is a gem to sa the least. The music and lyrics complemen each other extremely well.

If you were lucky enough to catch them on T the other night, you'll know why I'm so high o this group. Definitely one of the best new band to emerge this year. B+

TWIN PEAKS-MOUNTAIN
(Columbia-Windfall PG 32818)

Twin Peaks is a good name for Mountain latest effort, so similar is it to other album with Felix Pappalardi and Leslie West. Thoug the personnel has changed some since the firs album, the sound is similar enough to b discouraging. It would be good to hear som innovative work by this pair; West is at least capable guitarist, and Pappalardi did goo things for Cream on occasion.

This is a raucous live double album — borin in its narrowness, though the music is wel suited to keep people awake at concert "Theme for an Imaginary Western" is a Jac Bruce-Pete Brown tune and still good. One cu later Leslie West produces the world's mos boring guitar solo. The album is heavily West' guitar, and either you like it or you don't. never have, and if the albums are going to a be like this, never will.

Politics vs. the Facts

Challenging The Very System

by Reid Fishman

This Wednesday night, Michael Dukakis will speak in the Ballroom. Now I'm sure that to most UMies, that doesn't mean a thing — I mean, who is Mike Dukakis and what's he doing here?

Well, it's understandable that most students don't know that Mike Dukakis has been at the forefront of almost every progressive issue since his election to the State Legislature in 1962. It's also understandable that students don't know much about Dukakis' long struggle to institute no-fault insurance within the state of Massachusetts — a system which has since been copied by a number of other states. In fact, not too many students still remember that Dukakis ran for Lieutenant Governor in 1970 on the slate with Kevin White.

All of that is understandable. What's not understandable is that in the state of Massachusetts, the "most liberal state in the country", the government is being administered by a man whose priorities have been so cockeyed over the past four years that education and mental health have been pulverized while building projects like the disastrous I-93 continue to manifest themselves. It's absurd to think that our state, which was the apex of "the New Politics" two years ago, is still being run by the same old pols.

What does all this have to do with Dukakis? It's simple — he's trying to change things by running for governor. In doing so, he's challenging the very system which labeled him a "maverick" ten years ago. It's no secret that most of the "important" public officials are supporting either Quinn or Sargent, but it's also no secret that in the latest Boston Globe poll, Dukakis led the field of gubernatorial candidates. What's even more impressive is that this great degree of success has come about as a result of a hard-working grassroots campaign organization that consists mainly of students from across Massachusetts. Dukakis is not running a money campaign, nor is he running a media campaign. He's running a people campaign, going about the state speaking to people in an endless effort to gain the much-needed support. That's why he's coming to speak at UMass and that's why there are flyers throughout the area reading, "MIKE DUKAKIS should be governor."

But there's more to Mike Dukakis than his past record and his grassroots campaign. There are still the issues, and that's where Dukakis is the best. Recently, as he has in the past, Dukakis has attacked the Republican administration for their mishandling of state funds and overall incompetence. In his words, "Too many of our state services are mediocre. Our public transportation system is a public disgrace. A state which should be bursting with economic activity stumbles along while other states mount aggressive and effective economic and job development programs. Our institutions for children with disabilities are often little more than warehouses for humanity. We continue to choose our judges under a system which permits their selection to become the plaything of governors and their friends."

These are some of the issues which Mike Dukakis has chosen to speak out about. He feels that state government should be more responsive to the needs and desires of its citizens and he wants to do something about it. He proposes a thorough renovation of the state's economic policy which would (1) re-order "the Commonwealth's fiscal house" and state budgeting procedures; (2) create "a comprehensive master plan for the state's physical and economic growth"; (3) "review and significantly improve the operation of the state's manpower training and unemployment compensation systems"; (4) change the corporate tax structure within the state to "provide a tax credit for business in exchange for the creation of new jobs"; and (5) "seek out and aggressively recruit new business for Massachusetts which fits the special aptitudes and resources of the Commonwealth, such as mass transit, health-related business, and the seaach for new sources of energy."

Dukakis also wants to rebuild the judicial process in Massachusetts by "creating a judicial screening panel and abolishing the Governor's Council" and "the so-called 'special judgeship' ", which is a system of part-time judges. He feels that the judicial selection process is a tremendously important process which has been left in the wrong hands for too long. He is also in favor of a comprehensive program of prison reform. "Any such program must include the following elements: (a) meaningful educational and work training programs; (b) an effective classification system; (c) a genuine effort to involve career correctional personnel in planning and carrying out the program; and (d) a long-range program to break up existing maximum and medium security institutions into smaller units. A program operated within these guidelines would provide more security for the citizens of the Commonwealth and a far better opportunity for the rehabilitation of inmates than has Walpole State Prison over the last twenty-four months."

Mike is also concerned with the worthless system of mass transit that currently exists within the state. He feels that we must "commit ourselves to the development of the best public transportation system in the nation." This system, under his proposal, would "seek to re-establish good rail passenger service which can connect our major cities and maintain the important recreation and tourist activities of the Cape and the Berkshires."

"Above all, it must have an administration which is open and responsible to its citizens and is accountable to them. A governor cannot genuinely lead this state unless he and his administration communicate with the citizens of the Commonwealth and involve them actively in their government."

These are some of the issues on which Mike Dukakis is basing his campaign for Governor of Massachusetts. If this article has aroused your curiosity, then you'd only be doing yourself a favor by going to hear his speech on Wednesday night in the Student Union Ballroom. If you do go to the speech, I'm sure you'll agree that Mike is the best candidate for the office. He's bringing the concept of the New Politics right into our own front yard, and if we turn him away, we'll be shutting out the very concepts of honesty and integrity that we went out of our way to defend in 1972. If you haven't given up all hope for a new beginning in politics, if there's still that slight ioda of faith in government of, by and for the people, then you'd have to agree that Mike Dukakis should be governor.

"Fundamentally, however, I believe the Commonwealth needs a massive injection of energy and leadership in the executive branch of state government.

Gubernatorial candidate Michael Dukakis: concepts of honesty and integrity.

A Continuing Story

Turners Falls has seen two changes in the last ten years, one economic with important social overtones, the other social with important economic overtones:

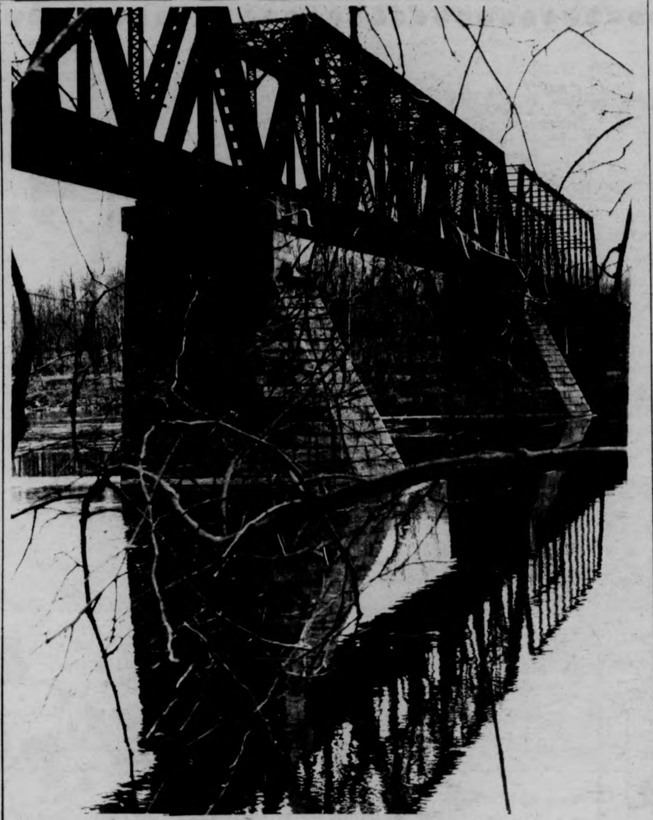
Rockdale's, a 'low overhead' department store that bought goods on the rebound from other stores, located in one of the closed riverfront factories, went bankrupt in 1971. This eliminated half of the outside area's reason to ever visit Turners Falls. So there was almost a year of severe limbo for the village until Ruby Vine and his Railroad Salvage came in and set up their largest store in the same old factory. Vine does the same deal of acquiring wayward merchandise that Rockdale sometimes did, only better, more efficiently and on a larger scale. So once again, Montague's leading emporium is filled with all the items that died on the normal marketing circuit, and have finally filtered down to Turners through Ruby. There seems to be about a three year delay as you walk through the store and see everything that was hot a while ago: happy smile faces, love posters, all the old fashions, and food products that are almost unavailable in large cities. When your local clothier cleared out all those Nehru jackets and topless bathing suits, this is where most of them went. There is a detectable time lag, even from a middling town like Greenfield, in the people themselves — a two or three year difference in dress, manners, opinions, and attitudes.

The other great development in Turners Falls was quite a shock to the town, Montague folks are still a ways from even accepting males with long hair. Northfield's (just north of Montague) Spirit In The Flesh Commune (now legally defunct) branched into Turners in the shape of several business enterprises and a resident for most of the group's leaders and was the town's greatest applied growth in years excepting Ruby. The main branch sits on Turners' Avenue A (Main Street) as a prosperous musical equipment store, and has been quite colorfully and appropriately painted and decorated. The Commune's leader, Michael (nee Metalica) Rapunzel remains a mystery to almost everyone. The folks in Montague have him down securely in the 'Lazy, Crazy, Hippie Welfare Cheater' category, with a late addition — 'Queer', but there still remains a woozy kind of awe and uncertainty as to just how he's been able to accomplish the most empire that he has in less than five years.

The village of Montague City, not to be confused with 'Montague', has no real identity. It is a loose collection of houses clumped around another turn of the Connecticut River. Montague's hospital is here, (a Catholic enterprise), a small factory, and a Western Mass. Electric Company power station. Besides that, there's little except for some finely-relaxed, middle-to-working class living.

Montague Center is in the Traditional New England Small Town Class. Surrounded by scads of fertile farms, Montague Center has a Town Hall, three churches, a village green, a few assorted grocery stores, lodges and a peaceful, stilted, atmosphere. Lots of retired farmers and UMass professors live here. Outside the center of the Center, the farms harvest a liveable blend of tobacco (the Valley's specialty), potatoes, cucumbers, asparagus and corn. The biggest development outside of the power plant, which will be in Montague Center officially and a mile from the Center, is the arrival of many groups of 'hippies', who bought up old farms, and settled down in various living combinations. The last count had seventeen different 'communes' in the Center. Given the wide expanse of hills, trees and land, there is a lot of Montague invisible to all but the town's residents who know where those small dirt roads lead to.

The village of Lake Pleasant looks like Cape Cod in its simple paved roads, scrub brush and trees, and primarily sandy-pine look. It also resembles the Cape in one unfortunate way — a heavy preponderance of rusting cars, inadequate, make-shift housing and almost hopeless demeanor. Unlike the Cape, Lake Pleasant is no vacation paradise. Also unlike the Atlantic Ocean the lake has a lingering odor.



Serenity in Montague City. The other side of their life.

This was to be the exclusive resort area for the rich Turners Falls industrial folks, but once that went down, the town decided it was better to have a cheap water supply than a playground for people who had no pay for play. So the lake was turned into a reservoir, and the already-built cottages and camps are now used as permanent homes. The area has the forlorn look that arises when items of pleasure are used for grim realities. There are only a few hundred people in Lake Pleasant, and they don't have much.

A lot less, but maybe that's more for Millers Falls.

Millers Falls is almost a miniature Turners Falls. Substitute the half-size Millers River for the Connecticut, the modest Millers Falls Tool Company for Turners' plants, and fill the rest in on an appropriately-reduced scale: fewer bars, houses, junk and humans.

The tax rate per one thousand dollars of assessed property value in the Town of Montague is $54, a terribly high figure, especially for an area that has the necessarily modest public services it does (there are 200 miles of roads to take care of). Compared with Greenfield's $25 rate, it is almost incredible. Except Greenfield has a modest parcel of industry to take a lot of the load, and lately has been importing McDonald's and Hardee's in abundance to lighten it even more. In Greenfield's Recorder, the local newspaper, a front page story two weeks ago carried ominous threats of a $9 jump to $63. Just the tonic to get all the homeowners in line for the May yes-no power plant advisory referendum.

The nuclear power plant would reduce Montague's tax rate anywhere from 50 to 90 per cent. This means savings of thousands of dollars for each household and business each year. Already property that has gone begging for years is being bought with a speed that suggests the phrase 'snapped up'.

There it is, a classic, tragic struggle. A moribund town seduced and abandoned by industry, given an unbelievable offer that would transform the life-style of every single inhabitant, whether they be on the desperate edge of poverty, living in the woods in a commune or working 40-80 hours a week to live 'comfortably'. On the other side, symbolic of almost everything they fear and hate, is UMass. Smart, smug, free, non-'working', sexing, drugging and streaking. Playing at life. Trying to take this golden bouquet of hope, probably the only chance they'll ever get, away.

Given the fifteen mile distance between Amherst and Montague and the minute links between the two, there will be no war of hippies and hardhats. Instead, the mistrust is molded into subtler forms of attitude and opinion.

Quiet, but there. A twenty-one-year old named Fred commutes to UMass everyday from his parents' home in Turners Falls. He is a junior, and wears his hair clipped above his ears. He was a star in sports in Turners Falls high (very important, very pleasant thing, that). He shows few, if any, radical views about anything, and really has done nothing to set himself apart from any of the town's norms (although his going to college is an experience fulfilled by a mere 6 per cent of townfolk over 25). Fred applied for a summer job with Western Mass. Electric Company. Everything was fine, and it looked certain that Fred would get the job, until the local office learned he went to UMass. Fred was cut from the list like he had the plague.

Nobody is really much of anything in Montague. Whatever powerbrokers there are (heads of Western Mass. Electric, Esleek, Strathmore, the town officers) do not have a great deal to lord over. The people are relatively isolated from each other in the five villages. No one is likely to take a shotgun to Samuel Lovejoy, the self-confessed tower-toppler. But they want that plant, and with an awful desperation usually reserved for keeping one's job during the Depression. The people deal in little else but this fact. This confrontation is not manifested in acts of violence or any real act of any source. This is a mind war, fought in newspapers, with many closed minds on both sides.

Stories of radiation, heated water and America's perhaps suicidal rush towards nuclear power don't get much play around the town. You can't ask these people to give up what for them is a golden fulfillment of their values for some vague piety about getting the government to change its overall national policy away from nuclear plants toward something as unreal as solar energy. They regard such as youthful idealism. "The Plant" is far too real, too much to home for them to ignore. While this may not be an arch-typical battle of the ages, it certainly has happened before and will again. America is falling into a young vs. old split that may never be reconciled. Those in power have money and numbers on their side, but the alienated have time. This battle, and its winner promises to be what will steer this country, and thus the world, into and-or through the immense dangers and turmoils to come.

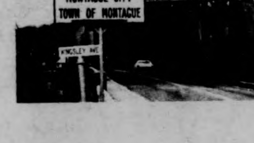
The people in Montague aren't insensitive to the fact that most of the 200 miles of roads in the town go through some gorgeous country largely unspoiled by anything worse than the farmer's plow. Montague has none of that stilted, designed 'Nature here, man here' division that renders a town like Waltham lame and dumb, and which Greenfield is busy designing for itself.

The section of land marked for the prospective plant is called Montague Plains. It is a sparse, unfertile strip that has lain empty all these years.

Unsuitable for farming, and too removed for much house building, the area has just been ... there. In this day of Social Planning and Maximum Resource Utilization, no parcel of land is likely to remain unused for long. But the people of Montague weren't going to let just anything in there; a few years ago proposals for a Route 2 bypass and a sanitary landfill for Boston's trash were both heavily opposed by the townspeople. Both were ostensibly denied for ecological reasons ('who needs a highway?' and widely circulated and mouthed stories of bad water seeping from the landfill into the town's abundant springs and overall water table), but the underlying reason seemed to be that the deal wasn't right. Even today, you may spot several D.U.M.P. stickers on cars in town. Two years ago almost every vehicle in town was equipped with a Don't Upsed Montague's Plains sticker, anchored with a natty ecology symbol. These are being replaced today with simple white and blue-lettered "I'm For Nuclear Power" stickers.

The people in Montague aren't greedy, corrupt or stupid. They realize they live in a beautiful town, the likes of which cannot be bought at any price. They appreciate a safe, clean community. And they're also tired of being locked in to the $8,000 annual average income bracket. This time their price has been met, and the deal is too good.



their price has been met,

and the deal is too good.

1964 Looms Large --- Estelle Raps Up The Hits

TEN YEARS AFTER

by Bob Estelle

The 1964 season promises some excitement. The usually dull American League race may blossom with Minnesota and the White Sox challenging the mighty Yankees while the Dodgers could easily turn the usually exciting National League race into a dull bore.

The Yankees have a new manager in Yogi Berra, their one-time catching great. He inherits a great ball club which will be looking to redeem itself after last October's humiliating World Series upset by the Dodgers. Yogi has few problems. He has Whitey Ford (player-coach, replacing John Sain), young Jim Bouton, who won 21 last year, and Ralph Terry. The rest of the staff has Al Downing as another starter with Hal Reniff, Steve Hamilton and rookie Pete Mikklesen in the bullpen.

The Yankee catcher is MVP Elston Howard. John Blanchard is the backup. Joe Pepitone, Bobby Richardson, Tony Kubek and Clete Boyer are the infielders. Mickey Mantle, receovered from last year's broken ankle, leads the outfield. Tom Tresh and Roger Maris are still powerful. Tresh looks like another Mantle.

The main challengers to the Yankees come from Chicago's Commiskey Park and the White Sox. Gary Peters, last year's rookie-of-the-year, leads a mound staff which boasts of Ray Herbert, John Buzhardt, Juan Pizarro, Joel Horlen, Dave DeBusschere and Hoyt Wilhelm. Camilo Carreon and J. C. Martin catch, Joe Cunningham, Don Buford, Ron Hansen and Pete Ward are at first, second, short and third, respectively. Jim Landis, Floyd Robinson, Mike Herschberger, Charlie Maxwell and rookie Ken Berry are the outfielders.

Another formitable challenge comes from those displaced Senators, the Minnesota Twins. The pitchers are Camilo Pascual, Dick Stigman, Jim Perry and Jim Kaat. Earl Battey is the catcher, Vic Power and Don Mincher share first, Bernie Allen is at second, Zollo Versalles is at short and Rich Rollins is at third. The outfield has Harmon Killebrew in left, Jim Hall in center and Bob Allison in right. Rookie Tony Oliva is the backup.

Baltimore has a new manager in Hank Bauer and he has a young nucleus to work with. The pitchers are Steve Barber, Milt Pappas, Mike McCormick, Dick Hall and veteran Robin Roberts. John Orsino is the catcher, Norm Siebern plays first, Jerry Adair is at second, Luis Aparicio is at short and Brooks Robinson is at third. Boog Powell, Jackie Brandt and Willie Kirkland are the outfielders.

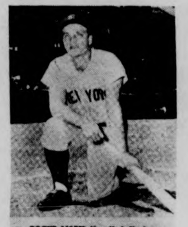
Batting champ Carl Yastrzemski leads a Boston Red Sox team that wants the first division badly. Yaz, Gary Geiger and Lu Clinton are the outfielders, Dick Stuart is at first, Chuck Shilling is at second, Eddie Bressoud is at short and Frank Malzone is at third. Dick Williams is the backup. The pitchers are led by Bill Monbouquette and Dick Radatz, but the rest of the staff (Dave Morehead, Wilbur Wood and Arnold Early) is erratic. Catching them will be Bob Tillman and Russ Nixon.

The rest of the American League has problems. Only Cleveland, with Gary Bell, Mudcat Grant, Leon Wagner and Max Alvis, has any hopes of finishing higher than sixtn. The Indians also have Al Smith, Fred Whitfield, Dick Howser and Vic Davalillo.

Detroit is rebuilding and they have their troubles. They have a new centerfielder in Don Demeter, but they had to give up Jim Bunning to get him. The other outfielder of any quality is Al Kaline. Norm Cash is another decent ballplayer, though he may have found his level after two disappointing years following 1961. The other bright spot for the Tigers is catcher Bill Freehan.

The Kansas City A's may have improved themselves by acquiring sluggers Jim Gentile and Rocky Colavito. The infield has Wayne Causey and Ed Charles. Rookie Dick Green is an excellent prospect. The problem is finding a catcher and pitchers to go with Diego Segui and Jack Aker.

DICK STUART, Boston Red Sox

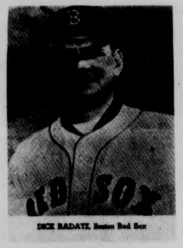


ROGER MARIS, New York Yankees

The Los Angeles Angels' upset third-place finish of 1962 fell apart last year. They do have two stars in youngsters Dean Chance and Jim Fregosi. Albie Pearson is an All-Star outfielder. The rest of the team needs building.

The Washington Senators just are bad. They have prospects in Claude Osteen, Jim King, Don Lock, Chuck Hinton and Ed Brinkman. Veterans Bill Showron, Don Blasingame and Don Zimmer may help.

The new king reigns in Los Angeles and goes by the name of the Dodgers. Catcher John Roseboro, first baseman Ron Fairly, second baseman Jim Gilliam, shortstop Maury Wills and third baseman Ken McMullen; outfielders Willie Davis, Tommie Davis and Frank Howard and a sound pitching staff should dominate National League play in 1964. The pitchers, of course, are Sandy Koufax, Don Drysdale, John Podres, Ron Perranoski and Bob Miller. This is baseball's new dynasty.



DICK RADATZ, Boston Red Sox

FRANK ROBINSON, Cincinnati Reds

The San Francisco Giants are one of the many challengers for second place. The pitching has Juan Marichal, Jack Sanford, Billy O'Dell, Bob Shaw and young Gaylord Perry. The catcher is former Brave Del Crandall. Orlando Cepeda, Chuck Hiller, Jose Pagan and Jim Davenport are the infielders. Willie Mays, Willie McCovey, Harvey Kuenn and Matty Alou are the outfielders.

With Stan Musial's retirement, the Cardinals are looking for a new outfielder. They have Curt Flood in center but little else to go with him. But St. Louis has a sound infield with Bill White at first, Julian Javier at second, Dal Maxvill and Dick Groat at short and Kenny Boyer at third. Tim McCarner is the catcher. The pitchers are Bob Gibson, a good prospect who should bloom this year, Ernie Broglio, Lew Burdette, Ray Sadecki, Curt Simmons and Bobby Shantz.

Manager Fred Hutchinson hopes his Cincinnati Reds can make a big push toward the pennant, but it will be tough for him to finish in the first division. His problem is with his pitching. If Joey Jay can make a comeback, no problem. If not, Jim Maloney, Joe Nuxhall, Jim O'Toole and Bill Henry will have to get along without him. The catcher is John Edwards, Gordy Coleman is the first baseman, last year's rookie-of-the-year Pete Rose is at second, Leo Cardenas is at short and young Tommy Harper is at third. The outfield has power with Frank Robinson, Deron Johnson and Vada Pinson.

The Philadelphia Phillies, perennial cellar-dwellers when manager Gene Mauch took over, are finally on their way. With the acquisition of Jim Bunning, the Phillies will move into the first division. Bunning will team with Art Mahaffey, Chris Short, Jack Baldschun, Ray Culp, Ryne Duren and Cal McLish to form the pitching staff. Clay Dalrymple and Gus Triandos are the catchers, Roy Sievers is at first, Tony Taylor and Cookie Rojas share second, Bobby Wine is the shortstop and Don Hoak plays third. Johnny Briggs, Johnny Callison and Wes Covington are the outfielders. Rookie outfielder Richie Allen and rookie pitcher Rick Wise could win jobs this year if the Phils fall too far behind.

The rest of the league is not as good, but still can be the spoiler on any given day. Leading the second division is Pittsburgh. The Pirates have good hitters in catcher Smoky Burgess, first baseman Donn Clendenon, second baseman Bill Mazeroski and outfielders Willie Stargell, Bill Virdon and Bob Clemente. But Don Cardwell is the only sound starter. Youngsters Al McBean and Bob Veale show promise.

The Milwaukee Braves have the same problem, only their pitching is worse. They have only one bona-fide major leaguer on the mound and that is Warren Spahn. He's a great one, but he is 43. Catcher Joe Torre, first baseman Eddie Mathews, shortstop Roy McMillan and outfielder Hank Aaron are the other stars on the Braves. Newcomer Felipe Alou and rookie Rico Carty will help.

The Chicago Cubs have the newest innovation in baseball with the rotating coach system. It may help, but the coaches found a hole left with the tragic death of second baseman Ken Hubbs. Veteran Ken Aspromonte will inherit the job, but he is no Hubbs. First baseman Ernie Banks, third baseman Ron Santo and outfielders Lou Brock and Billy Williams are the hitters. The pitchers are Dick Ellswroth, Glen Hobbie, Bob Buhl and Cal Koonce.

The Houston Colt .45's are building a team, but manager Harry Craft will have to depend on such veterans as first baseman Pete Runnels and second baseman Nellie Fox. The youngsters include catcher John Bateman, third baseman Bob Aspromonte and outfielders Rusty Staub and Jimmy Wynn. But the pitching isn't bad. Don Nottebart pitched a no-hitter last year and Hal Woodeshick made the All-Star team. Other pitchers are Ken Johnson, Dick Farrell and young Dave Giusti.

The New York Mets move to their new home, Shea Stadium, this spring. But manager Casey Stengel has the same problem: too little talent. He has a good young second baseman in Ron Hunt, and Ed Kranepool is a future star at first base. In the meantime, the Mets will have to go with players such as Frank Thomas, Al Moran, Rod Kanehl, Jim Hickman, George Altman and Joe Christopher. The pitchers are the same lot that got shelled in 1963, with the exception of Roger Craig, mercifully traded to St. Louis. Carl Willey, Jack Hook, Tracy Stallard and Galen Cisco are the pitchers. It is another long summer.

Thus is the summary. Now let us see what happens.

It's Nice To See (another corn-ventional head)

by Arthur Levine

AMERICAN GRAFFITI +++
This film is more than just another nostalgic look into the 50's. It grapples with the very real difficulties of growing up and finding a niche for oneself in the adult world. The film recounts the exploits of four friends on the night before they are to go their separate ways; some to college, others to continue to haunt the local street corners. There's a lot of fun and good music. but also some interesting studies of American youth. Mountain Farm Mall.

PASSION OF ANNA ++++
"Another powerful work by director Ingmar Bergman. Four characters on an island examined amid ominous, mysterious acts such as mutiliation of cattle. From simple scenes and lean dialogue, Bergman builds profound thoughts about hiding from life's reality, the terror in facing it, and spiritual as well as physical violence. Acting at its best. Liv Ullman, Max Von Sydow and Bibi Anderson. Sun at 8 Franklin Paterson Hall, Hampshire College.

MCCABE AND MRS. MILLER (1971) +++
"Robert Altman director of M-A-S-H, has turned to the western film with this story of an individualist who starts a brothel in a rugged new mining town and is ultimately destroyed by the big mining interests which move in when he and the town are prospering. The film portrays the gritty, earthy environment and people in a poetically conceived, exquisitely photographed, excellently performed presentation. Warren Beatty and Julie Christie. Fri. Mahar, 7, 9 and 11.

THE SPIDERS STRATAGEM +++
"A young man summoned back to an Italian town many years after WWI tries to learn the truth about the assassination of his father, who was revered as a resistance hero. The style has more appeal than the strange, unconvincing story at the base of the mystery. Good acting and baroque opera-like aura. Director-Bernardo Bertolucci." Sat. 7:30 and 9:30 at Sage Hall, Smith College.

ANCHORS AWEIGH (1945) ++
Musical with Gene Kelly and Frank Sinatra as sailors on leave. Remarkable only as a forerunner of On The Town and for Kelly's delightful dance with a cartoon mouse. Fri. 8 and 10. CC101

BLAZING SADDLES +++
"Mel Brooks" convulsingly hilarious burlesque of the Old West film is a fabulously crazy movie filled with some of the funniest characters in screen memory. The lewd, vulgar, and wacky plot revolves around a black sheriff in an all-white town. Marvelously comic performances by Cleavon Little and Gene Wilder. Mt. Farms Mall.

CINDERELLA LIBERTY +++
"Tender, mature, and lovely fable about a sailor on leave and a whore with shom he falls in love. Plot contrivances, but the lovers are believable and the performances are outstanding in this tough, memorable movie. Starring James Caan, Eli Wallach and Marsha Mason." At the Calvin and Campus Cinemas.

THE EXORCIST +++
A hair-raising horror show, based on the work by William Blatty. It deals with the possession of a young girl by demonic spirits and subsequent exorcism. Recommended for those who like to dabble in the occult and-or are strong of stomach. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

FANTASTIC PLANET ++
"In French with English titles. Animated fantasy which is classy, appealing, and charming; although also somewhat wearisome in parts because of the feature length strain. People called Draags, 39 feet tall, live on a planet with man-like Oms as pets. The Oms revolt. Lots of action and implicit moral." Campus Cinemas

GROOVE TUBE ++++
Ken Shapiro has written, directed, and starred in this hysterically funny and biting satire of television and the people who give life to it. Amherst Cinema.

KING KONG +++
"The most famous of screen monsters remains after thirty years the most impressive. Willis H. O'Brien's trick photography has not been surpassed, and the film holds together as a splendid adventure for grown-up schoolboys; even the acting of Robert Armstrong and Fay Wray is delightfully of its period. Produced and directed by Merian Cooper and Ernst Schoedsack, with suitable throbbing music by Max Steiner." Fri. Lect. Rm. One Merrill Science Center, Amherst College 7:30 and 9:30.

PAPER CHASE +++
A drama exploring the rigors of a Harvard Law school student. Some excellent performances, especially John Houseman as a professor of contractual law An interesting film, but the melodramatic finish leaves one wondering if the script writer didn't just run out of gas. Mountain Farms Mall.

THE ROARING TWENTIES (1939) ++++
A fine representative of early Warner Brothers approach to crime. Raoul Walsh directs this melodramatic tale of Eddie Bartlett (James Cagney) ex-WWI veteran, who returns to a life of crime. Panama Smith, played by Gladys George, gives him his start in the bootlegging racket, and in the process falls in love with him. But Eddie only has eyes for a pretty singer, played by Priscilla Lane, who rejects his advances. After a brief success in crime, Eddie hits the skids, but performs one last heroic act. He sacrifices his life to save the life of the singer's crusading D.A. husband who is being threatened by the mob. After a blaze of gunfire in which Eddie meets his end, Panama Smith, his longtime friend and love, utters his now famous epitaph, "He used to be a big shot." Sponsored by the Amherst Film Co-op playing Thurs. at 7:30 and 9:30 at Thompson 104 and Fri. 7:30 and 9:30 at Lect. Rm. Two Merrill Science Center, Amherst College.

SHOOT THE PIANO PLAYER ++++
"Ex-concert pianist pursued by hoodlums. Off-beat humor tinged with tragedy in one of director Francois Truffaut's most important and compelling films. Lively, entertaining performance by Charles Aznavour, Mario DuBois, Nicole Berger." Sun. 7 and 9:30 at the SUB.

SOLDIER BLUE (1970) ++
"Hopelessly banal story leads up to extremely strong, memorable finale as U.S. cavalry massacres Indian women and children. Based on an actual event. Portrays ultimate brutality so frankly that it gives significance despite its overall failure. Candice Bergen and Peter Strauss star." Wed. 7 and 9:30 CCA.

SPLENDOR IN THE GRASS (1961) +++
The story of two late adolescents, yearning yet not daring to love, is played against the harsh backdrop of cheapness, obtuseness and hypocrisy. Starring Natalie Wood and Warren Beatty. Fri. at 8, Franklin Patterson Hall, Hampshire College.

THE STING ++++
Newman and Redford excel as a pair of con men operating in Chicago about the time of the Depression. But the film is more than just these two charming heroes. The elaborately planned con of an underworld kingpin, keeps the audience guessing from the start to finish with the finale leaving one thoroughly astounded. It's an authentic look into the thirties with a number of Joplin rags thrown in . For sheer entertainment it can't be beat. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE WAY WE WERE +
Robert Redford and Barbra Streisand go Ryan O'Neal and Ali McGraw one better in this year's sequel to Love Story A radical Jewish girl meets a Waspy establishment type and proceed to have a screwed-up marriage. After many emotional ups and downs the marriage, ends in divorce with Barbra getting the short end of the stick. Redford remarries an attractive blonde and Barbara goes back to handing out pamphlets in Greenwich Village. Of course they meet accidently years afterwards to let the audience have a good cry before they wrap up the whole mess. Some have said that this film has political overtones, but don't believe it. At the Academy of Music.

Sirica signs subpoena for tapes

WASHINGTON (AP)-A federal judge ordered President Nixon yesterday to surrender tapes and documents of 64 conversations to be used in the Watergate cover-up trial involving men who were once his top lieutenants.

The subpoena was served on the White House a few hours after it was ordered by U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica. The President has until May 2 to comply.

There was no immediate word whether the White House will comply with the latest legal effort to wrest Watergate information from the President. Deputy Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren said "the matter will be considered by the special counsel."

Sirica acted on a request by special Watergate prosecutor Leon Jaworski who said he needed the material for the conspiracy trial involving John N. Mitchell, H.R. Haldeman, John D. Ehrlichman, Charles W. Colson and three others. The trial is scheduled before Sirica on Sept. 9.

The subpoena was the third issued at the request of the special prosecutor's office. The White House fought the first, last summer, until it lost before the U.S. Court of Appeals. It complied with a second last month without a fight.

The 64 conversations span nearly a year's time-beginning with a meeting Nixon had with special counsel Colson on June 20, 1972, and ending with telephone conversations the President had with Haldeman on June 4, 1973.

Amherst copes with growing pains

By BONNIE ASSELIN
MDC Staff

Amherst's growth seems to coincide with the University's growth. Over the past ten years, Amherst's population has increased 80 per cent. Traffic along Amherst's main roads is terribly congested. The present sewage system can not handle the demands of the growing community, additional input has been temporarily barred. Open space accounts for 60 to 70 per cent of Amherst, but if growth continues at present rate, it could lead to only 10 per cent open space.

These are among the growing pains with which Town Officials must deal. The Collegian wondered how long Amherst could continue to accomodate growth at its present rate and inquired to some Town Officials. Michael Sullivan, chairman of the Board of Selectman; James Cope, Town Planner; and Donald Maia, Chief of Police, explained their methods and ideas of coping with their ever expanding town.

Three years ago, when Michael Sullivan began work as a selectman, he too was concerned about the size of Amherst in the future. His action was to form a Select Committee on Goals for Amherst (SCOG) to recommend steps to control growth and shape development in such a way as to moderate the rate of growth and improve the qualitative aspects of the town.

SCOG had four basic recommendations in its final report of January, 1973:

Villages — The town should establish five villages to accomodate growth and development.

Open Space — The town should establish an integrated system of open space lands.

Town Center — The town should enhance the traditional town center.

Transportation — The town should encourage the development of a balanced transportation system.

Sullivan said that the SCOG recommendations were currently in the implementation stage. Important procedures in zoning, land acquisition, public transportation, traffic circulation and more are under study. "In another three years," Sullivan expects all plans will be "set to go."

Consequences of the 18-year-old vote were an additional concern to him. "In time, they might not be required to live in dorms; housing could be a real problem then."

Town Planner, James Cope, said it was "hard to say" if Amherst could continue to grow at its present rate. "There's so much to take into account. Implementing SCOG is a slow process, taking each detail, working out the solution and then going to the next," he said.

"The first step to implement SCOG is to modify zoning," said Cope, who is presently working on re-zoning. He had two basic alternatives: whether to have densely populated areas and preserve open space or to have little open space as evident in the "suburban sprawl" in other communities. The first was chosen.

Cope's philosophy is not to "preserve the status quo, but to change and develop it." Zones will fall under general business and residence, and outlying and rural residence. His hope is to create a zoning system where all buildings conform to the zoning requirements of the area.

"Right now, a business non-conforming to the zoning restrictions can stay, but cannot expand operations. In case of fire, they have a year to rebuild. Any later, and building would be prohibited," Cope specified.

Chief of Police Donald Maia, said his department is not expanding as far as police officers. Instead, a Community Service Officer training program will begin in June. Eight cadets will be chosen for the program. In order to qualify, a person must be a citizen, 18 years old, and be a high school graduate.

"The cadets will not be armed," said Maia. "They will assist regular officers in traffic control, ticketing and generally work on foot, where the real need for officers lies."

Maia said there is a need for expansion beyond the cadet program. "I'd like to see quicker service on emergency calls. In time, we will justify the need to the Town Fathers," said Maia, adding, "it's a day-to-day experience."

WMUA to consider post for minority affairs

By MARTIN J. WATERS
MDC Staff

The undergraduate membership of WMUA, will consider the creation of a minority affairs director next week.

That proposal was tabled, while a motion to substantially relax requirements for voting membership was passed at a meeting.

Under the organization's new rules, any UMass undergraduate who attends four consecutive monthly station meetings becomes eligible to vote. Previously, voting prerequisites included approval by a majority of the nine-member management board. That board is comprised of four undergraduates by the organization body and five others appointed by the first four.

The minimum number of voting members needed for a quorum, 13, approved the second change unanimously. The shift in requirements for membership in the organization came under pressure from the budgets committee of the Student Senate, which considered the old rules overly restrictive.

The budgets committee had withheld final approval of the station's 1974-75 funding pending action on the revised membership requirements. Approximately $40,000 in SATF monies is slated for WMUA.

A plan to place a tenth member on the management board, the minority affairs director, was put off until a special meeting of WMUA, tentatively scheduled for Wednesday, April 24.

Station Manager Jack Harper proposed postponement of the measure because of the small turnout. He said a notice of the time and place of the meeting would be printed in The Collegian and broadcast over WMUA.

Faculty senate

Changes projected in health plan

By SUSAN R. HUBBARD
MDC Staff

The Faculty Senate approved reorganization in the fields of health care, day care centers, and foreign studies at their regular meeting yesterday at the School of Business Administration.

Other matters of business included a progress report by Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery concerning the legislature's action on the UMass budget, elections of new members to the Rules Committee of the Fac-Sen, presentations of annual reports, and the approval of a summer study program in Portugal.

In a proposal which will be submitted to all governance groups on campus, the University Health Council called for the Chancellor to recommend the creation of a prepaid health plan, to be known as The Greater Amherst Health Plan to the Board of Trustees.

This plan would be available to students, faculty, and their dependents and provide quality care at approximately the same rates that current health insurance for students charges.

Under The Greater Amherst Health Plan, specialists whose services are not available with the current plans could be brought into the area.

The plan received unanimous Fac-Sen approval.

Creation of a Day Care Coordinator was also passed when the senate was informed that day care may cease on the UMass campus if proper organization and funds are not secured.

The School of Education is currently responsible for the day schools but their budget for continuance of these day care centers has been cut.

A Day Care Coordinator would be charged with seeking funds for the program.

Senator Eric Einhorn suggested that day care be placed in the same category as financial aid and be awarded to students on the basis of need.

Currently the only criteria for admission to the day schools is that the child's parent, or parents, be UMass students.

Also passed was a motion by the Foreign and International Students Council (FISC) stating that foreign students would not be impeded from entering the University. It was noted that graduate admissions of foreign students had significantly dropped in the past two years.

Chancellor Bromery addressed the senate briefly on the progress of the UMass budget in the State Legislature.

"Last night, the House passed a $66.5 million budget for UMass but the Senate has yet to act on the bill," said Bromery, "and there may be further cuts."

Four senators were chosen to sit in on the Rules Committee meetings of the Fac-Sen. They are Roland Chilton, Eric Einhorn, Rayna Greene, and Joseph Mawson.

Solzhenitsyn said to forecast Soviet, Chinese showdown

By KAREN CMAR
MDC Staff

"solzhenitsyn is a man who is deeply in love with Russia. He wants to see Russia act on its own instead of imitating other nations", said Laszlo Tikos at a forum on Solzhenitsyn and Sakhorov held Wednesday night.

Tikos is Secretary-Treasurer of The Committee for Human Rights in the Soviet Area.

"Solzhenitsyn believes that the Soviet Union is heading toward a fatal show down with Red China", said Tikos. It is Solzhenitsyn's view that in order to avoid the destruction of man's environment he must give up the present course of affairs, give up competition with Red China; give up imitating the Western World and give up the goal of unlimited economic progress, he said.

Vaclav Holesovsky, a UMass economics professor and Chairman of the Committee compared Solzhenitsyn to Andrei Sakhorov.

"Sakhorov is a Globalist not a nationalist; he is concerned with the entire future of mankind," he said.

Holesovsky traced the history of Sakhorov's life from his work in Nuclear Physics to his current campaign for civil liberties in the Soviet Union.

Sakharov is not in favor of a tactical detente for trade purposes which would amount to a "continuation of the cold war by other means," said Holesovsky.

"A detente that means permanent peace can only be obtained by becoming a family of nations. A merger of nations into one humanity," he said quoting Sakhorov.

The Committee for Human Rights in the Soviet Area has issued a petition that is to be distributed throughout the Western World. The petition includes demands that:

1. The Gulag Archipeeago be published in the USSR and be made accessible to everyone in the Soviet Union;
2. That archival and other materials which can give a full picture of the activities of the Cheka, the GPU, the NKVD, and the MVD be published;
3. That there be established an international civil tribunal to investigate the crimes which have been committed;
4. That Solzhenitsyn be protected from persecution and that he be given the opportunity to work in his native country.

Vaclav Holesovsky, UMass economics professor, thinks the Committee for Human Rights in the Soviet Area will help create awareness in the Western World.

"Lady Day" tonight

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

The New Africa House Choir will present a concertized version of the play "Lady Day: A Musical Tragedy" tonight at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. Under the direction of Dr. Horace Boyer and Paul Carter Harrison, tonight's performance will consist of songs and some excerpts of drama from the original play.

"Lady Day" was originally presented in 1972 at the Chelsea Theater in Brooklyn, New York. According to authoress, Aishah Rahman, Paul Harrison, who also directed the original play, will be using the talents of several students to portray Billie Holiday. Both Aishah Rahman and Paul Carter Harrison faculty and staff members of the UMass black community. Sis. Rahman is present director of cultural affairs at New Africa House and Bro. Paul Harrison, a playwrite-director, is a member of the Institute of Pan African Culture.

Tonight's presentation will include thirteen selections by the New Africa House Choir accompanying several lead vocalists. Mrs. Althea Waites will sing lead vocal for seven songs. Other Choir members singing lead will be Beareatha Reddy, Johnetta Bagby, Jeff Bates and Walter Howard.

In a recent interview, Sis. Aishah Rahman spoke about the reactions of critics to "Lady Day" saying, "I gave them the real life story and they were enraged. The play was very controversial and people either loved it or they hated it." Come tonight at 8 p.m. and see "Lady Day: A Musical Tradgedy" for yourself. Admission is free.

UMass police become mounted patrol

By FRITS GEURSTEN
MDC Staff

The UMass Department of Public Safety became the proud owners of three horses for their mounted patrol at 2:30 today.

Mr. and Mrs. Philip Ayers, the donors of the horses, accompanied them from their Whately home to their new home in the UMass horse barns.

David Johnston, Director of Public Safety, announced that Officers Richard Guilmette, Steve Warren, and James Turati had been chosen to be on the mounted patrol. The men will undergo training soon and should be ready for active duty with their mounts sometime this summer.

Alan Lawson, Assistant Director, said that the horses will be undergoing their own training in the next few weeks.

"The horses will be doing a lot of exercising," he said, "to work off all the fat that they put on this winter. They'll also have their winter hair clipped."

Lawson said that halters had been donated for the patrol by Leigh Morrell of the Tannery Saddle Shop and Leather Products of South Deerfield. The Department is still hoping to receive more tack and equipment from other sources.

Library wind factor to be lessened by trees

By AVIS YUNI
MDC Staff

Trees and shrubbery will be planted around the library to help cut down the wind factor and beautify the area hopefully before this June, said William Lambert, University Landscape Architect.

Thirty-seven Red Pine have been ordered to be planted on the steep slope between the library, Machmer Hall and the Student Union.

Northwest of the library, north of South College, Lambert said 13 White Pine will be planted to augment the ones already there. He also said the gap between Goodell and South College can hopefully be filled with a windscreen of 50 White Pine.

"Technically the library should be the hub of your campus," Lambert said. "We should try to get the library fixed up but we had to wait until everything around the building was done."

To help beautify the area, Lambert said 38 Dogwoods will be planted in the cement squares surrounding the library with Myrtle or Perriwinkle as groundcover. Along the South College side of the library 7 Sugar Maples will be planted.

In the northeast and southeast corners of the library, clusters of Paper Birch, 6 Scotch Pine, and a 350 bush Yew hedge will be put in.

"We attempt to get a variety with plantings" Lambert said, "so that the entire campus becomes an outside classroom. There are new pine species on the market. We want the area around the library to have enough of a variety of pines etc., so that Professors can take their Botany classes there."

Lambert explained that the campus pond area will also be receiving some changes. He said the pond has been widened near the Fine Arts Center, and the present floating island at that end is actually where the pond border used to be, but has now been extended around it.

The bridge across the pond is only temporary, said Edward Simpson, Staff Assistant in the Planning Office. The bridge and the sidewalk leading to it will be removed when the Fine Arts Center is opened. He said that a sidewalk has been provided around the pond through the Fine Arts Center.

"As long as the Fine Arts Center is being built, that end of the pond will have split ownership with the builders and UMass," Simpson said.

After the builders have left, the Center has opened, and the area has returned to normalcy, "We hope to dress up the pond, so to speak", he said.

Simpson explained, "In the last 10-15 years we've been busy building buildings. Now we're trying to pull it all together."

"Everytime we build a new project the budget gets trimmed so that the landscaping doesn't get done, such as outside the Campus Center," Simpson said. "We're trying to spend some time and some money to not make the ground so raw."

Lambert explained, "We have to start turning the campus into a park-type area. We're trying to get rid of some of the "yuck" that took 12 years to make by putting in a little curb, some grading and seeding, adding a few trees, etc."

He said that many areas are planned to be seeded and so forth, such as the area near the Graduate Research Center, the new bus shelters, etc.

Bus system stretched thin

By SAMUEL HASSAN
MDC Staff

At an open meeting of the Commuter Assembly, Student Bus Operations Manager Jeff McCormick outlined priorities for future expansion of the existing Student Senate Transit Service (SSTS) to spare buses for an overload situation.

At a Wednesday meeting, Commuter Assembly President Deena Strauss also announced that the newly established Off-Campus Housing Office will officially open in Whitmore on May 20th, and will be open all summer to help students find off-campus housing and compatible roomates.

"We run on a zero maintenance allotment," McCormick said in explaining that all of the buses are running at the same time.

Boston area MBTA buses run on an approximated one-third maintenance allotment.

McCormick plans to have at least one bus off next semester because the system is being, "stretched thin," and, "it's hard to maintain what we're doing."

Dr. Gage, Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs, was at the meeting to answer questions, and when asked how resources are allotted for the 7,500 commuters he said, "There must be specific vehicles." He used the recently established housing office as an example of administration support for concrete programs.

Gage, was questioned about Governor Sargent's proposed 6.5 per cent across the board budget cut for the University. He explained because much of the money cannot be cut such as operational costs, full-time salaries, etc., other monies will be hit much harder. This would include funds for part-time student employment, counsellors, and graduate student advisors.

The SSTS originally had six Student Senate owned buses and was given a grant in January of 1973 by the Department of Transportation's Urban Mass Transit Administration (UMTA) researching feasability of a fare free Urban Mass Transit System.

An additional grant was given in November of 1973 to provide three more buses and shelters for riders.

Now the SSTS is preparing a request for a two step increase in the number of buses to improve existing services and hopefully create new routes.

The proposal will be presented to UMTA in the next four to six weeks, and if approved should allow for expanded services in the South Deerfield and Hadley directions.

Because it takes so much time for a grant to be considered, approved and then implemented, the SSTS is exploring the possibility of buying used buses now and selling them when and if the grant comes through. This would be cheaper than renting buses.

The Administration has said it won't approve a grant for more than eight buses.

Jaworski subpoena served on Nixon

Twenty-four of the conversations sought are included by the House Judiciary Committee for its impeachment inquiry. That subpoena requires compliance by next Thursday.

The committee's chairman, Peter W. Rodino, Jr., D-N.J., said in a television interview Thursday that any White House editing of the 42 conversations his committee subpoenaed "could be considered a possible ground of impeachment."

Rodino said he will not be satisfied with excised versions and that it is necessary that Nixon comply fully with the subpoena.

"Unless this is done," he said, "This is going to be considered by the committee as a refusal on the part of the White House to comply.

He agreed the White House should be able to screen national security information, but said leaders of the House inquiry should have an opportunity to review and determine what could be screened out.

Otherwise, Rodino said, the White House would make the determination of what evidence the impeachment inquiry gets.

Judge Sirica held no hearings on Jaworski's request of Tuesday, but he had the concurrence of two of the defendants - Colson and Robert C. Mardian - that the subpoena for the 64 tapes be issued.

GNP declines 5.8%, while inflation soars to 10.8%

WASHINGTON (AP)-The nation's economy sank swiftly toward recession levels in the first quarter of the year, while inflation pushed prices upward at an ever-increasing rate, according to government figures released yesterday.

The Commerce Department said the country's Gross National Product dropped at a 5.8 per cent annual rate in the first three months of the year, the first decline in three years and the biggest drop since 1958. Inflation, on the other hand, soared at a 10.8 per cent annual rate.

The double-barreled dose of bad economic news came one day after President Nixon announced he was going to play a bigger role in economic policy making.

It also raised serious questions whether the United States would be able to avoid a recession this year, as Nixon has promised. A recession is technically defined as two consecutive quarters of GNP decline.

The GNP measures the total value of output of the nation's goods and services and is considered the best index of the health of the economy.

The Arab oil embargo and energy crisis apparently were an important factor in the first-quarter economic decline.

The Commerce Department said the sharp cutback in auto production was one of the two major reasons for the falling GNP. The other was a decline in home building, which has been hit by high interest rates.

The 5.8 per cent decline in the GNP growth rate in the first quarter compared with an increase of 1.6 per cent in the fourth quarter and 8.7 per cent growth in the first quarter of 1973 at the height of an economic boom.

The first-quarter drop was the biggest since a 9.2 per cent decline in the first quarter of 1958. The last previous decline was in the fourth quarter of 1970, when the GNP annual rate fell 4.8 per cent.

Figures computed at an annual rate mean that the rate would be the final figure at the end of a 12-month period if the trend continued unchanged.

Over-all GNP in the first quarter increased $14.3 billion, or 4.4 per cent over the fourth quarter, to an annual rate of $1,351.8 billion. All of the increase was due to inflation.

New England called "low-risk" drill area

WASHINGTON (AP)-The President's Council on Environmental Quality said yesterday that any new offshore oil development should avoid the Atlantic coasts of Florida, Georgia, and Long Island, and the Gulf of Alaska, where the environmental risks would be high.

Council chairman Russell W. Peterson admitted the report would tend to focus attention instead upon areas off New England and Chesapeake Bay where, the council said, environmental risks would be lower.

U.S. and the world

The report submitted to President Nixon Thursday backed off from its apparent approval of new offshore development in an earlier draft made public a week ago.

In that draft, the council concluded that offshore oil leasing on the Atlantic Coast and the Gulf of Alaska "can be undertaken in these waters under carefully stipulated and controlled conditions, provided that the federal government is guided by and committed to" environmental protection.

The final report drew no direct conclusion that drilling could take place safely.

Instead, it concluded only that if those waters are leased, the program "must be conducted" under careful controls and environmental protection.

Peterson said the change was simply an editorial correction to make clearer what the council originally meant.

Greece and Turkey in Cyprus dispute

ATHENS, Greece (AP)-The armed forces of Greece and Turkey have been quietly put in a state of preparedness because of the controversy between their governments over oil rights in the Aegean Sea and Cyprus, informed sources reported yesterday.

Travelers arriving from Turkey reported "unusual military activity," including tanks and other armor in operation, on both sides of the 125-mile border.

The Greek navy also was reported in a state of readiness. The government announced it was sending only one destroyer to take part in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization manuevers that began today off the western Italian coast.

A pro-government newspaper accused the Turkish government of "issuing threats of war" in demanding oil protecting rights in the Aegean and the creation in Cyprus of a federation of the Turkish and Greek Cypriot communities.

"Turkey is mobilizing the masses and is almost demanding re-establishment of the Ottoman Empire, the setting of the Turkish Flag on the Acropolis and the governing of Greece by some fat pasha," said Eleftheros Kosmos, apparently speaking on behalf of the Greek military regime.

Turkey began demanding oil rights in the Aegean after oil was discovered off the Greek island of Thassos, in the northeast Aegean.

Meeting held with Nixon, Egyptian aide

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon and Secretary of State Henry Kissinger held a surprise meeting with Egyptian Foreign Minister Ismail Fahmy yesterday as the continued Israeli-Syrian fighting heightened Middle East tensions.

The meeting in Nixon's Oval Office was announced less than an hour before it began.

High U.S. officials described the meeting as part of the process of informing Egypt of continuing U.S. efforts seeking disengagement of Israeli and Syrian forces.

The informants said the session was not related to Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's disclosure today that the Soviet Union has hesitated for the past six months in filling Egyptian arms requests and that his military forces were now seeking arms elsewhere.

The officials also said there was no link to Sadat's recent implied warning that Egypt would be forced to renew the war if Israel attacked Lebanon or Syria.

But the urgency of the session was underscored by the fact that Kissinger hurried to the White House at a time he was to be concluding talks with Latin American foreign ministers.

Fahmy came from New York, where he has been attending United Nations sessions. The Egyptian diplomat has been one of Kissinger's key contacts in the U.S. effort to arrange Middle East peace.

Syrian jets enter Golan Heights

By The Associated Press

Syrian jet fighters bombed and strafed Israeli positions on and near Mt. Hermon yesterday in a new escalation of fighting on the Golan Heights front.

It was Syria's first use of aircraft in combat since the Middle East war last October.

The Syrian command said its planes caused "heavy material damage and losses in enemy lives," then returned safely to base. The Israeli military command said the attacks resulted in the wounding of one Israeli soldier. It made no mention of deaths or material damage.

The Syrian military command in Damascus, 23 miles east-northeast of Mt. Hermon, said its forces in the Golan Heights combat zone had fired missiles at Israeli aircraft in the area and that one F4 Phantom jet fighter-bomber was shot down. Israel said all its planes made it home safely.

The Israeli command said the Syrian MIGs attacked an Israeli position at the peak of the 9,232-foot Mt. Hermon and two positions in the "southern enclave" of Syrian territory captured in the October war. The Syrians did not specify the MIGs' targets.

"Israeli planes went up against Syrians but no contact was established," the Israeli command said in Tel Aviv.

The fighting in the Golan Heights area has been increasing in intensity since April 6, when Syrian forces launched attacks in an effort to retake the peak of Mt. Hermon which the Israelis seized in the October war.

Possession of the peak affords the Israelis with a clear view of the Golan Heights front and beyond.

Until now the battles have been fought chiefly with artillery and tank fire, although some Israeli aircraft had been used in recent fighting.

Possible Hanoi power struggle due to aging defense minister

By WILLIAM L. RYAN
AP Special Correspondent

Reports from reliable sources in Saigon say North Vietnam's defense minister, Gen. Vo Nguyen Giap, may have a terminal illness, and there is speculation that his passing might trigger some sort of struggle for power in Hanoi.

The report illuminates a weakness peculiar to the Communist-ruled part of the world and one that is likely to create serious problems in the near future. Communism's trouble is that it is suffering from political arteriosclerosis.

North Vietnam's hierarchy is just one of many examples of a classical situation. It is ruled by a Communist party Politburo whose average age is 64. Its premier is 68. Its party chief is 66 and its acting president is 80. Giap himself is 64.

There is little sign of any inclination on the part of the older men in Hanoi, however, to move side and give the younger ones a shot at becoming familiar with the top rungs of the power ladder.

But the situation is similar in other parts of the Communist world.

The Soviet Union is run by a coterie of Politburo members whose average age also is 64. Some of them show signs of the aches and pains associated with advancing years.

The top layer in China is even older. Its leader, Mao Tse-tung, turned 80 last December, and its second in command, Premier Chou En-lai, is 75.

In North Korea, Mongolia and Eastern Europe, ruling Politburos have been entrenched many years. The youngsters are restless, waiting for the chance they seldom seem to get.

Even the onetime whiz kid of the Communist world has become middle aged. After 15 years in power, Fidel Castro of Cuba is a paunchy 48.

Moscow's leaders seem to feel pressure from younger men who know the oldsters resist moving aside to make room at the top.

Yevgeni Tyazhelnikov, present chief of the Komsomols, the Young Communist League, is 46, although that's far from a record.

Red China at one time had a "young" Communist chief who was in his 60s. But as one of the elderly young, Tyazhelnikov in that position makes the generation gap conspicuous.

Arab-Soviet relations said strained

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — President Anwar Sadat said yesterday Russia "has hesitated for the past six months to respond to some of our arms requests, and accordingly I have ordered the armed forces to look for arms sources from others and this has already been implemented."

He spoke before a joint meeting of the Arab Socialist Union and People's Assembly. The address was carried by Cairo radio.

Sadat described the Soviet failure to supply the requested arms as "a misunderstanding for which I find no reason. We still seek their friendship and want it but let it be known we base our friendship on our interests and principles . . ."

Sadat added that "the misunderstanding with Soviet Union may be caused because of our new friendly approaches with the United States.

"Our relations with the United States have improved because the Americans have changed their policy regarding the Middle East problem.

"U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger has exerted quite an effort to settle the Middle East problem after the U.S. bias toward Israel."

Referring to improving American-Soviet relations, Sadat said, "If the two super-powers have decided to defend each other I don't see why we should seek the enmity of any country.

"We are not basing our policies for the benefit of one country at the expense of another.

Stans testifies he never helped Vesco

NEW YORK (AP) — Former Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans told a federal court jury yesterday that "on my oath, I never did anything to help Robert Vesco, and I never asked anyone to do anything."

"Did you ever try to fix a case against Robert Vesco because of his contribution of $200,000?" Stans was asked at his trial with onetime Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell on criminal conspiracy charges.

"I certainly did not," he replied. "I never had such a thought."

"Have you yesterday and today testified to the very best of your recollection?"

"That was my intention and I have done so," responded the chief of fund rasing for President Nixon's 1972 re-election campaign.

There were two defense mistrial motions during the day over what were interpreted as vague links to individuals who have figured in the Watergate investigation in Washington. Both were denied by Federal Judge Lee P. Gagliardi.

Stans and Mitchell are accused of conspiring to obstruct a Securities and Exchange Commission fraud investigation of Vesco, and international financier, in exchange for the $200,000 cash contribution to the Nixon campaign, then lying to a grand jury in an effort to conceal the deal.

"Did you wilfully and knowingly give false information to that grand jury" Stans was asked by his defense lawyer, Walter Bonner.

"I certainly did not," Stans said. "On my oath, I testified to the facts exactly as I knew them."

"Are you guilty or not guilty," was Bonner's final question to the witness, duplicating the last question put to Mitchell when he was under direct examination earlier in the trial.

"I am not guilty of these charges, believe me," Stans replied, in an answer similar to Mitchell's.

The government has laid considerable stress on what it called efforts by Mitchell and Stans to conceal the receipt of the Vesco contribution. Stans testified that the only reason for the secrecy was his pledge that as the donor Vesco would remain anonymous.

Stans did not get Vesco's $200,000 in $100 bills until April 10, 1972. But he said he accepted it by telephone on April 6, because in a similar prior situation "my attorney said it was legal and proper."
